Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1877, by HARPER & BROTHERS,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.
Dr. Anthon, at his lamented death, left ready for the press the text of the four books of Livy contained in this volume, together with notes on the first and second books and the first twenty-five chapters of the twenty-first book. The commentary of that most accomplished and elegant scholar is given without any alteration, and will be found to present the characteristics that have rendered the previous volumes in the series of classical authors issued by him such admirable aids to both student and teacher, and such a mine for subsequent editors who have, too often without acknowledgment, availed themselves of his scholarship and labor.

As regards the Introduction and the Notes on the remainder of the twenty-first book, and the twenty-second book, I am indebted for almost everything of value to Weissenborn. In addition to his indispensable commentary I have consulted the editions of Drakenborch, Wölfflin, Frey, and others; in one case (bk. xxi., chap. xxvii., line 22) I have ventured to adopt a conjectural emendation by Madvig.

The conventional spelling, as most in harmony with that adopted in the previous editions of Latin authors issued by Dr. Anthon, has been retained in this volume.

INTRODUCTION.

LIVY AND HIS HISTORY.

Titus Livius was born in the consulship of C. Julius Cæsar and M. Calpurnius Bibulus, in the year 57 B.C. His birthplace was Padua, a town which is classed by Strabo with Gades and Alexandria as standing next to Rome in wealth, and which possessed at the end of the Republic five hundred citizens of equestrian income. Padua, like Rome, boasted Trojan descent, and her founder was said to be Antenor. She resisted the power of the Etruscans and of the invading Gaul, and repulsed an attack of the Spartan Cleonymus in the year 301 B.C., in memory of which victory a battle of boats was yearly exhibited, while the spoils of the Spartans remained in the temple of Juno within the recollection of men of Livy's time. Though wealthy, Padua was famous for the strictness of its morals, a circumstance which must have caused her illustrious son to look with greater sorrow on the moral corruption of Rome. The inhabitants were Roman citizens, of the Fabian tribe, and seem to have sided in the civil war with the party of Pompey; so Livy may have imbibed in his native place that leaning to aristocracy which he shows so often in his work. Of his life we know next to nothing: "the historian of Rome has no history." He was the father of two children, a daughter married to L. Magius, a rhetorician, who owed his popularity to his connection with Livy rather than to any merits of his own; and a son, to whom he addressed a letter, probably on rhetoric, in which he advised him to read Cicero and Demosthenes, and those writers who most nearly resembled Cicero and Demosthenes. That he enjoyed great fame in his lifetime is clear from the anecdote told by Pliny, that a citizen of Gades came to Rome expressly to see Livy, and, having seen him, immediately returned. He tells us himself that he was acquainted with Augustus, and Tacitus describes this acquaintance as friendship, adding that it remained unimpaired by the historian’s praises of Pompey. As all the anecdotes and criticisms quoted from Livy by Seneca and Quintilian are connected with rhetoric, it is not unlikely that he followed the profession of a rhetorician in Rome. We are perhaps not justified in placing Claudius, who afterwards became emperor, among the list of his pupils, but it was by his advice that that unfortunate grandson of Livia devoted himself to historical writing. Livy died at Padua in the year 17 A.D.

Livy’s works on philosophy, and his dialogues, which are described by Seneca as partly philosophical and partly historical, are entirely lost; and of his great work, originally consisting of 150 books, extending to the death of Drusus, B.C. 9, there only remain thirty-five books and a few inconsiderable fragments. These books are: the first decade, containing his account of what happened from the founding of the city down to the year 293 B.C.; the third and fourth decades (embracing the Second Punic War), from the year 218 B.C. to the year 182 B.C.; and five books, not quite perfect, of the fifth decade, ending 167 B.C. The contents of the lost books are given in the so-called Epitoma. These Epitoma, or Periochae as they are named in some MSS., seem to have been written at the end, not at the beginning, of copies of Livy, and have been assigned, without any foundation, to the historian Florus. By whomsoever composed, they are in many instances our only guides. With regard to the title which Livy gave to his work, the oldest and best MSS. give as the heading of many books Titi Livii ab urbe condita liber, and Alschefski has therefore restored Titi Livii ab urbe condita libri in place of the old Historiarum ab urbe condita libri.

The composition of a work of such extent must have occupied many years; the first decade cannot have been published before the year 27 B.C., as Octavianus is in bk. i., ch. 19, styled Augustus. As Augustus had read Livy's account of Pompey, the work as far as the 112th book must have been composed before the year 14 A.D. As we are told by Pliny that Livy, in the commencement of one of his books, wrote satis jam sibi gloria quaestum, et potuisse se desiderare, ni animus in quiete pasceretur opere, we may reasonably conclude that the occupation of his manhood was the solace of his age.

The collection of books into decades is as old as the time of Pope Gelasius, A.D. 492, but before that date quotations from Livy are from the book or the volume. Such an arrangement was not contemplated by the author, although he has prefixed a kind of preface to the 20th and 30th books, but was adopted for the sake of convenience by the old booksellers.

When, after the battle of Actium, peace prevailed throughout the empire, and public affairs were in the hands of Augustus and his ministers, the literary activity of the best Romans, no longer able by the oratory of the forum or the senate to direct the course of events, manifested itself in a study of the ancient history which recounted the deeds of their fathers. Bringing from his provincial home a love for the old republic and a belief in old morality, but living under a thinly disguised despotism, and amid a general dissoluteness of manners, Livy sought to recall his contemporaries to better things—as a citizen, by recounting how the world became the property of Rome, and Rome the property of an emperor; and, as a moralist, by setting before them examples of purity and frugality, of courage, patience, perseverance, self-denial, self-sacrifice. He had neither the will nor the power to compose a pragmatic work based on profound researches and a severe criticism, because the very size of the work he contemplated set itself against his undertaking a task which can only be satisfactorily completed when the monuments on which history is founded have been carefully classed and thoroughly discussed by those who have made a special study of them; and because he did not think it necessary to interrupt his narrative of heroic and patriotic actions by details respecting a constitution which was already a shadow, soon to fade away; perhaps, too, he was as sceptical about the authenticity and value of the other Roman official documents as Mommsen is respecting the Libri lintei so often quoted by Licinius Macer, and the treaties with Carthage given to us by Polybius. As an excuse for the errors of judgment Livy sometimes commits, it may be urged that, unlike Thucydides and Polybius, unlike Fabius and Cincius Alimentus, he had never been in office or in command, he had never sat in the senate, had never canvassed the people or been elected by them, had never been at the head of a fleet or an army; and he, therefore, may expect pardon if, in a work not professing to be a political or military history, he makes mistakes which a constitutional lawyer, a smart administrator, or a literary general would have avoided. Remembering the death-scene of Paulus animae magnae prodigum at Canne, let us overlook his inaccuracy in the topography of the Alps. Holding the welfare of the state to be dependent on the moral character of the citizens, and this moral character to be the outcome of the national religion, Livy regards the religious element as one of the most important sides of the Roman character, and therefore he gives an important place to his descriptions of events introduced by Romulus or Numa, and to the countless miracles and prodigies of later times; to quote his own words: "I am writing about antiquity, my mind, I know not how, became antique, and a certain religious feeling compels me to do worthy of being inserted in my annals whatever wise men of old have considered deserving of the attention of the sage" (bk. xlIII., ch. 13). Hence his praise of religious heroes, his sympathy for men like Flamininus. Although he admits that excrescences and errors appear in the popular religion and disapproves of religious enthusiasm and that superstition which is always seeking for a sign, he never attempts to shake the fabric of the national faith. He distinguishes between the gods and an Active, All-ruling, All-guiding Power, which he names numen, or fatum or fors. The numen works by means of the gods; fatum is the Eternal and Unchangeable; for is fortuna, a mysterious power, changeful and inconstant, to which human events are referred when the deeper reasons escape our view. Man, however, is free; virtue and vice are his doing, but success and failure are left to the higher powers, which punish the overbearing and abase the proud.

This conviction that the gods had made Rome the mistress of the world, and had raised up great men for her leaders under her republican form of government, gives rise to his bold assertions that the name of king is intolerable at Rome; that between a free state and a king there was a natural hostility; that to obey a tyrant is unworthy of a man, unendurable by a Roman. But the freedom he loves is not only incompatible with royalty, but with democracy; for the multitude, he says, is prone to evil; is either a crouching slave or an imperious master; is incapable of governing itself or appreciating true freedom, which rests on the law-abiding character of the citizens, on the responsibility of the highest magistrates, on short terms of office—on such an aristocracy, in fact, as the Senate represented in its best days. Perhaps, like many others, he believed that Pompey could turn the stream backward and restore the old constitution; hence that admiration for Pompey which led Augustus to call the historian a Pompeian—hence his praises of Scipio Africanus, Cicero, and Brutus and Cassius, while of Julius Caesar he wrote that it was doubtful whether it had not been better for the state if he had never been born.

But in spite of these involuntary prejudices in favor of his own country and of the aristocratic party, Livy is a sincere lover of truth. He states nothing without authority; when he finds his authorities at variance, he generally gives the conflicting accounts, often without any intimation which one seems to him the most credible. He does not overlook the errors of the patricians—their arrogance and pride, their covetousness and injustice; nor, although he too often regards the early plebeians as a mere mob, does he close his eyes to the oppression of which they were the victims, but praises their moderation and respect for law under circumstances which, in other states, would have caused bloody revolutions. Above all, he had that historical instinct which intuitively seizes on what is essential, and that poetical talent and sympathy which, the central idea once conceived, can reconstruct and recreate.

Cicero in several places complains of the manner in which Roman history had, up to his day, been written; he censures the roughness of one author, the meagerness of another, the unpleasing style of all, and demands for history a more oratorical treatment. This oratorical treatment Livy applied. He seeks not to paint, but to touch his auditor by his pictures; he regards facts as means for exciting our emotions or producing conviction; he knows how to rouse or to still the passions which the subject of his narrative gives birth to; how to arrange his facts into a chain of argument; how to keep alive the interest of his reader. At the same time his poetical genius gives life and freshness to all, and enables him to describe the tender feelings of love, piety, friendship with delicacy and his felt sympathy. Orations occupy, either in the direct or indirect form, a considerable space in Livy’s work, and were regarded by the ancients as constituting its most brilliant part. They furnish to the historian opportunities of clearly exhibiting what he thought were the views and sentiments of persons and parties; and although they are in many instances out of character and out of place (as, for example, the speech of Hanni in bk. xx, ch. 10, and of Minucius in bk. xxii., ch. 29), and although parts of them are verbose and artificial, still the noble and profound genius of the author nowhere speaks with greater beauty. With regard to the narrative proper, the most remarkable points are the skill with which it is adapted to the subject in hand, the lucidity and simplicity of the development of events, the life and insight of the delineations, the earnestness, animation, and dignity of the accounts of great occurrences—above all, the fulness, variety, and inexhaustible richness in form and color which his poetical talent enabled him to exhibit.

His poetical genius has left its impress on his style. We find not only many poetical expressions, and an approach to the style of his contemporary Virgil, but many archaisms, many conversational phrases, many Grecisms. Uses which in earlier prose authors are unknown or rare become frequent, as, for example, the use of verbal substantives as attributives, of adjectives and participles as substantives and adverbs; of adverbs and adverbial phrases in the place of adjectives; there is a freer use of the genitive, the dative, the gerundive, of the subjunctive and the infinitive. The poetical element of his style shows itself further in the frequent use of figures of speech, such as personification, metaphor, etc.; in the arrangement of his words to produce clearness and effect, in the rhythmical fall of his sentences. In his periods he seeks, by bringing together in due subordination all that produces, accompanies, or completes an action, to give a satisfactory picture of the whole situation; and by arranging the less important by the side of the important, the customary by the side of the extraordinary, to assign to each its fitting place. Hence the wonderful variety of his sentences, which now break off short, now embrace a rich fulness of various incidents, at one time flow on in apparent carelessness, at another come to a close with artistic calculation. Although sometimes his periods appear heavy, yet in general they unfold themselves clearly and peacefully; and a perfect mastery over the noble tongue he wrote in, and consummate skill in using it, are seen in the regular ordering of his sentences, the variety of his combinations, and the judicious use of rhetorical and grammatical figures, especially chiasmus and anaphora.

What Asinius Pollio meant by blaming Livy for Patavinity is hardly worth discussing. It may have referred to his provincial code of morals and politics; it may have implied that his history was more adapted for those who were remote from political life than for those who lived at the seat of government; it may allude to some Greek or Gallic words or phrases. Most probably, to the fine ear of the town-born critic, accustomed to the pure Roman speech, clinging to the earlier forms of language and the correct use of the sermo urbanus, and insisting on simplicity and strictness in the arrangement of sentences and thoughts, the free use of the language, the peculiar words, perhaps a certain tone or color pervading the style, may have seemed a provincialism strange to genuine Roman prose. But the term Patavinitas is so vague, and the circumstances under which the opinion was uttered so obscure, that we have no right to brand whole classes of expressions as provincialisms, and Livy's language as un-Roman.
VOCABULARY, SYNTAX, RHETORICAL FIGURES.

§ 1.—Livy uses a larger vocabulary and a freer syntax than the earlier prose writers, and borrows from the poets as well as imitates the Greeks. As might be expected, Virgil’s influence can be traced more clearly than that of any other, for the fragments of Ennius that remain are too few to indicate how far Livy is indebted to that early bard, and how far what is common to Livy and Virgil come from the same source.

VOCABULARY.

§ 2.—Ladewig (De Vergilio verborum novatore) gives the following list of words introduced by Virgil and used by Livy:

abolescere. innectere. pugnator.
consanguinitas. interfari. repercutere.
cristatus. intermiscere. rudimentere.
degener. inuis. semineces.
effrenus. juvenalis. semiustus.
effulgere. letalis. subrigere.
electari. lustralis. subterlabi.
emunire. pererrare. superimponere.
exernere. perosus. superstare.
-hebere. prædives. supervenire.
hebetare. præsciscere. tabidus.
incessere. prævalidus. temerare.
increscere. pravehi. velamen.
inmotus. pravenire.

§ 3.—Like præsciscere, we find Livy forming prædannari, præflora- re, præmoliri, etc.; like prædives, præferox, præservvidus, etc.; like superimponere, he forms superincubare (xxii., 51), superincidere (ii., 10); like inmotus, he has incompertus, incompositus, inconditus, inexpertus, in-exploratus; like intermiscere, he forms interjungere, interjacere, interequi- tare, etc.; while the Virgilian inextricabilis seems to have emboldened him to form inenarrabilis and inesuperabilis. Circunsepit (i., 49) is first used by Livy.
§ 4.—Livy makes more frequent use than his classical predecessors of the following forms:

I. Frequentative Verbs with almost or quite the same meaning as the simple verbs; e. g., imperito (i., 2). The number of these verbs in Livy is estimated by Müller at 120.

II. Verbals in -tor. Livy first uses Interceptor, assertor, concitor, reductor, munitor; ostentator (i., 10) is found in Plautus and the Auct. ad Herennium.

III. Verbals in -us, of the fourth declension. These are especially frequent, by preference in the ablative case. A very favorite word is effectu. Livian formations are, intercursu (xxi., 46), armatu (xxvi., 5), contactu, saltatu.

IV. Adjectives in -aks. Livy seems to have formed matronalis, vicinalis, cubitalis, internuralis, and to have been the first writer of prose to use juvenalis, nivalis, and lethalis.

V. Adjectives in -bundus. Livy has formed cunctabundus, delibebundus, mirabundus, peregrinabundus, temptabundus (xxi., 36).

VI. Adjectives in -osus are very numerous. Livy first uses controversiosus, nivosus [Ovid], procelsosus, silvosus, stigmosus, vinosus [Ovid and Horace].

§ 5.—He is the first to use desuetudo (i., 19) [Ovid], tutamentum (xxi., 61), cunctanter (i., 36), always with a negative except in x., 4, diserte (xxi., 19); and the first to use in prose gravatim (i., 2) [Luctius] and postmodum. This latter word occurs in Terence, and is used by Livy only in his first two books. Quadrifariam (i., 48) is found in Varro, but the only classical examples of this form are bifariam and multifariam. Contrary to Cicero's use, ferne is commoner in Livy than fere. Haud, rarely found with any verb except scio in Cicero, is of frequent occurrence with verbs of a negative meaning, and especially common in litotes, as, haud ignoras (xxi., 22), haud ignotas (xxi., 1), haud incruentam (xxi., 29). So haud parum (i., 30; xxii., 26), haud ita, etc., for the Ciceronian non parum, non ita. Igitur is frequently used both in position and meaning for itaque. Quamvis occurs only once with a verb, and then the verb is in the indicative (ii., 40). Trahere is a favorite word. Livy never uses the archaic genitive familias. Et ipse, "likewise," "also," so common in Livy, occurs only once indisputably in Cicero.

§ 6.—Poetical Uses are, the use of bos as a feminine (i., 7); examines (cf. Æneid, iv., 672), for "breathless with anxiety;" durare, "to last" (i., 9); fatilloquam (i., 7; cf. Æneid, viii., 340); glomeratam (i., 31); infit (this word is used by no other prose writer, and by Livy only three times—i., 28 and 28; iii., 71); ignes, "lightnings" (xxi., 58); immunita (xxii., 11), "not fortified" (in Cicero, via immunita means "a well-made road"); innubere (i., 34) [Ovid]; juventa (i., 57); lacerum (i., 28); miscet, for "fills" or "disturbs" (i., 29; cf. Aeneid, ii., 487); natos, for liberos (i., 28); prolem (only in bk. i., and in bk. iv. 6); pectus, for animus (i., 59: ejus pectoris ingenii); propinquantum, for appropinquantum (xxi., 46); pernox (xxi., 49); perscindere (xxi., 58); orsa (Pref.).

To these may be added the phrases ante alias unam (i., 9; cf. Aeneid, iii., 321); plenis portis (i., 14; cf. Aeneid, xii., 121); praeda potens (i., 33; cf. Aeneid, vi., 648); silentium tenet (i., 28); tenere, for tenere cum-sum; otium terere (i., 57; cf. Aeneid, iv., 271); oram legens (xxi., 51; cf. Georg., ii., 44); regnum agere (i., 82); captivam pecuniam (i., 53); hinc ... hinc (i., 13; cf. Aeneid, i., 182); robur sumere (i., 4) [Lucretius]; redisse ad se (i., 41) [Lucretius]; the use of operari in the sense of sacrificing (xxi., 62) is, perhaps, technical; tela nicare (xxi., 7); ex quo (i., 34; cf. Aeneid, ii., 648).

§ 7.—A few expressions may be either archaic, poetical, or perhaps colloquial—such as vides, for videse (i., 39); satin, for satiese (i., 58); subinde (xxi., 20); uno tenore, "without interruption" (xxii., 37; see Cic., Orator, vi., 21); operce est (i., 24; xxi., 9; this phrase, with a negative, occurs in Plautus and Ennius, and operce is probably a dative); mussitare (i., 50). The use of unus almost as an indefinite article (xxi., 39), unam urbem caput gentis, is not rare in Cicero.

§ 8.—It is impossible to say, in the case of a literature so fragmentary as that of republican Rome, whether a word first appearing in the Augustan age is a new formation or a resuscitation of some old literary word, or a conversational word or phrase struggling up into literary use. Writing on antiquity, and consulting old authors, Livy occasionally borrows a word or two from them; but these archaisms are few in number, and occur chiefly in quotations.

I. Archaisms in old formulae: adclarasseis (i., 18); antidea (xxii., 10); arbori, locative case (i., 26); clepsit (xxii., 10); dedier (i., 32); desexit (i., 24); duct, fascit, fascitur (all in xxii., 10); stris (i., 32). Perhaps puram (in i., 24), for puram herbam, may be archaic. Cf. laurea, for laurea coronā; normalis, for normalis ager, etc.

II. Archaisms in the text—(1) Obsolete words: bellāgeratam (xxi., 16) [Ennius]; edissertando (xxii., 54) [Plautus]; exsignata (i., 20) [Plautus]; occipit (i., 7) [Plautus]. (2) Obsolete parts of words of which other parts remained in use: icit (xxi., 18; Drakenborch's edition: al. fecit.) [Cælius Antipater]; ictus is common, and the other parts are supplied by fīvere, or their use avoided by infinitus sedus and the like; rebantur (xxii., 57; see Cic., De Orat., iii., 38); indicent (xxii., 39) [Terence], indicito in the same sense not being rare. (3) Words with old meanings: tempestate, for temporā (xxii., 56; see Cic., ut supra); suppliciis, for supplicationibus (xxii., 57); discriminata, for dispersa (xxi., 4).
Ausim (Præf.), is once used by Cicero. In Livy it is always with a negative except in vi., 40. The form deum for deorum, common in all writers in phrases like proh deum fiden, Livy uses more widely, as deum metus (xxi., 4); deum benignitas, ira, etc. (See Cic., Orator, 46.)

§ 9.—GRÆCISMS. The use of the adjective or participle as a substantive appears in Latin at first in philosophical terms, as honestum, beatum, utile, and the like; or in terms descriptive of physical qualities, as frigidum, calidum, album, etc., but in Livy more freely, especially in prepositional expressions—(1) of locality, ab extremo (i., 28); in sicco (xxii., 2); ex tuto (xxi., 26); ad vivum, "to the quick" (xxii., 17); de recto, "designedly" (i., 11): (2) of time—very rare; luctus in praeterito (xxvii., 2): (3) of other relations; ex insperato, lex ad ἀληθεία; ad iritum (ii., 6); ex vano (xxii., 7).

Livy further uses the substantivated participle or adjective—(a) in the neuter singular, (1) as a nominative by itself, degeneratum, "the fact that he had," etc. (i., 53); perlitatum (vii., 8): (2) in accusative with prepositions, propter crebrisius lapidatum (xxix., 10): (3) accompanied by a pronoun, as ultimum illud (i., 29); eo nefario (ix., 39): (4) in the ablative absolute with a sentence as subject: edicto . . . ut hostis habetur (x., 36) [only twice in Cicero]: (5) with a partitive genitive, reliquum noctis (ii., 64); in immenso altitudinis (xxii., 83): even when the adjective itself is in the genitive, si quidquid humanorum certi est (v., 83).—(b) in the neuter plural (1) with a partitive genitive, per aversa urbis (v., 29); extrema agminis (vi., 32) [other cases are rare]: (2) with an attributive, as confragosa omnia (xxi., 82); per invia ploaque (xxi., 85).—(c) in the comparative, in majus (iv., 1); even with a case, in majus vero (xxi., 32). The superlative is rare, pro indignissimo (i., 40).—(d) in the masculine singular, liber et servus (i., 8); plebeio et humilio (iii., 56).—(e) in masculine plural (1) with a partitive genitive, as expediti militem (xxx., 9): (2) alone, legentium (Præf.); condentium (i., 8); scribentibus (xxi., 57): (3) with a prepositional phrase, enissis ad cædem (xxxii., 36), while the rule that in the plural such forms are used of classes only is often violated.

§ 10. Other GRÆCISMS are—(a) the use of adverbs as adjectives, (1) inserted between a substantive and its attributive; as multarum circa civitatum (i., 17); duo simul bella (vii., 25): (2) with an attributive; as omnibus circa solo aquatis (xxii., 28): (3) absolutely as a substantive, satis tuta circa evant (i., 58).—(b) and of adjectives (1) for adverbs; as ferox instat—a use originally confined to adjectives of affection; occultum considere jubet (ii., 11): or (2) for an objective genitive, as dictatoria invidia (xxii., 26), etc.

§ 12.—Verbs are used pregnantly, as subsidia firmare, for subsidia firma collocare; mirare (i., 41), for cum admiratione querere; facere et pati fortia (ii., 12), for fortia facinora agendo et patiendo edere [Nägelsbach].

Verbs frequently assume a middle sense, as trahebant (i., 7); traxere voluntarios (i., 30); vertit (ii., 62). There is sometimes an ellipsis of the object, as errores implicant, sc. quuerentem (ii., 21); ducit, sc. exercitum (xxi., 58).

Verbs Intransitive are sometimes used as transitive: evado (xxi., 32); egredior, as egredi urbem (xxii., 55).

SYNTAX.

§ 13.—The following are the most remarkable points in Livy's constructions:

I. An extension of the construction ἐκ ταύτα σίνας: as magna pars raptae (i., 9); pars delati sunt (ii., 14).

II. The Genitive: case used more freely—(1) objectively, ob iva redex amissae (i., 5); regis criminibus (i., 47): (2) possessively, in such phrases as sententia esse (i., 8); dicicion esse—not before Livy: (3) after mille, as mille equitum (xxi., 62); (4) of place (the choro-graphic genitive), Chalciden Eubææ venit (xxvii., 30): (5) partitively after an adjective used substantively, see § 9.

III. The Dative is more freely used—(1) after compound verbs, reponit (i., 34); adequeitare (i., 14): (2) absolutely, as descenditibus (i., 8); eunti (xxii., 4); cf. Thucydides, ἵσσαλοντι ἐν δεξιᾳ (i., 24): (3) with intentus (first so used by Livy), intentus perficiendo templo (i., 56); with maturus, as matura messi (ii., 5); with alienus always: (4) where we might expect a genitive, as puero caput arsisse fertur (i., 39).

IV. Accusative used—(1) adverbially, cetera egregius; while the accusative of the part affected is found only once, adversum femur ictus (xxi., 7): (2) in place of the ablative of distance; as castra quinque milia passum ab urbe locant (i., 23): (3) aliquandum, for aliquanto (very rare before Livy): (4) absolute substantively, aliquantum ampliorem (i., 7).

V. Ablative used—(1) alone without a preposition or attributive; mostly in old phrases, or words regarded loosely as instruments, as silentio (xxii., 17). (2) Absolutely, without a noun, missis qui conjicerent (i., 37), and in temporal, causal, concessive, or hypothetical clauses. (3)—(a) with verbs of sitting, carpento sedenti (i., 34); regia sede sedens (i., 41); tumulis consedent (xxi., 32): (b) of things in which, mergi aqua (i., 4) [Cicero uses in mari or in aquam]: jugulo defigit (i., 25) [cf. Virgil, vi., 652, stant terra defixæ hastæ]: (c) with sudare, manare, and plumere, as in the often-recurring lapidibus pluit (i., 31): (d) of place whence, as exo delapsi (i., 16).

§ 14.—VI. The Infinitive is used after verbs, like—(a) occupo, as X. The INFINITIVE and ACCUSATIVE are used after trahit etc.: eam gentem trahit transisse (v., 33).

VIII. The INFINITIVE is used after the personal form of the passive of other words than those of saying and thinking: e.g., conpervatus fecisse.

IX. The INFINITIVE PERFECT is used after volo and possum. This is in imitation of the old legal form, ne quis quid vendisset vellet (xxxix., 17). Also as a subject: tunc decuit fiesse (xxx., 44); and with melius est, turpe, facilius, satis, etc.

X. The SUBJUNCTIVE is used with ut after jubeo sometimes: jabet ut trajiceret (xxviii., 36).

XI. The SUBJUNCTIVE is used to denote events of frequent occurrence: cum vidisset . . . convolarent (ii., 27); ubi dixisset . . . : emittebat (i., 32), the older usage being as in xxi., 42, ut exciderat.

XII. The SUBJUNCTIVE is used of facts—(1) with donec, as donec ageretur (xxi., 28), only in present and imperfect tenses: (2) with ante quam, when there is no notion of purpose, as ante quam Syracusae caperentur (xxv., 31.)

XIII. The SUBJUNCTIVE PERFECT is found in—(1) sentences of design, occasionally, as adniesuram ne hanc spem conceperitis (xliv., 22): (2) of result, ausi sint (i., 3); the past being looked at from the point of view of the present.

§ 15.—XIV. The Participle Passive is more frequently used with a substantive to express, not the thing or person acted on, but the action completed, as ab urbe condita (i., 60), etc.; propter territos homines (xxii., 36), etc.

XV. The FUTURE PARTICIPLE in -rus, used by the older writers to express relations of time, is used to denote subordinate relations, as commiserur (xxii., 12); habituram (ii., 10).

XVI. Before the Future Participle with esse, the personal pronoun is frequently omitted, aliquid moturum ratus (xxi., 12).

XVII. The SUPINE in -un with an object is rare in Cicero; in Livy and others not so: oppugnatum patrium (xxi., 41).

XVIII. The GERUNDIVE of deponents governing the ablative is common, as fungendus, fruendus, potiundus, but not utendus. The gerundive is used in apposition, as ejus immemor quod initio imiberat reconciliandi animos (ii., 47); ad remedium, dictatorem dicendum (xxii., 8). A peculiar use is contentus possidemus agris (vi., 14); an ἀναξ λεγόμενον is equites tego (xx., 54).

XIX. The GERUNDIVE in -bundus has sometimes a direct object: vitabundus castra (xxv., 13); haec contionabundus (iii., 47).
§ 16.—XX. Forsitan is in model prose used with the subjunctive. Livy uses it with (1) the indicative—forsitan necessarie erant (Pref.); ita forsitan decuit (xxi., 40): (2) infinitive; forsitan inventurum (i., 53); forsitan l Eat fumurum (ii., 45): (3) adverbially, as primo forsitan dubio (xxii., 23): (4) in the abl. absolute, as forsitan liberata fide (ix., 11).

XXI. Livy uses simul, extemplo, statim, ut, quamquam, inde, and other adverbs, with participles; Cicero, only ut and quasi; Caesar, ut, sicuti, etc.

§ 17.—XXII. Prepositions. Ab is used for “after:” ab hoc sermone (xxii., 40). Ad freely in answer to question “Where?” ad exercitum morando (xxii., 84); then passing into the meaning “with reference to,” “looking to:” efficaces ad ingemium (i., 9); ad famam (xxi., 41). Very common with numbers: ad mille, etc.; where it has no effect on the case. Circa, a very frequent word, of time as well as place. Observe, circa vicinas gentes (i., 9), “to the tribes round about.” De, “from,” common with capere; De Priscis Latinis capita (i., 38). In, with the accusative, to denote the direction of the action; gratiae in vulgus (ii., 8); or the object: in hanc mercedem (xxi., 43), “to win this reward.” Inter with a gerund (ii., 20): inter spoliandum corpus. Ob, for the moving cause: ob iram (xxi., 2); ob hoc (xxi., 50). Post: post paucos dies, for paucis diebus post. In later Latin very common. Super, with the accusative, “in addition to,” “upon:” alli super alios (i., 50); vulnus super vulnus (xxii., 54).

XXIII. Conjunctions. Ceterum is used to introduce a new thought, as xxi., 5, and as equivalent to sed: ceterum eodem modo omnia sunt (i., 24). We may notice a peculiar use of -que, equivalent to “and so then:” fretaque (i., 2); Sabinusque (i., 45); and of -que et, introducing an apposition, . . . omnibus votisque et precationibus, (Pref.), “with good omens, that is, with both vows and prayers;” tela, hastaque et gladius (i., 43), “weapons, namely, a spear and sword;” or simply uniting two closely connected notions: signaque et ordines (ii., 59). Very common is et for etiam (i., 25): ut et pugnatum est.

§ 18.—Cicero in clauses united by a Disjunctive Conjunction repeats the preposition; Livy commonly omits it before the last, quum in novo, tum feroci populo (i., 32).

§ 19.—Constructio Praeclara. In custodiak habere (xxii., 26), where Madvig reads custodia (see his Grammar, § 230, 5, obs. 2, note 3): demissi sunt sub terra (xxii., 57); per omnes in orben ibat (i., 17), etc.

Attraction. The attraction of nouns into the relative clause is found in Cicero only where is or hic is omitted, but is frequent in Livy xxii VOCABULARY, SYNTAX, RHETORICAL FIGURES.

in all cases. The Greek attraction of case occurs three times: rapttium quibus quique poterat elatis (i., 29); quibus poterat sauciis ductis secum (iv., 39); in quae laboramus (vii., 25).—(Kühnast.)

§ 20.—Livy frequently repeats a participle after a verb, as findit, fusunque persequitur (i., 10); pelli, pulsum (i., 12); or a noun instead of a pronoun: originis proximaque originibus (Præf.); augurium . . . augurio (i., 7).

§ 21.—Alliteration is common in formulas, as Romulus rex regia (i., 10); deum deo (i., 16); potes pollesque (i., 24), etc., and not rare elsewhere: e.g., satís superque (ii., 42); varia victoria et velut (ii., 6). Nor does Livy avoid HOMOIOELEUTA with the care displayed by other writers: e.g., densa ob sita virgulta (i., 14); lascivire, xavire (ii., 29); oneratus . . . honoratus, in xxii., 30, like hospitem . . .
hostem (xxi., 24), is a play upon words.

§ 22.—Livy commences with the first part of a hexameter; perfect hexameters are found in xxii., 60, Hæc ubi dicta dedit, stringit gla-dium omneque; iv., 57, Mania compulis nec defendentibus agros; xxii., 9, arma, nec Hannibali in tanto discrimine rerum. The final clausula of a hexameter is found in vii., 11, ut signum daret, ut capere arma juveret; vii., 6, totius viribus urbis; vii., 14, ut adversus montes consisteret hostis. So in vincula duci, optare licebat, etc. In v., 7, he has almost a pentameter, Tunc repente quibus census equestris erat.

RHETORICAL FIGURES.

§ 23.—Pleonasm. Very rare in Cæsar; in Cicero usually in the phrases sœpe multi, sin autem, tum denique, post deinde, etc.; in Livy much commoner: e.g., inde deinceps (i., 44); deinde deinceps (ii., 47); tum deinde (ii., 8); quaedam veluti (xxi., 43); clam furtim; forte temere; obviam obicere (xxii., 6); priaus précipere (xxi., 32); ignoti inter se ignorantesque (xxi., 48); ire pergere (xxi., 22). So, also, prima initia; finis extremus; initio ordiendœ rei (Præf.), etc.

§ 24.—Enallage. Ad majora rerum initia (i., 1); ad cursum justi ammis (i., 4); violati hospitii sedus (i., 9). To this may be referred the use of the adjective for the genitive already alluded to, as dictatoria invidia; while in contrast to it stands HYPA LLAG E: e.g., hæc fiducia virium (i., 80); tanta vis frigoris (xxi., 58). Both figures are rare in Cicero.

§ 25.—Prolepsis. Extorres expulit (ii., 6); incipientes tenuit (xxii., 17); immobiles defizit (xxi., 33); trepidos agit (ii., 47); and elsewhere frequently.

Litotes. For instances, see § 5, p. 16.
Zeugma is not uncommon: Imperium suo vehemens mansueto permitteretur ingenio (ii., 30); omnia deportantem et molientem (xxv., 22); etc.

§ 26.—Metaphor. In the list given by Kühnast of metaphors which are not Ciceronian, we find, erecti patres (ii., 21); domare vim fluminis (xxi., 30); fulserunt gladii (i., 25); res inexorabilis (ii., 8); tumultus pervadit (ii., 23); rupem ferro pandunt (xxi., 37); Alpes mania Italice (xxi., 35); praestit artus (xxi., 40); ventus percindit (xxi., 58); capere impetum (ii., 65); captus pulchritudine (i., 7). So gaudio, panore, lactu, captus, etc.

Chiasmus: Palatium Romulus, Remus Aventinum (i., 6); neglegendo patrios ritus, peregrinosque adsciscendo (i., 20); Peeni recipiendoque se et procurando pugnavere, restitit loco suo Romana acies.
Anaphora: Mettius ille est ductor hujus itineris; Mettius idem machinator bellii; Mettius, etc. (i., 28); Saepe in acie, saepe in agmine, saepe circa ipsam urbem pugnantum est (x., 45); Privatim parentibus, publice populis (xxii., 22); Quos terra marique vicistis, a quibus stipendium per viginti annos exegistis, a quibus capta bellii praemia habetis (xxi., 40).
Chiasmus and Anaphora: Veniam dedimus precantibus, emitimus ex obsidione, pacem cum victis fecimus, tutele nostræ duximus (xxi., 41); avorum memoria P. Decius tribunus militum in Sannio, nobis adolescentibus, priore Punico bello, Calpurnius Flamma (xxii., 60).

§ 28.—Madvig gives as an example of a carefully constructed period (i., 6): Numitor, inter primum tumultum, down to auctorem ostendit.
PRÆFATIO.

Facturusne operæ pretium sim, si a primordio urbis res populi Romani perscripserim, nec satis scio, nec si sciam, dicere ausim, quippe qui cum vetère tum vulgatam esse rem videam, dum novi semper scriptores aut in rebus certius aliquid adlaturos se aut scribendi arte rudem vetustatem superraturos credunt. Utcumque erit, juvabit tamen rerum gestarum memoriae principis terrarum populi pro virili parte et ipsum consulsuisse; et si in tanta scriptorum turba mea fama in obscuræ est, nobilitate ac magnitudine eorum me, qui nominis officient meo, consoler. Res est præterea et immensi operis, ut quæ supra septingentesimum annum repetatur, et quæ, ab exiguis profecta initiis, eo creverit, ut jam magnitudine laboret sua; et legentium plerisque haud dubito quin primæ origines proximaque originibus minus præbitura voluptatis sint, festinanibus ad hæc nova, quibus jam pridem prævalentis populi vires se ipsæ conficiunt. Ego contra hoc quoque laboris præmium petam, ut me a conspectu malorum, quæ nostra tot per annos vidit æetas, tantisper certe, dum præsca tota illa mente repeto, avertam, omnis ex pers curæ, quæ scribentis animum et si non flectere a vero, sollicitatum tamen efficere posset. Quæ ante conditam condendamve urbem poeticis magis decora fabulis quam incorruptis rerum gestarum monumentis traduntur, ea nec adfirmare nec refellere in animo est. Data hæc venia antiquitati, ut miscendo humana divinis primordia urbiém Augusti.
ora faciat. Et si cui populo licere oportet consecrare origines suas et ad deos referre auctores, ea belli gloria est populo Romanos, ut, cum summ conditorisque sui parentem Martem potissimum ferat, tam et hoc gentes humanae patiantur aequo animo quam imperium patiuntur. Sed hæc et his similia utcumque animadvertentur aut existimata erunt, haud in magno equidem ponam discrimine. Ad illa mihi pro se quisque acriter intendat animum, quae vita, qui mores fuerint; per quos viros, quibusque artibus, domi militiaeque et partum et auctum imperium sit: labente deinde paulatim disciplina, velut desidentes primo mores sequatur animo, deinde ut magis magisque lapsi sint, tum ire cæperint precipites, donec ad hæc tempora, quibus nec vitia nostra nec remedia pati possumus, perventum est. Hoc illud est præcipue in cognitione rerum salubre ac frugiferum, omnis te exempli documenta in illustri posita monumento intueri: inde tibi tueque rei publicae quod imitere capias; inde foedum inceptu, foedum exitu, quod vites. Ceterum aut me amor negotii suscepti fallit, aut nulla unquam res publica nec major nec sanctior nec bonis exemplis ditior fuit, nec in quam civitatem tam serae avaritia luxuriae immigragerint, nec ubi tantus ac tam diu paupertati ac parsimoniae honos fuerit: adeo quanto rerum minus, tanto minus cupiditatis erat. Nuper divitiae avaritiam, et abundantes voluptates desiderium per luxum atque libidinem perseundi perdenque dique omnia, invexere. Sed querelas, ne tum quidem gratiae futurae, cum forsitan necessariae erunt, ab initio certa tantae ordiendae rei absint. Cum bonis potius ominibus votisque et precationibus deorum dearumque, si, ut poetis, nobis quoque mos esset, libentius inciperemus, ut orsis tanti operis successus prosperos darent.
L I B E R I.

I.

Jam primum omnium satis constat, Troja capta in ceteros sævitum esse Trojanos: duobus, Æneæ Antenorique, et vetusti jure hospitii, et quia pacis reddendæque Helenæ semper auctores fuerunt, omne jus belli Achivos abstinuisses. Casibus deinde variis Antenorem cum multitudine Enetum, qui seditione ex Paphlagonia pulsi, et sedes et ducem, rege Pylæmene ad Trojam amisso, quærebant, venisse in intimum Adriatici maris sinum; 10 Euganeisque, qui inter mare Alpesque incolebant, pulsis, Enetos Trojanosque eas tenuisses terras: et in quem primo egressi sunt locum, Troja vocatur, pagoque Trojan inde nomen est; gens universa Veneti appellati. Æneam ab simili clade domo profugum, sed ad 15 majora rerum initia ducentibus fatis, primo in Macedoniam venisse, inde in Siciliam quærentem sedes delatum, ab Sicilia classe ad Laurentem agrum tenuisses. Troja et huic loco nomen est. Ibi egressi Trojanì (ut quibus ab immenso prope errore nihil præter arma et naves superesset) 20 cum prædam ex agris agerent, Latinus rex Aboriginesque, qui tum ea tenebant loca, ad arcendam vim advenarum armati ex urbe atque agris concurrunt. Duplex inde fama est. Allii prœlio victum Latinum pacem cum Ænea, deinde adfinitatem junxisse tradunt: allii, cum instructæ acies 25 constitissent, priusquam signa canerent, processisse Latinum inter primores, ducemque advenarum evocasse ad colloquium: per punctatum deinde, qui mortales essent, unde aut quo casu profecti domo, quidve quærentes in agrum Laurentinum exissent, postquam audierit multitudinem Trojanos esse, ducem Æneam, filium Anchisæ et Veneris; cremata patria domo profugos sedem condendaæque urbis locum quærere; et nobilitatem admiratum gentis virique et animum vel bello vel paci paratum, déxta data fidem futuræ amicitiae sanxisse. Inde fœdus ictum inter duces, inter exercitus salutationem factam. Æneam apud Latinum fuisses in hospitio. Ibi Latinum apud penates deos domesticum publico adjunxisses fœdus, filia Æneas in matrimonium data. Ea utique res Trojanis spem adfirmat tandem stabili certaque sede finiendi erroris: oppidum condunt; Æneas ab nomine uxoris Lavinium appellat. Brevi stirps quoque virilis ex novo matrimonio fuit, cui Ascanium parentes dixerunt.

II.

Bello deinde Aborigines Trojanique simul petiti. Turnus rex Rutulorum, cui pacta Lavinia ante adventum Æneas fuerat, prælatum sibi advenam aeger patiens, simul Æneas Latinoque bellum intulerat. Neutra acies lata ex eo certamine abiit: victi Rutuli, victores Aborigines Trojanique ducem Latinum amiserent. Inde Turnus Rutulique, diffusi rebus, ad florentes opes Etruscorum Mezentiumque, regem eorum, confugiunt, qui, Cæc opulento tum oppido imperiâns, jam inde ab initio minime lætus novæ origine urbis, et tum nimio plus, quam satis tum tamen esset accolis, rem Trojanam crescere ratus, haud gravatim sociâ arma Rutulis junxit. Æneas adversus tanti belli terrorem, ut animos Aboriginum sibi conciliaret, nec sub eodem jure solum, sed etiam nomine omnès essent, Latinos utramque gentem appellavit. Nec deinde Aborigines Trojanis studio ac fide erga regem Æneas cessere; fretusque his animis coalescentium in dies magis duorum populorum Æneas, quamquam tanta opibus Etruria erat, ut jam non terras solum, sed mare etiam per totam Italiam longitudinem, ab Alpibus ad fretum Siculum, fama nominis sui implessæ tamen, cum mænibus bellum propulsare posset, in aciem copias eduxit. 25 Secundum inde prælium Latinis; Æneæ etiam ultimum mortalium operum fuit. Situs est (quemcumque eum dici jus fasque est) super Numiciunm fluviun. Jovem indigetem appellant.

III.

Nondum maturus imperio Ascanius Æneas filius erat; tamen id imperium ei ad puberem ætatem incolune mansit: tantispet tutela mu-liebri (tanta indoles in Lavinia erat), res Latina et regnum avitum paternumque puero stetit. Haud ambigam (quis enim rem tam veterém pro certo adfirmet?) hicine fuerit Ascanius, an major quam hic, Creusa matre Ilio incolumi natus, comesque inde paternæ fugæ, quam Iulum eundem Julia gens auctorem no-minis sui nuncupat. Is Ascanius, ubicunque et quacunque matre genitus (certe natum Æneas constat), abundante Lavinii multitudine florentem jam, ut tum res crant, atque opulentam urbem matri seu noveræ reliquit, novam ipse aliam sub Albano monte condidit, quæ, ab 15 situ porrectæ in dorso urbis, Longa Alba appellata. Inter Lavinium et Albam Longam deductam coloniam triginta firme interfure anni. Tantum tamen opes creverant, ma-ximè maxis Etruscis, ut ne morte quidem Æneas, nec deinde inter muliebrem tutelam rudimentumque primum pae-20 rilis regni, movere arma aut Mezentius Etruscique aut ulti aliæ accœ ausi sint. Pax ita convenerat, ut Etruscis La-tinusque fluvius Albula, quem nunc Tiberim vocant, finis es-set. Silvius deinde regnat, Ascanii filius, casu quodam in silvis natus: is Æneam Silvium creat; is deinde Latinum 25 Silvium: ab eo coloniaé aliquot deductæ, Prisci Latini ap-pellati. Mansit Silviis postea omnibus cognomen, qui Albæ regnaverunt. Latino Alba ortus, Alba Atys, Atye Capys, Capye Capetus, Capeto Tiberinus, qui, in trajectu Albulaé amnis submersus, celebre ad posteros nomen flumini dedit. 30

Sed debebatur, ut opinor, fatis tantæ oris urbis maximique secundum deorum opès imperii principium. Vi compressa Vestalis, cum geminum partum edidisset, seu ita rata, seu quia deus auctor culpæ honestior erat, Mar-tem incertæ stirpis patrem nuncupat. Sed nec dii, nec homines, aut ipsam aut stirpem a crudelitate regia vindicant. Sacerdos vincæ in custodiam datur, pueros in profluentem aquam mitti jubet. Forte quadam divinitus 10 super ripas Tiberis effusus lenibus stagnis, nec adiri usquam ad justì cursum poterat amnìs; et posse quamvis languida mergi aqua infantes spem ferentibus dabat. Ita, velut de-functi regis imperio, in proxima adlувie, ubi nunc fìcis Rūminalis est (Romularem vocatam ferunt), pueros exponunt. 15 Vastæ tum in his locis solitudes erant. Tenet fama, cum fluitantem alveum, quo expositi erant pueri, tenuis in sicco aqua destituisset, lupam sitientem, ex montibus qui circa sunt, ad puerilem vagitum cursum flexisse; eam submissas infantibus adeo mitem præbuisse mammas, ut lingua lam-20 bentem pueros magister regii pecoris invenerit. Faustulo fuisse nomen ferunt; ab eo ad stæbula Larentiæ uxori educandos datos. Sunt qui Larentiam, vulgato corpore, lupam inter pastores vocatam putent; inde locum fabulae ac miraculo datum. Ita geniti itaque educati, cum primum ade-25 levit aetas, nec in stabulis nec ad pecora segres, venando peragrare saltus. Hinc robore corporibus animisque sumpto, jam non feras tantum subsistere, sed in latrones praeda onustos impetus facere, pastoribusque rapta dividere, et cum his, crescente in dies grege juvenum, seria ac jocos cele-30 brare.

V.

Jam tum in Palatino monte Lupercal hoc fuisse ludicrum ferunt, et a Pallanteo urbe Arcadia Pallantium, dein Palatium montem appellatum. Ibi Evandrum, qui ex eo genere Arcadum multis ante tempestatibus tenuerit 5 loca, sollemne adlatum ex Arcadia instituisset, ut nudi juvenes, Lyceum Pana venerantes, per lusum atque lasciviam currerent; quem Romani deinde vocaverunt Inuum. Huic de- ditis ludicri, cum sollemne notum esset, in-10 sidiatos ob iram prae amissae latrones, cum Romulus vi se defendisset, Remum cepisse, captum regi Amulio tradidisse, ultro accusantes. Crimini maxime dabant in Numitori agros ab iis impetum fieri; inde eos, collecta juvenum manu, hostilem in modum pra-15 das agere. Sic ad supplicium Numitori Remus deditur. Jam inde ab initio Faustulo spes fuerat regiam stirpem apud se educari: nam et expositos jussu regis infantes sciebat, et tempus, quo ipse eos sustulisset, ad id ipsum congruere; sed rem immaturam, nisi aut per occasionem aut per neces-20 sitatem, aperiri noluerat. Necessitas prior: venit: ita metu subactus Romulo rem aperit. Forte et Numitori, cum in custodia Remum haberet, audissetque geminos esse fratres, comparando et aetatem eorum, et ipsam minime servilem indolem, tetigerat animum memoria nepotum; sciscitando-25 que eodem pervenit, ut haud procul esset quin Remum agnosceret. Ita undique regi dolus nectitur. Romulus non cum globo juvenum (nec enim erat ad apertam vim par), sed aliis alio itinere jussis certo tempore ad regiam venire pastoribus, ad regem impetum facit; et a domo Numitoris 30 alia comparata manu adjuvat Remus: ita regem obtruncant.

Numitor inter primum tumultum hostes invasisse urbem atque adortos regiam dictitans, cum pubem Albanam in arcem præsidio armisque obtinendam avocasset, postquam juvenes perpetrata cæde pergere ad se gratulantes vidit, extemplo advocato concilio, scelus in se fratris, originem nepotum, ut geniti, ut educati, ut cogniti essent, cædem deinceps tyranni seque ejus auctorem ostendit. Juvenes, per medium contionem agmine ingressi, cum avum regem salutassent, secula ex omni multitudine consentiens vox ratum nomen imperiumque regi effecit.

Ita Numitori Albana re permissa Romulum Remumque cupido cepit in iis locis, ubi expositi ubique educati erant, urbis condendae. Et supererat multitudo Albanorum Latinarumque. Ad id pastores quoque accesserant, qui omnes facile spem facerent parvam Albam, parvum Lavinium praecae urbe, quæ conderetur, fore. Intervenit deinde his cognitionibus, avitum malum, regni cupido, atque inde fœdum certamen coortum a satis miti principio. Quoniam gemini essent, nec ætatis verecundia discrimen facere posset, ut dii, quorum tutelae ea loca essent, auguriis legerent, qui nomen novæ urbi daret, qui conditam imperio regeret, Palatium Romulus, Remus Aventinum, ad inaugurandum templo ca-25 piunt.
VII.

Priori Remo augurium venisse fertur, sex vultures; jamque nuntiato augurio cum duplex numerus Romulo sese ostendisset, utrumque regem sua multitudo consultaverat. Tempore illi praecipito, at hi numero avium 5 regnum trahebant. Inde cum altercatione congressi certamine iraram ad caedem vertuntur. Ibi in turba ictus Remus cecidit. Vulgatior fama est ludibrio fratris Remum novos transiluisse muros; inde ab irato Ro-10 mulo, cum verbis quoque increpitans adjecisset "sic deinde quicumque alius transiliet mania mea," interflectum. Ita solus potitus imperio Romulus; condita urbs conditoris nomine appellata.

Palatium primum, in quo ipse erat educatus, muniit; sa-15 cra diis aliis Albano ritu, Graeco Herculi, ut ab Evandro instituted erant, facit. Herculem in ea loca, Geryone interempto, boves mira specie abegisse memorant, ac prope Tiberim fluvium, qua prae se armentum agens nando trajectarat, loco herbido, ut quiete et pabulo late reficeret boves, 20 et ipsum fessum via procubuisse Ibi cum eum cibo vineaque gravatum sopor oppressisset, pastor accola ejus loci, nomine Cacus, ferox viribus, captus pulchritudine boun, cum avertere eam prædam vellet, quia, si agendo armentum in speluncam compulsisset, ipsa vestigia quærentem dominum 25 eo deductura erant, aversos boves, eximium quemque pulchritudine, caudis in speluncam traxit. l’Hercules ad primam auroram sommo excitus, cum gregem perlustrasset oculis et partem abesse numero sensisset, pergit ad proximam spe- luncam, si forte eo vestigia ferret. Quæ ubi omnia foras 30 versa vidit, nec in partem aliam ferre, confusus atque incertus animi ex loco infesto agere porro armentum occipit. Inde cum actæ boves quædam ad desiderium, ut fit, relictarum mugissent, redita inclusarum ex spelunca boun vox Herculem convertit. Quem cum ad speluncam vadentem 35 Cacus vi prohibere conatus esset, ictus clava, fidem pastorum nequiquam invocans, morte occubuit. Evander tum ea, profugus ex Peloponneso, auctoritate magis quam imperio regebat loca; venerabilis vir miraculo litterarum, rei novæ inter rudes artium homines, venerabilior divinitate credita 40 Carmentæ matris, quam fatiloquam ante Sibyllæ in Italianum adventum miratæ eæ gentes fuerant. Is tum Evander, concursu pastorum trepidantium circa advenam manifestæ reum cædis excitus, postquam facinus facinorisque causam audivit, habitum formamque viri aliquantum ampliorem au-45 gustioremque humana intuens, rogat, qui vir esset. Ubi nomen patremque ac patriam accepit, "Jove nate, Hercules, salve" inquit; "te mihi mater, veridica interpres deum, aucturum cælestium numerum cecinit, tibique aram hic dicatum iri, quam opulentissima olim in terris gens Maximam 50 vocet tuoque ritu colat." Dextra Hercules data accipere se omen impleturumque fata, ara condita ac dicata, ait. Ibi tum primum, bove eximia capta de grege, sacrum Herculi, adhibitis ad ministerium dapemque Potitii ac Pinariis, quæ tum familiae maxime inclutæ ea loca incolentibus, fac-55 tum. Forte ita evenit, ut Potitii ad tempus præsto essent, hisque exta apponerentur, Pinarii extis adesis ad ceteram venirent dapem. Inde institutum mansit, donec Pinarium genus fuit, ne extis sollemnium vescerentur. Potitii, ab Evandro edocti, antistites sacri ejus per multas ætates fue-60 runt, donec, tradito servis publicis sollemn im familiæ ministerio, genus omne Potitiorum interiit. Hæc tum sacra Romulus una ex omnibus peregrina suscepit, jam tum immoralitatis virtute partæ, ad quam eum sua fata ducebant, fautor.
VIII.

Rebus divinis rite perpetratis, vocataque ad concilium multitudine, quae coalescere in populi unius corpus nulla re praeterquam legibus poterat, juradedit; quae ita sancta generi hominum agresti fore ratus, si se ipse venerabilem insignibus imperii fecisset, cum cetero habitu se augustiorem, tum maxime lictoribus duodecim sumptis, fecit. Alii ab numero avium, quae augurio regnum portenderant, eum secutum numerum putant: me haud penitet eorum sententiae esse, quibus et apparitores hoc genus ab 10 Etruscis finitimis, unde sella curulis, unde toga praetexta sumpta est, et numerum quoque ipsum ductum placet; et ita habuisse Etruscos, quod ex duodecim populis communiter creato rege singulos singuli populi lictores dederint. Crescebat interim urbs munitionibus alia atque alia apce-15 tendo loca, cum in spem magis futurae multitudinis, quam ad id, quod tum hominum erat, munirent. Deinde ne vana urbis magnitudo esset, adjiciendae multitudinis causa, vetere consilio condentium urbes, qui, obscuram atque humilem coniendo ad se multitudinem, natam et terra sibi prolem 20 ementiebantur, locum, qui nunc septus descendentibus inter duos lucos est, asylum aperit. Eo ex finitimis populis turba omnis sine discrimine, liber an servus esset, avida novarum rerum perfugit; idque primum ad ceptam multitudinem roboris fuit. Cum jam virium haud peniteret, consilium 25 deinde viribus parat: centum creat senatores, sive quia is numerus satis erat, sive quia soli centum erant, qui creari patres possent: patres certe ab honore, patriciique progenies eorum appellati.

IX.

Jam res Romana adeo erat valida, ut cuilibet finitimarum civitatum bello par esset; sed penuria mulierum hominis aetatem duratura magnitudo erat, quippe quibus nec domi spes profis nec cum finitimis connubia essent. Tum ex consilio patrum Romulus legatos circa vicinas gentes misit, qui societatem connu-biumque novo populo peterent: Urbis quoque, ut cetera, ex infimo nasci; dein, quas sua virtus ac dii juvent, magnas opes sibi magnumque nomen facere. Satis scire, origini Romanae et deos aduiisse, et non defuturam virtutem: proinde ne gravarentur homines cum hominibus sanguinem ac genus miscere. Nusquam beneigne legatio audita est: adeo simul spernebant, simul tantam in medio crescentem molem sibi ac posteris suis metuebant: ac plerisque rogantibus dimissi, ecquod feminis quoque asylum aperuissent; id enim demum compar connubium fore. Aegræ id Romana pubes passa, et haud dubie ad vim spectare res cæpit. Cui tempus locumque aptum ut dare Romulus, ægritudinem animi dissimulans, ludos ex industria parat Neptuno eques-tri sollemnes; Consualia vocat. Indici deinde finitimis spec-taculum jubeat; quanquaque apparatu tum sciebant aut pote-rant concebant, ut rem claram exspectatamque facerent.
Multi mortales convenere, studio etiam videndæ novæ urbis, maxime proximi quique, Cæninenses Crustumini Antem-nates: jam Sabinorum omnis multitudo cum liberis ac con-jugibus venit. Invitati hospitaliter per domos, cum situm meniaque et frequentem tectis urbem vidissent, mirantur tam brevi rem Romanam crevisse. Ubi spectaculi tempus venit, deditæque eo mentes cum oculis erant, tum ex com-posito orta vis; signoque dato juventus Romana ad rapien-das virgines discurrit. Magna pars forte, in quem quæque inciderat, raptæ; quasdam forma excellentes, primoribus pátrum destinatas, ex plebe homines, quibus datum negotium erat, domos deferebant. Unam, longe ante alias specie ac pulchritudine insignem, a globo Thalassii cujusdam raptam 35 ferunt, multisque sciscitantibus, cuinam eam ferrent, identidem, ne quis violaret, Thalassio ferri clamitatum: inde nuptialem hanc vocem factam. Turbato per metum ludicro, mæsti parentes virginum profugiunt, incusantes violati hospitii foedus, deumque invocantes, cujus ad sollemne lu- 40 dosque, per fas ac fidem decepti, venissent. Nec raptis aut spes de se melior aut indignatio est minor. Sed ipse Romulus circumibat, docebatque patrum id superbia factum, qui connubium finitimis negassent: illas tamen in matrimonio, in societate fortunaram omnium civitatisque, et, quo 45 nihil carius humano generi sit, liberum fore: mollirent modo iras, et quibus fors corpora dedisset, darent animos: saepe ex injuria postmodum gratiam ortam, eoque melioribus usuras viris, quod adnirusus pro se quisque sit, ut, cum suam vicem functus officio sit, parentium etiam patriaeque expletum 50 desiderium. Accedebant blanditiis virorum, factum purga-tium cupiditate atque amore, quae maxime ad muliebre in-genium efficaces preeces sunt.

Jam admodum mitigati animi raptis erant. At raptarum parentes tum maxime sordida veste lacrimisque et querelis civitates conciti bant. Nec domi tantum indignationes con-tinebant, sed congregabantur undique ad Titum Tatiem regem Sabinorum; et legationes eo, quod maximum Tati nomen in is regionibus erat, conveniebant. Cæninenses Crustuminique et Antennates erant, ad quos ejus injuriae pars pertinebat. Lente agere his Ta-tius Sabinique visi sunt: ipsi inter se tres populi communiter bellum parant. Ne Crustumin quidem atque Antem-nates pro ardore iraque Cæninensium satis se impigre mo-vent. Ita per se ipsum nomen Cænini in agrum Romanunm impetum facit. Sed effuse vastantibus fit obvius cum exercitu Romulus, levique certamine docet vanam sine viribus iram esse. Exercitum fundit fugatque, fusum perse-quitur; regem in praelio obtruncat et spoliat; duce hostium occiso, urbem primo impetu capit. Inde exercitu victore reducto, ipse, cum factis vir magnificus tum factorum os-tentator haud minor, spolia ducis hostium cæsi suspensa fabricato ad id apte ferculo gerens, in Capitolium escendit, ibique ea cum ad quercum pastoribus sacram deposuisset, simul cum dono. designavit templum Jovis fines cognomenque addidit deo. "Jupiter Feretri" inquit, "hæc tibi victor Romulus rex regia arma fero, templumque his regionibus, 25 quas modo animo metatus sum, dedico, sedem opinis spoliis, quæ regibus ducibusque hostium cessis, me auctorem sequentes, posteri ferent." Hæc templi est origo, quod primum omnium Romæ sacratum est. Ita deinde diis visum, nec irritam conditoris templi vocem esse, qua latus eo 30 spolia posteros nuncupavit, nec multitudine compotum ejus doni vulgari laudem. Bina postea inter tot annos, tot bella, opima parta sunt spolia: adeo rara ejus fortuna decoris fuit.

XI.

Novissimum ab Sabinis bellum ortum, multoque id maximum fuit: nihil enim per iram aut cupiditatem actum est, nec ostenderunt bellum prius quam intulerunt. Consilio 20 etiam additus dolus. Spurius Tarpeius Romana praerat

Tum Sabinæ mulieres, quarum ex injuria bellum ortum erat, crinibus passis scissaque veste, victo malis muliebri pavoce, audax se inter tela voluntia inferre, ex transverso impetu facto dirimere infestas acies, dirimere iras, hinc patres hinc viros orantes, ne sanguine se nefando soceri generique respergerent, ne parricidio macularent partus suos, nepotum illi, hi liberum progeniem. "Si adfinitatis inter vos, si connubii piget, in nos vertite iras. Nos causa belli, nos vulnerum ac caedium viris ac parentibus sumus. Melius peribimus, quam sine alteris vestrum viduae aut orbæ viveamus." Movet res cum multitudinem tum duces: silentium et repentina fit quies. Inde ad fœdus faciendum duces profectunt: nec pacem modo sed civitatem unam ex duabus facient; regnum consciant, imperium omnem conferunt Roman. Ita geminata urbe, ut Sabinis tamen aliquid daretur, Quirites a Curibus appellati. Monumentum ejus pugnae, ubi primum ex profunda emersus paludo equum Curtius in vadò statuit, Curtium lacum avellerunt.
Ex bello tam tristi lāta repente pax cariores Sabinas viris ac parentibus et ante omnes Romulo ipsi fecit. Itaque, cum populum in curias triginta divideret, nomina earum curiis imposuit. Id non traditur, cum haud dubie aliquanto numerus major hoc mulierum fuerit, ëtate an dignitatibus suis vironumve an sorte lectæ sint, quæ nomina curiis darent. Eodem tempore et centuriae tres equitum conscriptæ sunt: Rannenses ab Romulo, ab T. Tatio Titienses appellati; Lucerum nominis et originis causa incerta est. Inde non modo commune sed concors etiam regnum duobus regibus fuit.

XIV.

Post aliquot annos propinqui regis Tatiī legatos Laurentium pulsant; cumque Laurentes jure gentium agerent, apud Tatium gratia suorum et preces plus poterant. Igitur illorum pœnem in se vertī: nam Lavinii, cum ad sollemne sacrificium eo venisset, concursu facto interficītur. Eam rem minus ægre, quam dignum erat, tulisse Romulum ferunt, seu ob inimicum societatem regni, seu quia haud injuria cæsum credebat. Itaque bello quidem abstinuīt: ut tamen expiarentur legatorum injuriae regisque 10 cædes, fœdus inter Romam Laviniumque urbes renovatum est. Et cum his quidem insperata pax erat: aliud multo propius atque in ipsis prope portis bellum ortum. Fidenates nimis vicinas prope se convalescere opes rati, priusquam tantum roboris esset, quantum futurum apparebat, occupānt bellum facere. Juventute armata immissa, vastatūr agri quod inter urbem ac Fidenas est. Inde ad lævam versi, quia dextra Tiberis arcebát, cum magna trepidatione agrestium populantur; tumultusque repens ex agris in urbem illatus pro nūntio fuit. Exītus Romulus (neque enim dila-20 tionem pāti tam vicinum bellum poterat) exercitum educit, castra a Fidenis mille passuum locat. Ibi modico præsidio relictō egressus omnibus copiis, partem militum locis circa, densa ob sita virgulta obscuris, subsidere in insidiis jussit; cum parte majore atque omni, equitatu profectus, id quod 25 quærebat, tumultuoso et minaci genere pugnæ, adequitando ipsis prope portis, hostem excivit. Fugæ quoque, quæ simulanda erat, eadem equestris pugna causam minus mirabillem dédít. Et cum, velut inter pugnæ fugæque consilium trepidántae equitatu, pedes quoque referret gradum, plenis 30 repente portis effusi hostes, impulsa Romana acie, studio instandi sequendique trahuntur, ad locum insidiarum. Inde subito exorti Romani transversam invadunt hostium aciem; addunt pavorem mota et castris signa eorum, qui in præsidio relicti fuerant: ita multiplici terrore percussi Fidenates, 35 prius pæne quam Romulus, quique cum eo equites erant, circumagerent frenis equos, terga vertunt multoque effusi (quippe vera fuga), qui simulantes paulo ante secuti erant, oppidum repebetant. Non tamen eripuerse se hosti: hærens in tergo Romanus, priusquam fores portarum objicerèntur 40 velut agmine uno irrupit.

Belli Fidenatis contagione irritati Veientium animi et consanguinitate (nam Fidenates quoque Etrusci fuerunt), et quod ipsa propinquitas loci, si Romana arma omnibus infesta finitimis essent, stimulabat, in fines Romanos 5 excucurrerunt populabundi magis quam justi more belli: itaque non castris positis, non expectato hostium exercitu, raptam ex agris praedam portantes Veios rediere. Romanus contra, postquam hostem in agris non invenit, 10 dimicationi ultimæ instructus intentusque, Tiberim transit. Quem postquam castra ponere et urbem accessurum Veientes audivere, obviam egressi, ut potius acie decernerent, quam inclusi de tectis mœnibusque dimicarent. Ibi, viribus nulla arte adjutis, tantum veterani robore exerciti 15 tus rex Romanus vicit, persecutusque furos ad mœnia hostes, urbe, valida muris ac situ ipso munita, abstinuit; agros rediens vastat ulciscendi magis quam prædæ studio: eaque clade haud minus quam adversa pugna subacti Veientes pacem petitum oratores Romam mittunt. Agri parte multatis 20 in centum annos induitiae datae.

Hæc ferme, Romulo regnante, domi militiæque gesta; quorum nihil absolum fidei divinæ originis divinitatisque post mortem creditæ fuit, non animus in regno avito recuperando, non condendæ urbis consilium, non bello ac pace 25 firmandæ: ab illo enim profecto viribus datis tantum valuit, ut in quadraginta deinde annos tutam pacem haberet. Multitudini tamen gratior fuit quam patribus, longe ante alios acceptissimus militum animis: trecentosque armatos ad custodiam corporis, quos Celeres appellavit, non in bello solum 30 sed etiam in pace habuit.

Legend of the death of Romulus, and his dedication.

His immortalibus editis operibus, cum ad exercitum recensendum contionem in campo ad Capræ paludem haberet, subito coarta temptas cum magno fragore tonitrusque tam denso regem operuit nimbo, ut conspectum ejus contioni abstulerit; nec deinde in terris Romulus fuit. Romana pubes, sedato tandem pavore, postquam ex tam turbido die serena et tranquilla lux reedit, ubi vacuum sedem regiam vidit, et si satis credebat patribus, qui proximi steterant, sublimem raptum procella, tamen, velut orbitatis metu icta, mæustum aliquam-10 die silentium obtinuit. Deinde a paucis initio facto, deum deo natum, regem parentemque urbis Romanæ salvere universi Romulum jubent; pacem precibus exposcunt, uti volens propitius suam semper sospitet progener. Fuisse credo tum quoque aliquos, qui discerptum regem patrum 15 manibus taciti arguerent (manavit enim hæ quoque sed perobscura fama): illam alteram admiratio viri et pavor præsens nobilitavit. Consilio etiam unius hominis addita rei dicitur fides. Namque Proculus Julius, sollicita civitate desiderio regis et infensa patribus, gravis, ut traditur, quam-20

Patrum interim animos certamen regni ac cupidio versabant. Necdum ad singulos, quia nemo magnopere eminebat in novo populo, pervenerat: factionibus, inter ordinès, certabatur. Oriundi ab Sabinis, ne, quia post Tātii mortem ab sua parte non erat regnatum, in societate aqua possessionem imperii amissent, sui corporis creari regem volebant; Romanī veteres peregrinum regem aspernabantur. In variis voluntatibus regnari tamen omnes volebant, libertatis dulce 10 dine nondum experta. Timor deinde patres incessit, ne civitatem sine imperio, exercitum sine duce, multarum circa civitatum irritatis animis, vis aliqua externa adoriretur. Et esse igitur aliquod caput placebat, et nemo alteri concedere in animum inducebat. Ita rem inter se centum patres, de 15 cem decuriiis factis, singulisque in singulas decurias creatis, qui summæ rerum præessent, consociavit. Decem imperitabant, unus cum insignibus imperii et lictoribus erat; quinuīm dierum spatio finiebatur imperium, ac per omnes in orbem ibat; annuumque intervallum regni fuit. Id ab re, 20 quod nunc quoque tenet nomen, interregnum appellatum. Fremere deinde plebs multiplicatam servitutem, centum pro uno dominos factos; nec ultra nisi regem, et ab ipsis créa-

Character of Numa Pompilius.—He is chosen as successor to Romulus.—Form of inauguration.

Inclita justitia religioque ea tempestate Numæ Pompilii erat. Curibus Sabinis habita bat consulissimus vir, ut in illa quisquam esse ætate poterat, omnis divini atque humani juris. Auctorem doctrinæ ejus, quia non exstat alius, falsa Samium Pythagoram edunt, quem, Serviō Tullio reignante Romæ, centum amplius post annos, in ul ima Italiam ora, circa Metapontum Heracleamque et Crotona, juvenum æmulumium studia cœtus habuisse constat. Ex quibus locis, etsi ejusdem ætatis fuisset, qua fama in Sabinos, aut quo linguae commercio, quemquam ad cupiditatem discendi excississet, quove præsidio unus per tot gentes, dissonas sermone moribusque, pervenisset? Suopte igitur ingenio temperatum animum virtutibus fuisset opinor magis, instructumque non tam peregrinis artibus, quam disciplina ætérica, ac tristi veterum Sabinorum, quo genere nullum quondam incorruptius fuit. Audito nomine Numæ patres Romani, quamquam inclinari opes ad Sabinos, rege inde sumpto, videbantur, tamen, neque se quisquam, nec factionis ææ alium, nec denique patrum aut civium quemquam præ-ferre illi viro ausi, ad unum omnes Numæ Pompilio regnum deferendum decernunt. Accitus, sicut Romulus augurato urbe condenda regnum adeptus est, de se quoque deos consuli jussit. Inde ab augure, cui deinde honoris ergo publicum id perpetuumque sacerdotium fuit, ductus in arcem, 25 in lapide ad meridiem versus consedit. Augur ad lævam ejus, capite velato, sedem cepit, dextra manu baculum sine nodo aduncum tenens, quem lituum appellarat. Inde ubi, prospectu in urbem agrumque capto, deos precatus, regiones ab oriente ad occasum determinavit, dextras ad meridiem 30 partes, lævas ad septemtrionem esse dixit. Signum contra, quo longissime conspectum oculi ferebant, animo finivit. Tum, lituo in lævam manum translato, dextra in caput Numæ imposita, precatus ita est: "Jupiter pater, si est fas hunc Numam Pompilium, cujus ego caput teneo, regem Ro- 35 mæ esse, uti tu signa nobis certa adclarassis inter eos fines, quos feci." Tum peregit verbis auspicia, quæ mitti vellet: quibus missis, declaratus rex Numa de templo descendit.

XIX.

Quæ regno ita potitus urbem novam, conditam vi et armis, jure eam legibusque ac moribus de integro condere parat. Quibus cum inter bella adsuescere videret non posse, quippe efferari militia animos, mitigandum ferocem populum armorum desuetudine ratus, Janum ad infimum Argiletum, indicem pacis bellique, fecit, apertus ut in armis esse civitatem, clausus pacatos circa omnes populos significaret. Bis deinde post Numæ regnum clausus fuit, 10 semel T. Manilio consule, post Punicum primum perfectum bellum; iterum, quod nostræ ætati dii dederunt ut videremus, post bellum Actiacum ab imperatore Cæsare Augusto, pace terra marique parta. Claudio eo, cum omnium circa finitimorum societate ac fœ- 15 deribus junxisset animos, positis externorum periculorum curis, ne luxuriarent otio animi, quas metus hostium disciplinaque militaris continuerat, omnium primum rem ad multitudinem imperitam, et illis saeculis rudem, efficacissimam, deorum metum injiciendum ratus est. Qui cum de 20 sendere ad animos sine aliquo commento miraculi non posset, simulat sibi cum dea Egeria congressus nocturnos esse: ejus se monitu, quae acceptissima diis essent, sacra instituere, sacerdotes suos cuique deorum praeficere. Atque omnium primum, ad cursus lunæ in duodecim menses describit annum; quem, quia tricenos dies singulis mensibus luna non explet, desuntque dies solido anno, qui solstitiali circumpaginur orbis, intercalariis mensibus interponendis ita dispensavit, ut vicesimo anno ad metum eandem solis, unde orsi essent, plenis omnium annorum spatiiis dies congruerent. Idem 30 nefastos dies fastosque fecit, quia aliquando nihil cum populo agi utile futurum erat.

Numa ap points various ministers of religion.—Institutes Vestal Virgins, in imitation of those at Alba.—The Sallii, or priests of Mars.—The Pontifex Maximus, his powers and duties.

Tum sacerdotibus creandis animum adjecit, quamquam ipse plurima sacra obibat, ea maxime quæ nunc ad Dialem flaminem pertinent. Sed quia in civitate bellicosa plures Romuli quam Numæ similes reges putabat fore, iturosque ipsos ad bella, ne sacra regiae vicis deserentur, flaminem Jovi adsiduum sacerdotem creavit, insignique eum veste et curuli regia sella adornavit. Huic duos flamines adjecit, Marti unum, alterum Quirino. Virginés 10 que Vestæ legit, Alba oriundum sacerdotium, et genti conditoris haud alienum. His, ut adsiduæ templi antistites essent, stipendium de publico statuit; virginitate aliisque cærimoniiis venerabiles ac sanctas fecit. Salios item duodecim Marti Gradivo legit, tunicæque pictæ insigne dedit, et super 15 tunicam æneum pectori tegmen; cælestiaque arma, quæ ancilia appellantur, ferre, ac per urbem ire canentes carmina cum tripudiiis sollemnique saltatu jussit. Pontificem deinde Numam Marciu, Marci filium, ex patribus legit, eique sacra omnia exscripta exsignataque attribuit; quibus hostias, 20 quibus diebus, ad quae templum, sacra fieren, atque unde in eos sumptus pecunia erogaretur. Cetera quoque omnia publica privataque sacra pontificis scitis subjicit, ut esset, quo consultum plebes veniret, ne quid divini juris neglegendo patrios ritus, peregrinosque asciscendo, turbaretur. Nec 25 celestes modo cærimonias, sed justa quoque funebria, placandosque manus, ut idem pontifex edoceret, quæque prodigia, fulminibus aliœve quo visu missa, suscipertur atque cutarentur. Ad ea elicienda ex mentibus divinis Jovi Elicio aram in Aventino dicavit, deumque consuluit auguriis, quæ 30 suscipienda essent.

XXI.

Ad hæc consultanda procurandaque multitudine omni a vi et armis conversa, et animi aliquid agendo occupati erant, et deorum adsidua insidens cura, cum interesse rebus humanis cæliste numen videretur, ea pietate omnium pectora imbuerat, ut fides ac jusjurandum proximo legam ac pœnarum metu civitatem regerent. Et cum ipsi se hominies in regis velut unici exempli mores formarent, tum finitimi etiam populi, qui antea casta, non 10 urbem poserant in medio ad sollicitandum omnium pacem crediderant, in eam verecundiam adducti sunt, ut civitatem totam in cultum versus deorum violari ducerent nefas. Lucus erat, quem medium ex opaco fons perenni rigabat aqua; quo quia se persæpe Numa sine arbitris velut ad 15 congressum deæ inferebat, Camenis eum lucum sacravit, quod earum ibi concilia cum conjuge sua Egeria essent. Et soli Fidei sollemne instituit. Ad id sacrarium flamines bigis, curru arcuato, vehi jussit, manuque ad digitos usque involuta rem divinam facere; significentem fidem tutandam, 20 sedemque ejus etiam in dextris sacratam esse. Multa alia sacrificia locaque sacris faciendis, quæ Argeos pontifices vocant, dedicavit. Omnium tamen maximum ejus operum fuit tutela, per omne regni tempus, haud minor pacis quam regni. Ita duo deinceps reges, alius alia via, ille bello hic 25 pæce, civitatem auxerunt. Romulus septem et triginta regnavit annos, Numa tres et quadraginta. Cum valida tum temperata et belli et pacis artibus erat civitas.

XXII.

Numæ morte ad interregnum res rediit. Inde Tullum Hostiliæm, nepotem Hostilii, cujus in infima arce clara pugna adversus Sabinos fuerat, regem populus jussit: patres auctores facti. Hic non solum proximo regi dissimilis sed ferocior etiam quam Romulus fuit.

pretor: fuerit ista ejus deliberatio, qui bellum suscepit. Me 35 nitum velim. Etrusca res, quanta circa nos teque maxime num pugnae dabis, has duas acies spectaculo fore, ut fessos 40 confectosque, simul victorem ac victum, adgregiantur. Ita-que si nos di amant, quoniam non contenti libertate certa, in dubiam imperii servitiique aleam imus, ineamus aliquam viam, qua, utri utris imperent, sine magna clade sine multo res Tullo, quamquam cum indole animi, tum spe victoriæ, ferocior erat. Quæruntibus utrimque ratio initur, cui et fortuna ipsa præbuit materiam.

XXIV.

Forte in duobus tum exercitibus erant trigemini fratres, nec sætate nec viribus dispares.
Horatios Curiatiosque fuisset satis constat, nec ferme res antiqua alia est nóbilior: tamen in re tam clara nominum error manet, utrius populi Horatii, utrius Curiatii fuerint. Aucto-res utroque trahunt: plures tamen invenio, qui Romanos Horatios vocent; hos ut sequar, inclinat animus. Cum trigeminis agunt reges, ut pro sua quisque patria dimicent ferro: ibi imperium fore, unde victoria fuerit. Nihil recu-16 satur. Tempus et locus convenit. Priusquam dimicarent, fœdus ictum inter Romanos et Albanos est his legibus, ut, cujusque populi cives eo certamine vicissent, is alteri populo cum bona pace imperitaret. Fœdera alia aliis legibus, ceterum eodem modo omnia nutr. Tum ita factum accepimus, 15 nec ullius vetustior fœderis memoria est. Fetialis regem Tullum ita rogavit: “Jubesne me, rex, cum patre patrato populi Albanis fœdus ferire?” jubente rege “sagmina” in-quit “te, rex, posco.” Rex ait: “puram tollito.” Fetia-lis ex arce graminis herbam puram attulit. Postea regem 20 ita rogavit: "Rex, facisne me tu regium nuntium populi Romani Quiritium? vasa comitesque meos?" Rex respondit: "Quod sine fraude mea populique Romani Quiritium fiat, facio." Fetialis erat M. Valerius. Is patrem patrum Spurium Fusium fecit, verbena caput capillosque tangens. Pater patratus ad jusjurandum patrandum id est sanciendum fit foedus; multisque id verbis, quae longo effata carmine non operæ est referre, peragit. Legibus deinde recitatis "Audi" inquit, "Jupiter; audi, pater patratus populi Albani; audi tu, populus Albanus. Ut illa palam prima postrema ex illis tabulis cerave recitata sunt, sine dolo malo, utique ea hic hodie rectissime intellecta sunt, illis legibus populus Romanus prior non deficiet. Si prior defexit publico consilio, dolo malo, tum illo die, Jupiter, populum Romanum sic ferito, ut ego hunc porcum hic hodie feriam, tantoque magis ferito, quanto magis potes pollesque." Id ubi dixit, porcum saxo silice percussit. Sua item carmina Albani suumque jusjurandum per suum dictatorem suosque sacerdotes peregerunt.

Nec diu pax Albana mansit. Invidia vulgi, quad tribus militibus fortuna publica commissa fuerit, vanum ingenium dictatoris corrupit; et, quoniam recta consilia haud bene evenerant, pravis reconciliare popularium animos cœpit.
Igitur ut prius in bello pacem, sic in pace bel-llum quaerens, quia suæ civitati animorum plus treachery de- quam virium cernebat esse, ad bellum palam atque ex edicto gerundum alios concitat popullos; suis per speciem societatis prodigionem 10 reservat. Fidenates, colonia Romana, Veientibus sociis consiliii adsumptis, pacto transitionis Albanorum ad bellum atque arma incitantur. Cum Fidenae aperte descissent, Tullus, Mettio exercituque ejus ab Alba accito, contra hostes ducit. Ubi Anienem transiit, ad confluentes collocat castra. 15 Inter eum locum et Fidenas Veientum exercitus Tiberim transierat. Hi et in acie prope flumen tenuere dextrum cornu; in sinistro Fidenates propius montes consistunt.
Tullus adversus Veientem hostem dirigit suos; Albanos contra legionem Fidenatium collocat. Albano non plus 20 animi erat quam fidei: nec manere ergo nec transire aperte ausus sensim ad montes succedit. Inde, ubi satis subisse se sese ratus est, erigit totam aciem, fluctuansque animo, ut tereret tempus, ordines explicat. Consilium erat, quae forttuarem daret, ea inclinare vires. Miraculo primo esse Romanis, qui proximi steterant, ut nudari latera sua sociorum di-gressu senserunt; inde eques, citato equo, nuntiat regi, abire Albanos. Tullus in re trepida duodecim vovit Salios, fanaque Pallori ac Pavori. Equitem clara increpans voce, ut hostes exaudirent, redire in proelium jubet: nihil trepidatione opus esse; suo jussu circumduci Albanum exercitum, ut Fidenatium nuda terga invadant. Eidem imperat, ut hastas equites erigere jubeat. Id factum magnae parti pe-ditum Romanorum conspectum abuentis Albani exercitus intersepsit. Qui viderant, id quod ab rege auditum erat 35 rati, eo acrius pugnánt: Terror ad hostes transit: et audiverant clara voce dictum, et magna pars Fidenatium, ut qui coloni additi Romanis essent, Latine sciebant. Itaque, ne subito ex collibus decursu Albanorum intercluderentur ab oppido, terga vertunt. Instat Tullus, fusoque Fidenatium 40 cornu, in Veientem alieno pavore perculsum ferocior reedit.
Nec illi tulere impetum; sed ab effusa fuga flumen objectum ab tergo arcebat. Quo postquam fuga inclinavit, alií arma fœde jactantes in aquam cæci ruebant, alii, dum cunctantur in ripis, inter fugæ pugnæque consilium opò pressi. Non alia ante Romana pugna atrocior fuit.

XXVIII.

Tullus exposes to the Roman army, in a set speech, the treachery of Mettius. —Signifies his intention of punishing Mettius, and also of transplanting all the inhabitants of Alba to Rome. —Mettius put to death on the spot.

Tum Albanus exercitus, spectator certaminis, deductus in campos. Mettius Tullo devictos hostes gratulatur; contra Tullus Mettium beneigne adloquitur. Quod bene vertat, castra Albanos Romanis castris jungere jubet; sacrificium lustrale in diem posterum parat. Ubi illuxit, paratis omnibus ut adsolet, vocari ad continentem utrumque exercitum jubet. Praecones ab extremo orsi primos excivere Albanos. Hi, novitata etiam rei moti, ut regem Ro-10 manum continentantem audirent, proximi constitere. Ex composito armata circumdatur Romana legio: centurionibus datum negotium erat, ut sine mora imperia exsequerentur. Tum ita Tullus inquit: "Romani, si unquam ante alias, ullo in bello, fuit, quod primum dies immortalibus gratias ageritis, deinde vestra (ipsorum) virtuti, hesternum id prælrium fuit. Dimicatur est enim non magis cum hostibus quam, quæ dimicatio major atque periculosior est, cum proditione ac perfidia sociorum. Nam, ne vos falsa opinio teneat, injussu meo Albani subiere ad montes; nec imperium illud meum, sed consilium et imperii simulatio fuit, ut nec, vobis ignorantibus deseri vos, averteretur a certamine animus; et hostibus, circumveniri se ab tergo ratis, terror ac fuga injiceretur. Nec ea culpa, quam arguo, omnium Albanorum est: ducem seuti sunt, ut et vos, si quo 25 ego inde agmen declinare voluissem, fecissetis. Mettius ille est ductor itineris hujus, Mettius idem hujus machinator belli, Mettius fæderis Romani Albanique ruptor. Audeat deinde talia alius, nisi in hunc insigne jam documentum mortalibus dedero." Centuriones armati Mettium circum-30 sistent. Rex cetera ut orsus erat peragit: "Quod bonum,

Et, ut omnium ordinum viribus aliquid ex novo populo 10 adiceretur, equitum decem turmas ex Albanis legit, legiones et veteres eodem supplemento explevit, et novas scripsit.

Hac fiducia virium Tullus Sabinis bellum indicit, genti ea

Utriumque injuriæ factæ ac res nequiquam erant repetitæ: 15

Devictis Šabinis, cum in magna gloria magnisque opibus regnum Tulli ac tota res Romana esset, nutiátum regi patribusque est in monte Albano lapidibus pluisse. Quod cum credi vix posset, missis ad id visendum prodigium, in conspectu, haud alter quam cum grandinem venti glomeratam in terras agunt, trebri cecidere cælo lapides. Visi etiam audire vocem ingentem ex summi cacuminis luco, ut patrio ritu sacra Albani facerent, quæ, velut diis quoque simul 10 cum patria relictis, oblivioni dederant, et aut Romana sacra susceperant, aut fortunæ, ut fit, obirati cultum reliquerant deum. Romanis quoque ab eodem prodigio novemdiale sacram publice susceptum est; seu voce coelesti ex Albano monte missa (nam id quoque traditur) seu haruspicam mo-15 nitu. Mansit certe sollemne, ut, quandoque idem prodigium nuntiaretur, feriae per novem dies agerentur. Haud ita multo post pestilentia laboratum est. Unde cum pigriæa militandi oreretur, nulla tamen ab armis quies dabatur a bellicoso rege, salubriora etiam credente militiæ quam domi juvenum 20 corpora esse, donec ipse quoque longinquum morbo est implicatus. Tunc adeo fracti simul cum corpore sunt spiritus illi ferores, ut, qui nihil ante ratus esset minus regium quam sacris dedere animum, repentem omnibus magnis parvisque superstitionibus obnoxius degeret, religionibusque etiam populum impleret. Vulgo jam homines, eum statum rerum, qui sub Numa rege fuerat, requirentes, unam opem agris corporibus relictam, si pax veniaque ab diis impetrata esset, credebant. Ipsum regem tradunt volventem commentarios Numæ, cum ibi quædam occultà sollemnia sacrificia Jovi 30 Elico facta invenisset, operatum his sacris se abdidisse; sed non rite initum aut curatum id sacrum esse, nec solum nullam ei oblatam cælestium speciem, sed ira Jovis sollicitati præva religione, fulmine ictum cum domo conflagrasset. Tullus magna gloria belli regnavit annos duos et triginta. 35

Ancus Marcius succeeds.—Turns his attention to the public ceremonies of religion, which had been either neglected or not properly performed.—Establishes the mode of demanding restitution previous to a declaration of war. Mortuo Tullo, res, ut institutum jam inde ab initio erat, ad patres redierat, hique interregem nominaverant. Quo comitia habente, Ancum Marcium regem populus creavit; patres fuere auctores. Numæ Pompiliii regis nepos, filia ortus, Ancus Marcius erat. Qui ut regnare cœpit, et avitæ gloriæ memor, et quia proximum regnum, cetera egregium, ab una parte haud satis prosperum fuerat, aut neglectis religionibus, aut prave cultis, longe antequam ratus sacra publica, ut ab Numa instituta erant, facere, omnia ea ex commentariis regis pontificem in album elata proponere in publico jubet. Inde et civibus otii cupidis, et finitimis civitatibus, facta spes, in avi mores atque instituta regem abiturum. Igitur Latini, 15 cum quibus Tullo regnante ictum fœdus erat, sustulerant animos; et cum incursionem in agrum Romanum fecissent, repetentibus res Romanis superbe responsum reddunt, desidem Romanum regem inter sacella et aras acturum esse regnum rati. Medium erat in Anco ingenium, et Numæ et 20 Romuli memòr; et præterquæm quod avi regno magis necessariam fuisset pacem credebat cum in novo tum feroci populo, etiam, quod illi contigisset otium, sine injuria id se haud facile habiturum: temptari patientiam et temptatam contemni, temporaque esse Tullo regi aptòra quam Numæ. 25 Ut tamen, quoniam Numa in pace religiones instituisset, a se bellicæ cærimonîæ proderentur; nec gererentur solum, sed etiam indicerentur bella aliquo ritu, jus ab antiqua gente Æquiculis, quod nunc fertiales habent, descriptis, quo res repetuntur. Legatus, ubi ad fines eorum venit, unde res 30 repetuntur, capite velato filo (læse velamen est), "Audi, Jupiter," inquit, "audite, fines" (cujuscumque gentis sunt, nominat), "audiat fas. Ego sum publicus nuntius populi Români: juste pieque legatus venio, verbisque meus fides sit." Peragit deinde postulata. Inde Jovem testem facit: 35
"Si ego injuste impieque illos homines illasque res dedier mihi exposco, tum patriæ compotem me numquam stirs esse." Hæc, cum fines suprascandit, hæc, quicumque ei primus vir obvius fuerit, hæc portam ingrediens, hæc forum ingressus, paucis verbis carminis conciïndique jurisjurandi 40 mutatis, peragit. Si non deduntur, quos expositc, diebus tribus et triginta (tot enim sollemnès sunt) peractis, bellum ita indicit: "Audi Jupiter et tu Juno, Quirine dique omnes cælestes, vosque terrestres, vosque inferni audite: ego vos testor, populum illum" (quicumque est, nominat) "inju-45 stum esse neque jus persolvere. Sed de istis rebus in patria maiores natu consulemus, quo pacto jus nostrum adipiscamur." Cum his nuntius Romam ad consulendum redit.
Confestim rex his ferme verbis patres consulebat. "Quarum rerum, litium, causarum condixit pater patratus populi Ro-50

busque Priscis Latinis, quas res nec dederunt nec solverunt ei, quem primum sententiam rogabat, "quid censes?" Tum ille: "puro pieque duello quærendas censeo, itaque con-55 sentio consciscoque." Inde ordine alii rogabantur, quandoque pars major eorum, qui aderant, in eandem sententiam ibat, bellum erat consensum. Fieri solitum, ut fetialis hastam ferratam aut sanguineam praebstam ad fines eorum ferret, et non minus tribus puberibus præsentibus diceret. 60 "Quod populi Priscorum Latinorum hominesque Prisci Latini adversus populum Romanum Quiritium fecerunt, de liquerunt; quod populus Romanus Quiritium bellum cum Priscis Latinis jussit esse, senatusque populi Romani Quiritium censuit, consensit, conscivit, ut bellum cum Priscis 65 Latinis fieret; ob eam rem ego populusque Romanus populus Priscorum Latinorum hominibusque Priscis Latinis bellum indicco facioque." Id ubi dixisset, hastam in fines eorum emittebat. Hoc tum modo ab Latinis repetita res ac bellum indicum; moremque eum posteri acceperunt. 70

Anco regnant, Lucumo, vir impiger ac divitiis potens, Romam commigravit cupidine maxime ac spe magni honoris, cujus adipiscendi Tarquiniis (nam ibi quoque peregrina stirpe oriundus erat) facultas non fuerat. Demarati Corinthii filius erat, qui, ob seditiones domo profugus, cum Tarquiniis forte consedisset, uxore ibi ducta, duos filios genuit. Nomina his Lucumo atque Arruns fuerunt. Lucumo superfuit patri, bonorum omnium heres, Ar-5 runs prior quam pater moritur, uxore gravida relicta. Nec diu manet superstes filio pater; qui cum, ignorans nurum ventrem ferre, immemor in testando nepotis decessisset, puero, post avi mortem in nullam sortem bonorum nato, ab inopia Egerio inditum nomen. Regnavit Ancus annos quattuor et viginti, cuilibet superiorum regum belli pacisque et artibus et gloria par. Jam filii prope pube- rem ætatem erant. Eo magis Tarquinius in- stare, ut quam primum comitia regi creando fieren. Quibus indictis, sub tempus pueros venatum ablegavit. Isque primus et petisse ambitiose regnum, et orationem dicitur habuisse ad conciliandos plebis animos compositam, cum, se non rem novam petere, quippe 10 qui non primus, quod quisquam indignari mirarive posset, sed tertius Romæ peregrinus regnum adfectet: et Tatium non ex peregrino solum, sed etiam ex hoste, regem factum; et Numam, ignarum urbis, non petentem, in regnum ultro accitum: se, ex quo sui po-15 tens fuerit, Romam cum coniugé æ fortunis omnibus com- migrasse; majorem partem ætatis ejus, qua civilibus officiis fungantur homines, Romæ se quam in vetere patria vixisse: domi militiæque sub haud pænitendo magistro, ipso Anco rege, Romana se jura, Romanos ritus didicisse: obsequio et observantia in regem cum omnibus, benignitate erga alios cum rege ipso certasse. Hæc eum haud falsa memorantem ingenti consensu populus Romanus regnare jussit. Ergo virum cetera egregium secuta, quam in petendo habuerat, etiam regnantem ambitio est: nec minus regni sui firmandi quam angendæ rei publicæ memor, centum in patres legit, qui deinde minorum gentium sunt appellati, factio haud dubia regis, cujus beneficio in curiam venerant. Bellum primum cum Latinis gessit, et oppidum ibi Appiolas vi cepit: prædaque inde majore, quam quanta belli fama fuerat, 30 repecta, ludos opulentius instructusque, quam priores reges fecit. Tunc primum Circo, qui nunc Maximus dicitur, designatus locus est. Loca divisa patribus equitibusque, ubi spectacula sibi quisque facerent; fori appellati. Spectavere

transirent hostes, quam obviam ire ac prohi-bere exercitus Romanus posset. Itaque trepi-datum Romæ est. Et primo dubia victoria magna utrimque caede pugnatum est. Re-ductis deinde in castra hostium copiis, datoque spatio Romanis, ad comparandum de integro bellum, Tarquinius, equitem maxime suis de-10 esse viribus ratus, ad Ramnes, Titienses, Luceres, quas cen-turias Romulus scripserat, addere alias constituit, suoque insignes relinquere nomine. Id quia inaugurato Romulus fecerat, negare Attus Navius, inclatus ea tempestate augur, neque mutari neque novum constitui, nisi aves addixissent, 15 posse. Ex eo ira regi mota, eludensque artem, ut ferunt, "Age dum" inquit, "divine tu, inaugura, fierine possit, quod nunc ego mente concipio." Cum ille in augurio rem ex-pertus profecto futuram dixisset, "Atqui hoc animo agitavi" inquit, "te novacula cotem discissurum: cape hæc, et per-20 age quod aves tuae fieri posse portendunt." Tum illum haud cunctanter discidisse cotem ferunt. Statua Atti capite velato, quo in loco res acta est, in comitio, in gradibus ipsis ad lävam curiæ fuit; cotem quoque codem loco sitam fuisse memorant, ut esset ad posteros miraculi ejus monumentum. 25 Auguriis certe sacerdotioque augurum tantus honos accessit, ut nihil belli domique postea, nisi auspicato, geretur; concilia populi, exercitus vocati, summa rerum, ubi aves non admisissent, dirimerentur. Neque tum Tarquinius de equitum centuriis quicquam mutavit; numero tantum alterum adjectum ut mille et ducenti equites in tribus centuriis essent. Posteriores modo sub iisdem nominibus, qui additi erant, appellati sunt; quas nunc, quia geminatae sunt, sex vocant centurias.

XXXVII.

Hac parte copiarum aucta, iterum cum Sabinis conficitur. Sed praeterquam quod viribus creverat Romanus exercitus, ex occulto etiam additur dolus, missis, qui magnam vim lignorum, in Anienis ripa jacentem, ardentem in flumen conjicerent; vintoque juvante censena ligna, et pleraque, in ratibus, impacta sublicis cum haererent, pontem incidunt. Eaqueque res in pugna terrem attulit Sabinis; et fusis eadem fugam impedit: multique mortales, cum hostem effusississe, in flumine ipso periere; quorum fuitantia arma ad urbem cognita in Tiberi prius pene, quam nuntiari posset, insignem victoriam fecere. Eo praelio praecipua equitum gloria fuit: utrimque ab cornibus positos, cum jam pellentur media peditum suorum acies, ita incurrisse ab lateribus ferunt, ut non sisterent modo Sabinas legiones, ferociter instantes cedentibus, sed subito in fugam averterent. Montes effuso cursu Sabini petebant, et pauci tenuere; maxima pars, ut ante dictum est, ab equitibus in flumen acti sunt. Tarquinius instandam perterritus ratus, praeda captivisque Romam missis, spoliis hostium (id votum Vulcano erat) ingenti cumulo accensis, pergit porro in agrum Sabinum exercitum inducere. Et, quamquam male gesta res erat, nec gesturos melius sperare poterant, tamen, quia consulendi res non dabat spatum, iere obviam Sabinis tumultuario milite; iterumque ibi fusi, perditis jam prope rebus, pacem petiere.

Cum commune Romani nominis, tum praecipue id domus tamquam spes subesset, sedulo comparat; si-Tullius takes possession of the sovereignty by the consent of the Senate, without waiting for the authority of the people.

mul, si destituat spes, alia præsidia molitur. Servio propere accito cum pæne exsanguem virum ostendisset, dextram tenens orat, ne in-10 ultam mortem socieri, ne socrum inimicis ludibrio esse sinat. "Tuum est" inquit, "Servi, si vir es, regnum; non eorum qui alienis manibus pessimum facinus fecere. Erige te, deosque duces sequere, qui clarum hoc fore caput divino quondam circum-15 fuso igni portenderunt. Nunc te illa coelestis excitet flamma; nunc expergiscere vere. Et nos peregrini regnavimus. Qui sis, non unde sis, reputa. Si tua re subita consilia tor-pent, at tu mea consilia sequere." Cum clamor impetusque multitudinis vix sustineri posset, ex superiore parte ædium 20 per fenestras in novam viam versus (habitat ad enim rex ad Jovis Statoris) populum Tanaquil adloquitur. Jubet bono animo esse: sopitum fuisse regem subito icu; ferrum haud alte in corpus descendisse; jam ad se redisse; inspectum vulnus abterso cruore: omnia salubria esse. Confidere prope 25 diem ipsum eos visuros: interim Servio Tullio jubere popu-lum dicto audientem esse; eum jura redditurum obiturum-que alia regis munia esse. Servius cum trabea et lictoribus prodit; ac sede regia sedens alia decernit, de aliis consulta-rum se regem esse simulat. Itaque per aliquot dies, cum 30 jam exspirasset Tarquinius, celata morte, per speciem alienæ fungendæ vicis suas opes firmavit. Tum demum palam factum est, comploratione in regia orta. Servius præsidio firme munitus, primus injussu populi voluntate patrum regnavit. Anci liberi jam tum, cum comprensi sceleris mini-35 stri sunt, ut vivere regem et tantas esse opes Servii nuntia-tum est, Suessam Pometiam exsulatum ierant.—

Nec jam publicis magis consiliis Servius, quam privatis, munire opes. Et ne, qualis Anci liberum animus adversus Tarquiniunm fu-erat, talis adversus se Tarquinii liberum esset, duas filias juvenibus regiis Lucio atque Ar- 5 runti Tarquiniis Jungit. Nec rupit tamen 10

Aucta civitate magnitudine urbis, formatis omnibus domi et ad belli et ad pacis usus, ne semper armis opes acquirerentur, consilio augegere imperium conatus est, simul et aliquod ad dere urbi decus. Jam tum erat inclutum Dianæ Ephesiae fanum: id communiter a civitatibus Asiae factum fama ferebat. Eum consensus deosque consociatos laudare mire Servius inter proceres Latinorum, cum quibus publice privatimque hospitia amicitiasque de industria junxerat: ssepe iterando eadem perpulit tandem, ut Romae fanum Dianae populi Latini cum populo Romano facerent. Ea erat confessio caput rerum Romam esse, de quo totiens armis certatum fuerat. Id quamquam omissum jam ex omnium cura Latinorum ob rem totiens infelicer temptatam armis videbatur, uni se ex Sabinis fors dare visa est privato consilium imperii recuperandi. Bos in Sabinis nata cuidam patri familias dicitur, miranda magnitudine ac speciei fixa per multas aestates cornua in vestibulo templi Dianae monumentum ei fuere miraculo. Habita, ut erat, res prodigii loco est; et cecinere vates, cujus civitatis eam cives Dianae imolationem, ibi fore imperium; idque carmen pervenerat ad antistitem fani Dianae. Sabinus, ut prima apta dies sacrificii visa est, bovem Romam actam deducit ad fanum Dianae, et ante aram statuit. Ibi antistes Romanus, cum eum magnitudo victimae celebrata fama movisset, memor re sponsi Sabinum ita adloquitur: "Quidnam tu hospes paras?" inquit "inceste sacrificium Dianae facere quin tu ante vivo perfunderis flumine? infima valle praefluat Tiberis." Religione tactus hospes, qui omnia, ut prodigio responderet eventus, superet rite facta, extemplo descendit ad Tiberim. Interea Romanus immolat Dianae bovem. Id mire gratum regi atque civitatia fuit.

XLVI.

Servius says the question of his right to reign before the people. The latter declare him king with great unanimity. Designs of young Tarquin Servius, quamquam jam usu haud dubie regnum possederat, tamen, quia interdum jactari voces a juvene Tarquinio audiebat se injussu populi regnare, conciliata prius voluntate plebis, agro capto ex hostibus viritim diviso, ausus est ferre ad populum, vellent juberentne se regnare; tantoque consensu, quanto haud quiaon the throne.—quam alius ante, rex est declaratus. / Neque ea res Tarquinio spem adfectandi regni minuit: immo eo impensius quia de agro plebis ad-10 versa patrum voluntate senserat agi, criminan-di Servii apud patres crescendique in curia sibi occasionem datam ratus est, et ipse juvenis ardentis animi, et domi uxore Tullia inquietum animum stimulante. Tullit enim et Romana regia sceleris tragici exemplum, ut tædio regum 15 maturior veniret libertas, ultimumque regnum esset, quod scelere partum foret. Hic L. Tarquinius (Prisci Tarquinii regis filius neposne fuerit, parum liquet; pluribus tamen auctoribus filium ediderim) fratrem habuerat Arruntem Tarquinium, mitis ingenii juvenem. His duobus, ut ante dic-20 tum est, duæ Tulliæ regis filiæ nupserant, et ipsæ longe dispares moribus. Forte ita inciderat, ne duo violenta ingenia matrimonio jungerentur, fortuna, credo, populi Romani, quo diuturnius Servii regnum esset, constituisse civitatis mores possent. Angebatur ferox Tullia nihil materiæ in viro 25 neque ad cupiditatem neque ad audaciam esse: tota in alterum aversa Tarquinium eum mirari, eum virum dicere ac regio sanguine ortum; spermere sororem, quod virum nacta muliebri cessaret audacia. Contrahit celeriter similitudo eos, ut fere fit malum malo aptissimum: sed initium 30 turbandi omnia a femina ortum est. Ea secretis viri alieni adsuefacta sermonibus, nullis verborum contumeliis parcere de viro ad fratrem, de sorore ad virum; et se rectius viduam et illum calibem futurum fuisset contendere, quam cum im-pari jungi, ut elanguescendum aliena ignavia esset. Si sibi 35 eum, quo digna esset, dixi dedissent virum, domi se prope diēm visuram regnum fuisset, quod apud patrem videat.
Celeriter adolescentem suæ temeritatis implet. Lucius Tarquinius et Tullia minor prope continuatis funeribus cum domos vacuas novo matrimonio fecissent, junguntur nuptiis, 40 magis non prohibente Servio quam approbante.
XLVII.

Tarquin, instigated especially by the ambitions solicitations of his wife, and having formed a party among the patricians, seizes upon the supreme power.

Tum vero in dies infestior Tullii se necatus, infestius cepit regnum esse. Jam enim ab scelere ad aliud spectare mulier scelus; nec nocte nec interdiu virum conquiescere pati, ne gratuita praeferita parricidia esset. Non sibi defuisse, cui nupta dicetur, nec cum quo tacita serviret: defuisse, qui se regno dignum putaret, qui meminisset se esse Prisci Tarquinii filium, qui habere quam sperare regnum mallet. "Si tu is es, cui nuptam esse me arbitror, et virum et regem appello: sin minus, eo nunc pejus mutata res est, quod istic cum ignavia est scelus. Quin accingeris? Non tibi ab Corintho nec ab Tarquiniiis, ut patri tuo, peregrina regna moliri necesse est: di te penates patriaque, et patris imago, et domus regia, et in domo regale solium, et nomen Tarquinium creat vocatque regem. Aut si ad hae parum est animi, quid frustraris civitatem? Quid te ut regium juvenem conspici sinis? Facesse hinc Tarquinios aut Corinthum; devovere retro ad stirpem, fratri simili quam patri." His aliisque increpando juvenem instigat, nec conquiescere ipsa potest, si, cum Tanaquil, peregrina mulier, tantum moliri potuisset animo, ut duo continua regna viro ac deinceps genero dedisset, ipsa, regio semine orta, nullum momentum in dando adimendoque regno faceret. His muliebris instinctus furis Tarquiniius circumire et presare minorum maxime gentium patres; admonere paterni beneficii, ac pro eo gratiam repetere; adicere donis juvenes; cum de se ingentia pollicendo tuni regis criminibus omnibus locis crescere. Postremo, ut jam agendae rei tempus visum est, stipatus agmine armatorum in forum irrupit. Inde omnibus perculsis favore, in regia sede pro curia sedens, patres in curiam per praecorum ad regem Tarquinium citari jussit. Convenere extemplo, alii jam ante ad hoc preparati, alii metu, ne non venisse fraudi esset, novitate ac miraculo attoniti et jam de Servio actum. rati. Ibi Tarquinius maledicta ab stirpe ultima orsus; ser-35 vum servaque natum post mortem indignam parentis sui, non interregno ut antea inito, non comitiis habitis, non per suffragium populi, non auctoribus patribus, muliebri dono regnum occupasse. Ita natum, ita creatum regem, autore infimi generis hominum, ex quo ipse sit, odio alienæ honesta-tis ereptum primoribus agrum sordidissimo cuique divisisse; omnia onera, quæ communia quondam fuerint, inclinasse in primores civitatis; instituisse censum, ut insignis ad invidiam locupletiorum fortuna esset, et parata unde, ubi vellet, egentissimis largiretur.

XLVIII.

Huic orationi Servius cum intervenisset, trepido nuntio excitatus, extemplo a vestibulo curiae magna voce "Quid hoc" inquit, "Tar-quini, rei est? qua tu audacia, me vivo, vocare ausus es patres aut in sede considere mea?" 5 Cum ille ferociter ad hæc, se patris sui tenere sedem, multo quam servum potiorem filium regis regni heredem; satis illum din per licentiam eludentem insultasse dominis; clamor ab ubriusque auctoribus oritur, et concursus populi 10 fiebat in curiam, apparebatque regnaturn qui vicisset. Tum Tarquinius, necessitate jam etiam ipsa cogente ultima audere, multo et àetate et viribus validior medium arripit Servium, elatumque e curiæ in inferiorem par-tem per gradus dejecti; inde ad cogendum senatum in 15 curiam rediit. Fit fuga regis apparitorum atque comitum:
ipse prope exsanguis cum sine regio comitatu domum se reciperet, ab iis, qui missi ab Tarquinio fugientem consecuti erant, interficetur. Creditur, quia non abhorret a cetero scelere, admonitu Tulliae id factum: carpento certe, id quod 20 satis constat, in forum invecta, nec reverita cœtum virorum, evocavit virum e curia, regemque prima appellavit: a quo faccersse jussa ex tanto tumultu cum se domum recipieret, pervenissetque ad summum Cyprium vicum, ubi Dianium nuper fuit, flectenti carpentum dextra in Urbium clivum, ut 25 in collem Esquiliarium eveheretur, restitit pavidus atque inhibuit frenos is, qui jumenta agebat, jacentemque dominæ Servium trucidatum ostendit. Fœdum inhumanumque inde traditur scelus, monumentoque locus est: Sceleratum vicum vocant, quo amens, agitantibus furiis sororis ac viri, Tullia 30 per patris corpus carpentum egisse fertur, partemque sanguinis ac cædis paternæ cruento vehiculo, contaminata ipsa respersaque, tulisse ad penates suos virique sui; quibus iratis malo regni principio, similes prope diem exitus sequeruntur. Servius Tullius regnavit annos quattuor et quadraginta ita, 35 ut bono etiam moderatoque succedenti regi difficilis assumlatio esset. Ceterum id quoque ad gloriam accessit, quod cum illo simul justa ac legítima regnia occiderunt. Id ipsum tam mite ac tam moderatum imperium tamen, quia unius esset, deponere eum in animo habuisse quidam auctores sunt, ni 40 scelus intestinum liberandæ patriæ consilia agitanti intervenisset.

XLIX.

Accession of Tarquinius.—Surnamed Superbus from his hauhtiness and cruelty.—Puts to death the principal senators.—Takes a body-guard.—Assumes absolute power, treating with neglect both the Senate and people.—Forms connections among the Latins.

Inde L Tarquinius regnare occipit, cui Superbo cognomen facta indiderunt, quia socerrum gener sepultura prohibuit, Romulum quo-que inseptulum perisse dictitans, primoresque patrum, quos Servii rebus favisse credebat, interfecit. Conscius deinde, male quærendi reg-ni ab se ipso adversus se exemplum capi posse, armatis corpus circumsepsit. Neque enim ad jus regni quicquam præter vim habebat, ut qui neque populi jussu, neque auctoribus patribus, 10 regnaret. Eo accedebat, ut in caritate civium nihil spei reponenti metu regnum tutandum esset: quem ut pluribus incuteret, cognitiones capitalium rerum sine consiliis per se solus exercebat, perque eam causam occidere, in exsilium agere, 15 bonis multare poterat non suspectosmodo aut invisos, sed unde nihil aliud quam praèdam sperare posset. Præcipue ita patrum numero imminuto, statuit nullos in patres legere, quo contemptior paucitate ipsa ordo esset, minusque per se nihil agi indignarentur. Hic enim regum primus traditum 20 a prioribus morem de omnibus senatum consulendi solvit, domesticis consiliis rem publicam administravit; bellum, pacem, fœdera, societates per se ipse, cum quibus voluit, injustu populi ac senatus, fecit diremitque. Latinorum sibi maxime gentem conciliabat, ut peregrinis quoque opibus tu-25 tior inter cives esset; neque hospitia modo cum primoribus eorum, sed adnittates quoque jungebat. Octavio Mamilio Tusculano (is longe princeps Latini nominis erat, si famæ cedimus, ab Ulixe deaque Circa oriundus) ei Mamilio filiam nuptum dat, perque eas nuptias multos sibi cognatos amicos-30 que ejus conciliat.

Jam magna Tarquinii auctoritas inter Latinorum proceres erat, cum in diem certam, ut ad lucum Ferentinæ conveniant, indicit: esse quæ agere de rebus communibus velit. Convenient frequentes prima luce. Ipse Tarquinius diem quidem servavit, sed paulo ante quam sol occideret venit. Multa ibi tota die in concilio variis jactata sermonibus erant. Turnus Herdonius ab Aricia ferociter in absentem Tarquinium erat invectus: Haud mi-10 rum esse Superbo inditum Romæ cognomen (jam enim ita, clam quidem mussitantes, vulgo tamen eum appellabant): an quicquam superbius esse quam ludificari sic omne nomen Latinum? Principibus longe a domo excitis, ipsum, qui concilium indixerit, 15 non adesse. Temptari profecto patientiam, ut, si jugum acceperint, obnoxios premat. Cui enim non apparere, affectare eum imperium in Latinos? quod si sui bene crediderint cives, aut si creditum illud et non raptum parricidio sit, credere et Latinos, quamquam ne sic quidem alienigenae, 20 deberet. Sin suos ejus poeniteat, quippe qui ali super alios trucidentur, exsulatum eant, amittant bona, quid spei melior-ris Latinis portendi? Si se audiant, domum suam quemque inde abituros, neque magis observavos diem concilii, quam ipse, qui indixerit, observet. Hae atque alia eodem perti-25 nentia seditiosus facinerosusque homo, hisque artibus opes domi nactus, cum maxime dissereret, intervenit Tarquinius.
Is finis orationi fuit: aversi omnes ad Tarquinium salutan-dum. Qui, silentio facto, monitus a proximis ut purgaret se, quod id temporis venisset, disceptatorem ait se sumptum 30 inter patrem et filium, cura reconciliandi eos in gratiam moratum esse: et, quia ea res exemisset illum diem, postero die acturum, quae constituisset. Ne id quidem ab Turno tulisse tacitum ferunt. Dixisse enim nullam breviorem esse cognitionem quam inter patrem et filium, paucisque transigi 35 verbis posse: ni pareat patri, habiturum infortunium esse.

II.

Anger of Tarquinius against Herdonius.—
His treacherous conduct towards the latter.—Procures his death on a false accusation.

Hae Aricinus in regem Romanum increpans ex concilio abit. Quam rem Tarquiniius aliquanto quam videbatur aegrius ferens, confe-stim Turno necem machinatur, ut eundem terorem, quo civium animos domi oppresserat, 5 Latinis injicet. Et quia pro imperio palam interfici non poterat, oblato falso crimine in-sontem oppressit. Per adversae factionis quosdam Aricinos sernum Turni auro corrupt, ut in deversorium ejus vim magnam gladiorum inferri clam sineret. Ea cum una nocte 10 perfecta essent, Tarquiniius paulo ante lucem acitis ad se principit us Latinorum, quasi re nova perturbatus, moram suam hesternam, velut deorum quadam providentia illatam, aet salutis sibi atque illis fuisset. Ab Turno dici sibi et primoribus populorum parari necem, ut Latinorum solus impe-rium teneat. Adgressurum fuisset hesterno die in concilio7:
dilatam rem esse, quod auctor concillii aferit, quem maxime peteret: inde illam absentis insectationem esse natam, quod morando spem destituerit. Non dubitare, si vera deferantur, quin prima luce, ubi ventum in concilium sit, instructus 20 cum conjuratorum manu armatusque venturus sit. Dici gladiorum ingentem esse numerum ad eum convectum: id vanum necne sit, extemplo sciri posse. Rogare eos, ut inde secum ad Turnum veniant. Suspectam fecit rem et ingenium Turni ferox, et oratio hesterna, et mora Tarquinii, 25 quod videbatur ob eam differri cædes potuisse. Eunt incli-natis quidem ad credendum animis, tamen, nisi gladiis deprehensis, cetera vana existimaturi. Ubi est eo ventum, Turnum ex somno excitatum circumsistunt custodes; com-prehensisque servis, qui caritate domini vim parabant, cum 30 gladii abditi ex omnibus locis deverticuli protraherentur, enimvero manifesta res visa, injectæque Turno catenæ; et confestim Latinorum concilium magno cum tumultu advocatur. Ibi tam atroc invidia orta est gladiis in medio positis, ut indica causa novo genere leti dejectus ad caput aquæ 35 Ferentinæ, crate superne injecta saxisque congestis, mergeretur.

LII.

Revocatis deinde ad concilium Latinis Tarquinius collaudatisque, qui Turnum novantem res pro manifesto parricidio merita poena ad-fectissent, ita verba fecit: Posse quidem se vetusto jure agere, quod, cum omnes Latini ab 5 Alba oriundi sint, in eo fædere teneantur, quo ab Tullo res omnis Albana cum coloniis suis in Romanum cesserit imperium. Ceterum se utilitatis magis omnium causa censere, ut renovetur id fædus, secundaque potius fortuna populi Romani ut participes Latini fruantur, quam urbium excidia vastationesque agrorum, quas Anco prius, patre deinde suo regnante, perpressi sint, semper aut expectent aut patiantur. Haud difficulter persuasum Latinis, quamquam in eo fædere superior Romana res erat; ceterum et capita nominis Latini stare ac sentire cum rege videbant, et 15
Turnus sui cuique periculi, si adversatus esset, recens erat documentum. Ita renovatum fœdus, indictumque junioribus Latinorum, ut ex fœdere die certa ad lucum Ferentinæ armati frequenter adessent. Qui ubi ad dictum Romani regis ex omnibus populis convenere, ne ducem suum, neve se 20 cretum imperium, propriave signa haberent, miscuit manipulos ex Latinis Romanisque, ut ex binis singulos faceret, binosque ex singulis; ita geminatis manipulis centuriones imposuit.

LIII.

Nec, ut injustus in pace rex, ita dux belli pravus fuit. Quin ea arte aëquasset superiores reges, ni degeneratum in alis huic quoque decori offecisset. Is primus Volscis bellum in ducentos amplius post suam ætatem annos 5 movit, Suessamque Pometiam ex his vi cepit. Ubi cum divendita præda quadraginta talenta argenti refecisset, concepit animo eam amplitudinem Jovis templi, quæ digna deum hominemque rege, quæ Romano imperio, quæ ipsius etiam loci majestate esset. Captivam 10 pecuniam in ædificationem ejus templi seposuit. Except deinde eum lentius spe bellum, quo Gabios, propinquam urbem, nequicquam vi adortus, cum obsidendi quoque urbem spes pulso a mœnibus adempta esset, postremo minime arte Romana, fraude ac dolo adgressus est. Nam cum, velut 15 posito bello, fundamentis templi faciendis aliisque urbanis operibus intentum se esse simularet, Sextus filius ejus, qui minimus ex tribus erat, transfugit ex composito Gabios, patris in se sævitiam intolerabilem conquerens: jam ab alienis in suos vertisse superbiam, et liberorum quoque eum fre-20 quentisæ tædere, ut, quam in curia solitudinem fecerit, domi quoque faciat, ne quam stirpem, ne quem heredem regni relinquat. Se quidem inter tela et gladios patris elapsum, nihil usquam sibi tumum nisi apud hostes L. Tarquinii credidisse. Nam, ne errarent, manere iis bellum, quod positum si-25 muletur; et per occasionem eum incautos invasurum. Quod si apud eos supplicibus locus non sit, pererraturum se omne Latium: Volscosque se inde, et Aequos, et Heunicos petiturum; donec ad eos perveniat, qui a patrum crudelibus atque impiis suppliciis tegere liberos sciant. Forsitan etiam ardo-30 ris alicuius ad bellum armaque se adversus superbissimum regist ac ferocissimum populum inventurum. Cum, si nihil morarentur, insensus ira porro inde abiturus videtur, benigno ab Gabinis excipitur. Vetant mirari, si, qualis in cives, qualis in sociis, talis ad ultimum in liberos esset. In se ipsum postremo sæviturum, si alia desint. Sibi vero gratum adventum ejus esse, futurumque credere, brevi, ut illo adjuvante a portis Gabinis sub Romana mœnia bellum trans-feratur.

LIV.

Inde in consilia publica adhiberi. Ubi cum de aliis rebus adsentire se veteribus Gabinis diceret, quibus eæ notiores essent; ipse iden-tidem belli auctor esse, et in eo sibi praecipuam prudentiam adsumere, quod utriusque populi vires nosset, 5 sciretque invasam profecto superbiam regiam civibus esse, quam ferre ne liberi quidem potuissent. Ita cum sensim ad rebellandum primores Gabinorum incitaret, ipse cum prompti-tissimis juvenum prædatum atque in expeditiones iret, et, dictis factisque omnibus ad fallendum instructis, vana accresceret fides, dux ad ultimum belli legitur. Ibi cum, inscia multitudine, quid ageretur, prælia parva inter Romam Gabi-osque fieren, quibus plerumque Gabina res superior esset, tum certatim summi infimique Gabinorum Sex. Tarquinium dono deum sibi missum ducem credere. Apud milites 15 vero obeundo pericula ac labores pariter, prædam munifice largiendu tanta caritate esse, ut non pater Tarquiniius poten-tior Romæ quam filius Gabiis esset. Itaque postquam satis virium collectum ad omnes conatus videbat, tum ex suis unum scisciatum Romam ad patrem mittit, quidnam se fa-20 cere vellet, quando quidem, ut omnia unus præ Gabinis pos-set, ei dii dedissent. Huic nuntio, quia credo dubiae fidei

LV.

Gabiis receptis Tarquinius pacem cum Aequorum gente fecit, foedus cum Tuscis renovavit. Inde ad negotia urbana animum convertit. Quorum erat primum, ut Jovis templum in monte Tarpeio monumentum regni sui nominisque relinqueret: Tarquinios reges ambos, patrem vovisse, filium perfequisse: Et, ut libera a ceteris religionibus area esset tota Jovis templique ejus, quod inaedicaretur, exaugurare fana sacellaque statuit, quæ aliquot ibi a Tatio rege primum in ipso discrimine adversus Romulum 10 pugnæa vota, consecrata inaugurataque postea fuerant. Inter principia condendi hujus operis movisse numen ad indicandam tanti imperii molem traditur deos: nam cum omnium sacellorum exaugurationes admitterent aves, in Termini fano non addixere. Idque omen auguriumque ita acceptum est, 15 non motam Termini sedem, unumque eum deorum non evocatum sacratis sibi finibus, firma stabiliaque cuncta portendere. Hoc perpetuitatis auspicio accepto, secutum aljud magnitudinem imperii portendens prodigium est: Caput hummanum integra facie aperientibus fundamenta templi dicitur 20 apparuisse. Quae visa species haud per ambages arcem eam imperii caputque rerum fore portendebat: idque ita cecinere vates, quique in urbe erant, quosque ad eam rem consultandam ex Etruria acciverant. Angebatur ad impensas regis animus. Itaque Pometinæ manubiae, quæ perducendo ad 25 culmen operi destinatæ erant, vix in fundamenta suppedita-vere. Eo magis Fabio, præterquam quod antiquior est, crediderim quadraginta ea sola talenta fuisse, quam Pisoni, qui quadraginta milia pondo argenti seposita in eam rem scribit, summam pecuniae neque ex unius tum urbis præda speran-30 dam, et nullius ne horum quidem magnificentiae operum fun-damenta non exsuperaturam.

LVI.

Intentus perficiendo templo, fabris undique ex Etruria accitis, non pecunia solum ad id publica est usus, sed operis etiam ex plebe.
Qui cum, haud parvus et ipse, militiae adderetur labor, minus tamen plebs gravabatur se 5 templa deum exaudicare manibus suis, quam postquam et ad alia, ut specie minora, sic la-boris aliquanto majoris traducebantur opera, foros in circo faciendos, cloacamque maximam, receptaculum omnium purgamentorum urbis, 10 sub terram agendam: quibus duobus operibus vix nova hæc magnificentia quicquam adæquare potuit. His laboribus exercita plebe, quia et urbi multitudinem, ubi usus non esset, oneri rebatur esse, et colonis mittendis occupari latius im-perii fines volebat, Signiam Circeiosque colonos misit, præ-15 sidia urbi futura terra marique.

Hæc agenti portentum terrible visum: anguis, ex columna ligneæ elapsus, cum terrorem fugamque in regiam fecisset, ipsius regis non tam subito pavore perculit pectus, quam anxiis implevit curis. Itaque cum ad publica prodigia 20 Etrusci tantum vates adhiberentur, hoc velut domestico exterritus visu, Delphos ad maxime inclutum in terris oraculorum mittere statuit: neque responsa sortium ulli alii committere ausus, duos filios per ignotas ea tempestate terras, ignotiora maria, in Græciam misit. Titus et Arruns pro 25 lecti. Comes iis additis L. Junius Brutus, Tarquinia sore regis natus, juvenis longe alius ingenio, quam cujus simulationem induerat. Is cum primores civitatis, in quibus fratre suum ab avunculo interfecerat, neque in animo suo quicquam regi timendum, neque in fortuna con 30 cupiscendum relinqueretur statuit; contemptuque tutus esse, ubi in iure parum præsidii esset. Ergo ex industria factus ad imitationem stultitiae, cum se suaque prææ esse regi sinisteret, Bruti quoque haud abnuit cognomen, ut sub ejus obtentu cognominis liberator ille populi Romani animus latens 35 opperiretur tempora sua. Is tum ab Tarquiniis ductus Delphos, ludibrium verius quam comes, aureum baculum inclu- sum corneo cavato ad id baculo tulisse donum Apollini dici- tur, per ambages effigiem ingenii sui. Quo postquam ven- tum est, perfectis patris mandatis, cupid o incessit animos 40 juvenum sciscitandi, ad quem eorum regnum Romanum es- set venturum. Ex infimo specu vocem redditam ferunt:

LVII.

War against the Rutuli. — Ardeam Rutuli habebant, gens, ut in ea re-gione atque in ea ætate, divitiis prepotens: eaque ipsa causa belli fuit, quod rex Romanus Legend of Lu-cum ipse ditari, exhaustus magnificentia pu-licorum operum, tum præda delenire popularium animos studebat, præter aliam superbiam regno infestos etiam, quod se in fabrorum ministerio ac servili tam diu habitos opere ab rege indignabantur. Tentata res est, si primo impetu capi Ardea posset: ubi id parum processit, obsidione munitionibusque cœpti premi hostes. In 10 his stativis, ut fit longo magis quam acri bello, satis liberi commeatus erant, primoribus tamen magis quam militibus.
Regii quidem juvenes interdum otium conviviis comissationibusque inter se terebant. Forte potantibus his apud Sex.
Tarquinium, ubi et Collatinus cœnabat Tarquiniius, Egerii 15 filius, incidit de uxoribus mentio: suam quisque laudare mi-ris modis. Inde certamine accenso, Collatinus negat verbis opus esse, paucis id quidem horis posse sciri, quantum ceteris præset Lucretia sua. "Quin, si vigor juventæ inest, conscendimur equos invisimusque præsentem nostrum in-20 geniam? Id cuique spectatissimum sit, quod necopinato viri adventu occurrerit oculis." Incaluerant vino. "Age sane" onnes. Citatis equis avolant Romam. Quo cum primis se intendentibus tenebris pervenissent, pergunt inde Collatiam, ubi Lucretiam haudquaquam ut regias nurus, quas in con-25 vivio luxuque cum æqualibus viderant tempus terentes, sed nocte sera deditam lanae inter lucubrantes ancillas in medio sædium sedentem inveniunt. Muliebris certaminis laus pe-nes Lucretiam fuit. Adveniens vir Tarquiniiique excepti benigne. Victor maritus comiter invitat regios juvenes. 30 Ibi Sex. Tarquinium mala libido Lucretiæ per vim stupran-dæ capit. Cum forma tum spectata castitas incitat. Et tum quidem ab nocturno juvenali ludo in castra redeunt.

LVIII.

Paucis interjectis diebus Sex. Tarquinius, insicio Collatino, cum comite uno Collatiam venit.

Brutus, illis luctu occupatissimis, cultrum ex vulnere Lucretiae extractum, manante cruore, præ se tenens "per hunc" inquit "castissimum ante regiam injuriam sanguinem juro, vosque, dii, testes facio, me L. Tarquinium Superbum, cum scelerata conjuge et omni liberorum stirpe, ferro, igni, quamcumque dehinc vi possim, executurum, nec illos nec alium quemquam regnare RomÆ passurum." Cultrum deinde Collatino tradit, inde Lucretio ac Valerio, stupentibus miraiculo rei, unde novum in Bruti pectore ingenium. Ut praecipitum erat, jurant: totique ab luctu versi in iram Brutum, jam inde ad expugnandum regnum vocantem, sequuntur ducem. Elatum domo Lucretiae corpus in forum deferunt, concientque miraculo, ut fit, rei novae atque indignitate hodie mines. *Pro se quisque scelus regium ac vim queruntur. Ferocissimus quisque juvenum cum armis voluntarius adest; sequitur et cetera juventus. Inde pari præsidio relictæ Collatæ ad portas, custodibusque datis, ne quis eum motum regibus nuntiaret, ceteri armati duce Bruto Romam profecti. Ubi eo ventum est, quamcumque incedit armata multitudo, pavorem ac tumultum facit. Rursus ubi anteire primores civitatis vident, quidquid sit, haud temere esse rentur. Lib. II.

I.

Liberi jam hinc populi Romani res pace belloque gestas, annuos magistratus, imperiaque legum potentiora quam hominum peragam. Quae libertas ut laetior esset, proximi regis superbia fecerat. Nam priores ita regnaverunt, ut haud immerito omnes deinceps conditores partium certe urbis, quas novas ipsi sedes ab se auctae multitudinis addiderunt, numerentur. Neque ambiguitur, quin Brutus idem, qui tantum gloriae Superbo exacto rege meruit, pessimo publico id facturus fuerit, si libertatis immaturae cupidine priorum regum alicui regnum extorsisset. Quid enim futurum fuit, si illa pastorum convenarumque plebs, transfuga ex suis populis, sub tutela inviolati templi aut libertatem aut certe impunitatem adepta, soluta regio metu, agitari coepta esset tribuniciis procellis, et in aliena urbe cum patribus serere certamina, priumquam pignora coniugum ac liberorum caritasque ipsius soli, cui longo tempore adscuescit, animos eorum consociasset? Dissipatae res nondum adultae discordia forent; quas fovit transeunte quilla moderatio imperii, eoque nutriendo perduxit, ut bonam frugem libertatis maturis jam viribus ferre posset. Libertatis autem originem inde magis, quia annum imperium consulare factum est, quam quod deminutum quicquam sit ex regia potestate, numeres. Omnia iura, omnia insignia primi consules tenuere; id modo cautum est, ne si ambo fasces habenent, duplicatus terror videretur. Brutus prior concedente collega, fasces habuit, qui non acrior vindex libertatis fuerat quam deinde custos fuit. Omnia primum, avidum novae libertatis populum, ne postmodum flecti precibus aut donis regii possset, (jurejurando adegit) neminem Romae passuros regnare. Deinde, quo plus virium in senatu frequentia etiam ordinis faceret, caedibus regii deminutum patrum numerum primoribus equestris gradus lectis ad trecentorum summam explavit. Traditumque inde fertur, ut in senatum vocarentur qui patres quique conscripti essent: conscriptos videlicet in novum senatum appellabant lectos. Id mirum quantum profuit ad concordiam civitatis juvenidosque patribus plebis animos.

II.

Rerum deinde divinarum habita cura: et quia quaedam publica sacra per ipsos reges factitata erant, necubi regum desiderium esset, regem sacrificium creant. Id sacerdotium pontifici subjecere, ne additis nomini honos aliquid libertati, cujus tunc prima erat cura, officeret. Ac nescio an nimis undique eam minimisque rebus muniendo modum excesse-rint. Consuliss enim alterius, cum nihil aliud offenderit, nomen invisum civitati fuit: Num Tarquinios regno adsuisset: initium a Prisco factum; regnasse dein Ser. Tullium; ne intervallo quidem facto obtitum, tamquam alieni, regni Superbum Tarquinium velut hereditatem gentis scelere ac vi repetisse: pulso Superbo, penes Collatinum imperium esse: nescire Tarquinios privatos vivere: non placere nonem, periculosum libertati esse. Hic primo sensim temptantium animos sermo per totam civitatem est datus, sollicitamque suspicione plebem Brutus ad contionem vocat. Ibi omnium primum jusjurandum populi recitat, neminem regi nare passuros, nec esse Romae, unde periculosum libertati foret. Id summa ope tuendum esse, neque ullam rem, qua eo pertineat, contemnendam. Invitum se dicere hominis causa,

III.

Cum haud cuquam in dubio esset, bellum ab Tarquiniis imminere, id quidem spe omnium serius fuit. Ceterum, id quod non timebant, per dolum ac prōditionem prope libertas amissa est. Erant in Romana juventute adolescentes aliquid, nec hi tenui loco orti, quorum in regno libido solutior fuerat, æquales sodalesque adolescentium Tarquiniorum, adsuetti more regio vivere. Eam tum æquato jure omnium licentiam quaerentes, libertatem aliorum in suam vertisse 10 servitutem inter se conquercabantur: Regem hominem esse, a quo impetres, ubi jus, ubi injuria opus sit: esse gratiae locum, esse beneficio; et irasci et ignoscere posse; inter amicum atque inimicum discrimen nosse. Leges rem surdam, inexorabilem esse, salubriorem melioremque inopi quam potenti: nihil laxamenti nec veniae habere, si modum excesseris. Periculosem esse in tot humanis erroribus sola innocentiavivere. Ita jam sua sponte aegris animis legati ab regibus supervenienti, sine mentione reditus, bona tantum repetentes. Eorum verba postquam in senatu audita sunt, per aliquot dies ea consultatio tenuit; ne non reddita bellii causa, reddita bellii materia et adjumentum essent. Interim legati aliis alia moliri; aperte bona repetentes, clam recuperandi regni consilia struere; et tamquam ad id, quod agi videbatur, ambientes nobilium adolescentium animos pertemptant. A quibus placide oratio accepta est, iis litteras ab Tarquiniiis reddunt, et de accipiendis clam nocte in urbem regibus colloquuntur.

Vitelliiis Aquilisiisque fratribus primo commissa res est. Vitelliorum soror consuli nupta Bruto erat; jamque ex eo matrimonio adolescentes erant liberi, Titus Tiberiusque. Eos quoque in societatem consili avunculi assumunt. Præterea aliquot nobiles adolescentes conscii adsumpti, quorum vetustate memoria abiiit. Interim cum in senatu vicisset sententia, quae censebat reddenda bona, eamque ipsam causam morae in urbe haberent legati, quod spatum ad vehicula comparanda a consulibus sumpsissent, quibus regum asportarent res, omne id tempus cum conjuratis consultando assumunt, evincuntque instando, ut litterae sibi ad Tarquinios darentur: nam aliter qui credituros eos, non vana ab legatis super rebus tantis adferri? Data litteræ, ut pignus fidei essent, manifestum facinus fecerunt. Nam cum pridie quam legati ad Tarquinios proficiscerentur, conenatus forte apud Vitellios esset, conjuratique ibi, remotis arbitris, multa inter se de novo, ut fit, consilio egissent, sermonem eorum ex servis unus exceptit, qui jam antea id senserat agi: sed eam octo casionem, ut litterae legatis darentur, quae deprehensae rem coarguere possent, expectabat: postquam datas sensit, rem ad consules detulit. Consules ad deprehendendos legatos conjuratorisque profecti domo sine tumultu rem omnem oppressere; litterarum in primis habita cura, ne interciderent. 25 Proditoribus extemplo in vincula conjectis, de legatis paululum addubitatum est, et, quamquam visi sunt commississe, ut hostium loco essent, jus tamen gentium valuit.

V.

De bonis regiis, quæ reddi ante censuerant, res integra referitur ad patres. Il victi ira vetuere reddi, vetuere in publicum redigi: diripienda plebi sunt data, ut, contacta regia præda, spem in perpetuum cum iis pacis amitteret. Ager Tarquiniorum, qui inter urbem ac Tiberim fuit, consecratus Marti, Marti deinde campus fuit. Forte ibi tum seges farris dicitur fuisse matura messi. Quem campi fructum quia religiosum erat consumere, desectam cum 10 stramento segetem magna vis hominum simul immissa corribus fudere in Tiberim tenui fluentem aqua, ut mediis caloribus solet. Ita in vadis haesitantis frumenti acervos sedisse illitos limo: insulam inde paulatim, et aliis, quæ fert temere flumen, codem invectis factam. Postea 15 credo additas moles, manuque adjutum, ut tam eminens area firmaque templis quoque ac porticibus sustinendis esset. Direptis bonis regum, damnati prodores, sumptumque supplicium, conspectius eo, quod poenae capiendae ministerium patri de liberis consulatus imposuit, et, qui spectator erat 20 amovendus, eum ipsum fortuna exactorem supplicii dedit. Stabant deligati ad palum nobilissimi juvenes: sed a ceteris, velut ab ignotis capitisibus, consulis liberi omnium in se averterant oculos, miserebatque non poenæ magis homines quam sceleris, quo pœnam meriti essent: illos, eo potissimum anno, 25 patriam liberatam, patrem liberatorem, consulatum ortum ex domo Junia, patres, plebem, quidquid deorum hominumque Romanorum esset, induxisse in animum ut superbo quondam regi, tum infesto exsuli, proderent. Consules in sedem processere suam, missique lectores ad sumendum supplicium 30 nudatos virgis cædunt securique feriunt, cum inter omne tempus pater vultusque et os ejus spectaculo esset, eminenti animo patrio inter publicæ pœnæ ministerium. Secundum pœnam nocentium, ut in utramque partem arcendis sceleribus exemplum nobile esset, præmium indici pecunia ex æra 35 rio, libertas et civitas data. Ile primum dicitur vindicta liberatus. Quidam vindictæ quoque nomen tractum ab illo putant; Vindicio ipsi nomen fuisse. Post illum observatum, ut, qui ita liberati essent, in civitatem accepti viderentur.

VI.

His, sicut acta erant, nuntiatis, incensus Tarquinii non dolore solum tantæ ad irritum caudentis spei, sed etiam odio iraque, postquam dolo viam obseptam vidit, bellum aperte mobilendum ratus circumire supplex Etruriae urbes; orare maxime Veientes Tarquiniensesque, ne se ortum, ejusdem sanguinis, extorrem gentem ex tanto modo regno, cum liberis adolescentibus ante oculos suos perire sinerent. Alios peregre in regnum Romam accitos: se 10 regem, augentem bello Romanum imperium, a proximis scelerata conjuratione pulsum. Eos inter se, quia nemo unus satis dignus regno visus sit, partes regni rapuisses; bona sua diripienda populo dedisse, ne quis expers sceleris esset. Patriam se regnumque suum repetere, 15 et persequi ingratos cives velle. Ferrent opem, adjuvarent; suas quoque veteres injurias ultum irent, totiens caesas legiones, agrum ademptum. Hæc moverunt Veientes; ac pro se quiasque Romano saltem duce ignominias demendas belloque amissa repetenda minaciter fremunt. Tarquinienses nomen ac cognatio movet: pulchrum videbatur suos Romæ regnare. Ita duo duarum civitatum exercitus ad repetendum regnum belloque persequendos Romanos scuti Tarquinium. Postquam in agrum Romanum ventum est, obviam hosti consules eunt. Valerius quadrato agmine peditem ducit; Brutus ad explorandum cum equitatu antecessit. Eodem modo primus eques hostium agminis fuit; præerat Arruns Tarquinius, filius regis: rex ipse cum legionibus sequebatur. Arruns ubi ex lictoribus procul consulem esse, deinde jam proprius ac certius facie quoque Brutum cognovit, inflammas tum ira “ille est vir” inquit “qui nos extorres expulit patria. Ipse en ille, nostris decoratus insignibus, magnifice incedit. Di regum ultores adeste.” Concitat calcaribus equum, atque in ipsum infestus consulem dirigit. Sensit in se iri Brutus. Decorum erat tum ipsis capessere pugnam ducibus; avide itaque se certaminis offert: adeoque infestis animis concurrerunt, neuter, dum hostem vulneraret, sui protegendi corporis membra, ut contrario icu per parmam uterque transfixus, duabus hærentes hastis moribundi ex equis lapsi sint. Simul et cetera equestris pugna cepit; neque ita multo post et pedes superveniunt. Tbi varia victoria et velut æquo Marte pugnatum est: dextera utrimque cornua vicere, lèva superata. Veientes, vinci ab Romano milite adsueti, fusi fugati; Tarquiniensis novus hostis non stetit solum, sed etiam ab sua parte Romanum pepulit.

Ita cum pugnatum esset, tantus terror Tarquinium atque Etruscos incessit, ut, omissa irrita re, nocte ambo exercitus, Veiens Tarquiniensisque, suas quisque abirent domos. Adjiciunt miracula huic pugnæ: silentio proximæ noctis ex silva Arsia ingentem editam vocem; Silvani vocem eam creditam; hec dicta, uno plus Tuscorum cecidisse in acie;

Consuli deinde, qui superfuerat (ut sunt mutabiles vulgani animi), ex favore non invidia modo sed suspicio etiam cum atroci crimine orta. Regnum eum adfectare fama ferebat, quia nec collegam subrogaverat in locum Bruti, et ædificarebat in summa Velia; ibi alto atque munito loco arcem inexpugnabilem fieri. Hæc dicta vulgo creditaque cum indignitate angerent consulis animum, vocato ad consilium populo, summissis fascis, in contionem escendit. Gratum id multitudini spectaculum fuit, summissa sibi esse imperii insignia, confessionemque factam populi quam consulis majestatem vimque majorem esse. Ibi audire jussis consul laudare fortunam collegæ, quod liberata patria, in summo honore, pro re publica dimicans, matura gloria necdum se vertente in invidiam, mortem occubuisset. Se superstitem gloriae suæ ad crimen atque invidiam superesse; ex liberatore patriæ ad Aquilios se Vitelliosque recidisse. "Numquamne ergo" inquit "ulla adeo a vobis spectata virtus erit, ut suspicione violari nequeat? Ego me, illum acerrimum regum hostem, ipsum cupiditatis regni crimen subitum timerem? Ego, si in ipsa arce Capitolioque habitarem, metui me crederem posse a civibus meis? Tam levi momento mea apud vos fama pendet? Adeone est fundata leviter fides, ut, ubi sim, quam qui sim, magis referat? non obstabunt Publìi Valerii ædes libertati vesträ, Quirites; tota erit vobis Velia. Deferam non in planum modo ædes, sed colli etiam subjiciam, ut vos supra suspectum me civem habitetis. In Velia ædificent, quibus melius quam P. Valerio creditur libertas." Delata confestim materia omnis infra Veliam, et, ubi nunc Vicæ Potæ est, domus in infimo clivo ædificata.

Legend of Horatius Cocles. —Defence of the Sublician bridge.

Cum hostes adessent, pro se quisque in urbem ex agris demigrant, urbem ipsam sepiunt præsidiiis. Alia muris, alia Tiberi objecto videbantur tuta. Pons sublicius iter pæne hostibus dedit, ni unus vir fuisset, Horatius Cocles (id munimentum illo die fortuna urbis Romanæ habuit); qui, positus forte in statione pontis, cum captum repentino impetu Janiculum atque inde citatos decurrere hostes vidisset, trepidamque turbam suorum arma ordinesque relinquere, reprehensam singulos, obsessens, obtestansque detm et hominum fidem testabatur, nequidquam deserto præsidio eos fugere. Si transitum pontem a tergo reliquisserent, jam plus hostium in Palatio Capitolioque quam in Janiculo fore. Itaque mo- nere, prædicere, ut pontem ferro, igni, quacumque vi possint, interrumpant: se impetum hostium, quantum corpore uno posset obsistit, excepturum; Vadit inde in primum aditum pontis; insignisque inter conspecta cedentium pugna terga, obversis comminus ad ineundum prælium armis, ipso miraculo audaciae obstupescit hostes. Duos tamen cum eo pudor tenuit, Sp. Lartium ac T. Herminium, ambos claros genere factisque. Cum his primam periculi procellam, et quod tumultuosissimum pugnae erat, parumper sustinuit. Deinde eos quoque ipsos, exigua parte pontis relictâ, revocantibus qui rescindebant, cedere in tutum coegit. Circumferens inde truces minaciter ocoulos ad proceres Etruscorum, nunc singulos provocare, nunc increpare omnes, servitia regum superborum, suae libertatis immemores, alienam oppugi- natum venire. Cunctati aliquamdiu sunt, dum alius alium, ut prælium incipient, circumspectant. Pudor deinde commodvit aciem, et, clamore sublato, undique in unum hostem tela conjiciunt. Quæ cum in objecto cuncta scuto hæsis- sent, neque ille minus obstinatus ingenti pontem obtineret gradu, jam impetu conabantur detrudere virum, cum simul fragor rupti pontis, simul clamor Romanorum, alacritate per-

Porsena, primo conatu repulsus, consiliis ab oppugnanda urbe ad obsidendum versis, praesidio in Janiculo locato, ipse in plano ripisque Tiberis castra posuit, navibus undique accitis, et ad custodiam, ne quid Romam frumenti subvehi sineret, et ut praedatum milites trans flumen per occasiones aliis atque aliis locis traiiceret; brevique adeo infestum omnem Romanum agrum reddidit, ut non cetera solum ex agris, sed pecus quoque omne in urbe compelleretur, neque quisquam extra portas propellere auderet. Hoc tantum licentiae Etrus- cis, non metu magis, quam consilio concessum. Namque Valerius consul, intentus in occasionem multos simul et effusos improviso adoriundi, in parvis rebus negligens ulterior, gravem se ad majora vindicem servabat. Itaque, ut elicet praebeatores, edicit suas, postero die frequentes porta Esquilina, qua avertissima ab hoste erat, expellerent pecus scitu- ros id hostes ratus, quod in obsidione et fame servitia infida transfugerent. XII.

Obsidio erat nihil minus et frumenti cum summa caritate inopia, sedendoque expugnaturnum se urbem spem Porsena habebat, cum C. Mucius, adolescens nobilis, cui indignum videbatur populum Romanum servientem, cum sub regibus esset, nullo bello nec ab hostibus 5 ullis obsessum esse, liberum eundem populum ab iisdem Etruscis obsideri, quorum sæpe exercitus fuderit—itaque magno audacique aliquo facinore eam indignitatem vindicandam ratus, primo sua sponte penetrare in hostium castra constituit; dein metuens, ne, si consulum injussu et ignaris omnibus iret, forte reprehensus a custodibus Romanis retraheretur ut transfuga, fortuna tum urbis crimen adfirmante, senatum adit. “Transire Tiberim” inquit, “patres, et intrare, si possim, castra hostium volo, non prædo, nec populationum in vicem ultor: majus, si di juvant, in animo est facinus.” Approbant patres: abdito intra vestem ferro proficiscitur. Ubi eo venit, in confer-tissima turba prope regium tribunal constitit. Ibi cum stipendium militibus forte daretur, et scriba cum rege sedens pari fere ornatu multa ageret, eum milites vulgo adirent, timens sciscitari, uter Por20 sena esset, ne ignorando regem semet ipse aperiaret quis esset, quo temere traxit fortuna facinus, scribam pro rege obtruncat. Vadentem inde, qua per trepidam turbam cruento mucrone sibi ipse fecerat viam, cum, concursu ad clamorem facto, comprehensum regii satellites retraxissent, ante tribunal regis destitutus, tum quoque inter tantas fortunae minas metuendus magis quam metuens, "Romanus sum" inquit, "civis, C. Mucium vocant. Hostis hostem occidere volui; nec ad mortem minus animi est quam fuit ad cædem: et facere et pati fortia Romanum est. Nec unus in 30 te ego hos animos gessi: longus post me ordo est idem pe- tentium decus. Proinde in hoc discrimen, si juvat, accingere, ut in singulas horas capite dimices tuo, ferrum hostemque in vestibulo habeas regiae. Hoc tibi juventus Romana indicimus bellum: nullam aciem, nullum prœlium timueris; 35 uni tibi et cum singulis res erit." Cum rex, simul ira infensus periculoque conterritus, circumdari ignes minitabant, dus juberet, nisi exprimeret propere, quas insidiarum sibi minas per ambages jaceret: "En tibi" inquit, "ut sentias, quam vile corpus sit iis, qui magnam gloriam vident;" dixit 40 tramque accenso ad sacrificium foculo inijicit. Quam cum velut alienato ab sensu torreret animo, prope attonitus mira- culo rex, cum ab sede sua prosiluisset, amoverique ab alta- ribus juvenem jussisset, "Tu vero ab" inquit, "in te magis quam in me hostilia ausus. Juberem macte virtute esse, si 45 pro mea patria ista virtus staret: nunc jure belli liberum te, intactum inviolatumque hinc dimitto." Tunc Mucius, quasi remunerans meritum "quando quidem" inquit "est apud te virtuti honos, ut beneficio tuleris a me, quod minis ne- quisti, trecenti conjuravimus principes juventutis Romanæ, 50 ut in te hac via grassaremur. Mea prima sors fuit; ceteri, ut cuique ceciderit primo, quoad te opportunum fortuna de- derit, suo quisque tempore aderunt."

Consules M. Valerius P. Postumius. Eo anno bene pugnatum cum Sabinis; consules triumpharunt. Majore inde mole Sabini bellum parabant. Adversus eos, et ne quid simul ab Tusculo, unde etsi non apertum, suspense tamen bellum erat, repentini periculi oreretur, P. Valerius quartum T. Lucretius iterum consules facti. tione, dein prœlio, adfixissent opes hostium, ut diu nihil artibus, anno post, Agrippa Menenio P. Postumio con-sulibus, moritur, gloria ingenti, copiis familiaribus adeo exi-guis, ut funeri sumptus desset: de publico est datus. Lucis bellum initum; fusoque ingenti exercitu, qui se ingre-dientibus fines consulibus ferociter obtulerat, omne Auruncum bellum Pometiam compulum est. Nec magis post prœlium quam in prœlio caedibus temperatum est: et caesi verunt. Ne ab obsidibus quidem, qui trecenti accepti numero erant, ira belli abstinuit. Et hoc anno Romœ trium-phantum.

Secuti consules Opiter Verginius Sp. Cassius Pometiam primo vi dieinde vineis aliisque ope-ribus oppugnarunt. In quos Aurunci, magis jam inexpiali odio, quam spe aliqua aut occasione, coorti, cum plures igni, quam ferro, 5 armati excucurrisssent, caede incendioque cuncta complent.
Vineis incensis, multis hostium vulneratis et occisis, consulum quoque alterum (verum nomen auctores non adjiciunt) gravi vulnere ex equo dejectum prope interfecerunt. Romam inde male gesta re reditum; inter multos saucios consul spe incerta vitae relatus. Interjecto deinde haud magno spatio, quod vulneribus curandis supploendoque exercitui satis esset, cum ira majore belli tum viribus etiam auctis Pometiae arma illata. Et cum, vinceis refectis aliaque mole belli, jam in eo esset, ut in muros evaderet miles, deditio est facta. Ceterum nihilominus minus fæde, dedita urbe, quam si capta foret, Aurunci passim principes securi percussi, sub corona venierunt coloni alii; oppidum dirutum; ager venit. Consules magis ob iras graviter ultas, quam ob magnitudinem perfecti belli triumphantur.

plebem metus incessit, ut intentiones essent ad dictum parentum. Neque enim, ut in consulis, qui pari potestate sent, alterius auxilium, neque provocatio erat, neque ullam usquam nisi in cura parentis auxilium. Sabinis etiam creatus Romae dictator eo magis, quod propter se creatum crediderant, metum incussit. Itaque legatos de pace mittunt; quibus orantibus dictatores senatumque, ut veniam erroris hominibus adolescentibus darent, responsum, ignosci adolescentibus posse, senibus non posse, qui bella ex bellis sererent. Actum tamen est de pace; impetrataque foret, si quod impensa factum in bellum erat, prestant Sabini (id enim postulatum erat) in animum induxissent. Bellum in 35 dictum: tacitae induitae quietum annum tenueret.

His consulis Fidenae obsessae, Crustumeria capta; Praeneste ab Latinis ad Romanos descivit. Nec ultra bellum Latinum, glissens jam per aliquot annos, dilatatum. A. Postumius dictator T. Æbutius magister equitum magnis copiis peditem equitumque profecti, ad lacum Regillum, in agro Tusculano, agmini hostium occurrerunt: et quia Tarquinios esse in exercitu Latinorum auditum est, sustineri ira non potuit, quin extemplo conflagrent. Ergo etiam praelium aliquanto quam cetera gravior atque atrocius fuit. Non enim duces ad regendam modo consilio rem adfuere, sed suis met ipsi corporibus dimicantes miscuere certamina. Nec quis 15 quam procerum ferme huc aut illa ex acie sine vulnere, praeter dictatorem Romanum, excessit. In Postumium prima in acie suos adhortantem instruentemque Tarquinius Superbus, quamquam jam aetate et viribus erat gravior, equum infestus admissit; ictusque ab latere concursu suorum receptus in tutum est. Et ad alterum cornu Æbutius, ma-

Account of the conflict continued. — The Romans finally prove victorius, and take the camp of the enemy. Referentibus jam pedem ab ea parte Romani, M. Valerius, Publicolae frater, conspicatus ferocem juvenem Tarquinium, ostentantem se in prima exsulm acie, domestica etiam gloria accensus, ut, cujus familia decus eject reges erant, ejusdem interflecti forent, subdit calcaria equo et Tarquinium infesto spiculo petit. Tarquinius retro in agmen suorum infenso cessit hosti. Valerium, temere invectum in exsulm aciem, ex transverso quidam adortus transfigit; nec quidquam equitis vulnere equo retardato, 10 moribundus Romanus, labentibus super corpus armis, ad terram defluxit. Dictator Postumius postquam cecidisse talem virum, exsules ferociter citato agmine invehii, sua perculsos cedere animadvertit, cohorti sue, quam delectam manum presidii causa circa se habebat, dat signum, ut quem 15 suorum fugientem viderint, pro hoste habeant. Ita metu ancipiti versi a fuga Romani in hostem, et restituta acies. Cohors dictatoris tum primum praelium iniiit. Integris corporibus animisque fessos adorti exsules cædunt. Ibi alia inter proceres coorta pugna. Imperator Latinus, ubi co-20 hortem exsulm a dictatore Romano prope circumventam vidit, ex subsidiariis manipulos aliquot in primam aciem se-cum rapit. War with the Volsci. — They see for peace and give hostages. — Not long after they make, in conjunction with the Hernici, secret preparations for war. — The Latins give information to the Romans, and are rewarded accordingly.

Cum Volscorum gente, Latino bello, neque pax neque bellum fuerat: nam et Volsci comparaverant auxilia, quæ mitterent Latinis, nimirum maturatum ab dictatore Romano esset; et maturavit Romanus, ne prælio uno cum Latine Volscosque contenderet. Hac ira consules in Volscum agrum legiones duxere. Volscos consilliæ pœnam non metuentes necopinata res perculit: armorum immemores obsides dant trecentos principum a Cora at-10 que Pometia liberos: ita sine certamine inde abductæ legiones. Nec ita multo post Volscis levatis metu suum rediit ingenium: rursus occultum parant bellum, Hernicis in societatem armorum adsumptis. Legatos quoque ad sollicitandum Latium passim dimittunt. 15 Sed recens ad Regillum lacum accepta clades Latinos ira odioque ejus, quicumque arma suaderet, ne ab legatis quidem violandis abstinuist. Comprehensos Volscos Roman duxere; ibi traditi consultibus, indicatumque est Volscos Hernicosque parare bellum Romanis. Relata re ad senatum, adeo fuit gratum patribus, ut et captivorum sex milia Latinis remitterent, et de fœdere, quod prope in perpetuum negatum fuerat, rem ad novos magistratus trajicerent. Enimvero tum Latini gaudere facto, pacis auctores in in-genti gloria esse. Coronam auream Jovi donum in Capit-25 tolium mittunt. Cum legatis donoque, qui captivorum re-missi ad suos fuerant, magna circumfusa multitudo venit.
Pergunt domos eorum, apud quem quisque servierant; gra-tias agunt, liberaliter habiti cultique in calamitate sua; inde hospitia jungunt. Numquam alias ante publice privatumque 30 Latinum nomen Romano imperio conjunctius fuit.

XXIII.

Sed et bellum Volscum imminebat, et civitas secum ipsa discons intestino inter patres plebemque flagrabit odio, maxime propter neoxos ob ase alienum. Fremebant, se, foris pro libertate et imperio dimicantes, domi a civi-bus captos et oppressos esse; tutioremque in bello, quam in pace, et inter hostes, quam inter cives,(libertatem plebis esse): invidiam-que eam, sua sponte glissentem, insignis unius calamitas accedit. Magno natu quidam cum 10 omnia malorum suorum insignibus se in forum pro dise
t. Obsita erat squalore vestis, foedior corporis habitus pallore ac macie perempti. Ad hoc promissa barba et capilli effe-raverant speciem oris. Noscitabatur tamen in tanta defor-mitate, et ordines duxisse aiebant, aliaque militiae decora 15 vulgo, miserantes eum, jactabant. Ipse, testes honestarum aliquot locis pugnarum, cicatrices adverso pectore ostentabat. Sciscitantibus, unde ille habitus unde deformitas, cum circumfusa turba esset prope in contionis modum, Sabino bello ait se militantem, quia propter populationes agri non 20 fructu modo caruerit, sed villa incensa fuerit, direpta omnia, pecora abacta, tributum inquo suo tempore imperatum a es alienum fecisse: id, cumulatum usuris, primo se agro paterno avitoque exuisset, deinde fortunis aliis; postremo, ve-lut tabem, pervenisse ad corpus: ductum se ab creditore, 25 non in servitium, sed in ergastulum et carnificinam esse.
Inde ostentare tergum, foedum recentibus vestigiis verbe-rum. Ad hae visa auditaque clamor ingens oritur. Non jam foro se tumultus continet, sed passim totam urbe pervadit: nexit, vesti. solutique, se undeque in publicum 30 proripiant, implorant Quiritium fidem. Nullo loco deest seditionis voluntarius comes. Multis passim agminibus per omnes vias cum clamore in forum curritur. Magno cum periculo suo, qui forte patrum in foro erant, in eam turbam inciderunt. Nec temperatum manibus foret, ni propere 35 consules, P. Servilius et Ap. Claudius, ad comprimendam seditionem intervenissent. At in eos multitudo versa ostentare vincula sua deformitatemque aliam. Hae se meritos dicere, exprobrantes suam quisque alius alibi militi-tiam. Postulare multo minaciter magis quam suppliciter, 40 ut senatum vocarent; curiamque ipsi futuri arbitri moderato-tesque publici consilii circumstint. Paucae admodum patrum, quos casus obtulerat; contracti ab consulibus; ceteros metus non curia modo sed etiam foro arcebat. Nec agi quidquam per infrequiam poterat senatus. Tum vero 45 eludi atque extrahi se multitudo putare; et patrum qui abessent, non casu, non metu, sed impediendae rei causa ab-esse, et consules ipsos tergiversari; nec dubie ludibrio esse misericias suas. Jam prope erat, ut ne consulum quidem majestas coerceret iras hominum, cum incerti, morando an 50 veniendo plus periculi contraherent, tandem in senatum veniunt; frequenti tandem curia, non modo inter patres, sed ne inter consules quidem ipsos, satis conveniebat. Appius, vehementis ingenii vir, imperio consulari rem agendam censebat: uno aut altero adrepto, quieturos alios. Servilius, 55 lenibus remediiis aptior, concitatos animos flecti, quam fran-gi, putabat cum tutius tum facilius esse.

XXIV.

Inter haec major alius terror. Latini equi-tes cum tumultuoso advolant nuntio, Volscos

At vero curia, mēsta ac trepida aequipiti mutu et ab cive et ab hoste, Servilium consulem, cui ingenium magis populare erat, orare, ut tantis circumventāe terrōribus expedirem rem publicam. Tum consul, misso senatu, in contionem proddit. Ibi curae esse patriibus ostendit, ut consulatur plebi. Ceterum delibrationi de maxima quidem illā sed tamen parte civitatis, metum pro universa re publica intervenisse. Nec posse, cum hostes prope ad portas essent, bello prævertisse quidquam; nec, si sit laxamenti aliqua, aut plebi honōstem esse, nisi mercede prius accepta arma pro patria non cepisse; neque patriibus satis decorum, per metum potius, quam postmodo voluntate, afflictis civium suorum fortunis consuluisse. Contioni deinde edito addidit fidem, quo edixit, ne quis civem Romanum vinctum aut clausum teneret, quo minus ei nominis edendi apud consules potestas fieret; nec quis militis, donec in castris esset, bona possideret aut venderet, liberos nepotesve ejus moraretur. Hoc proposito edito, et qui aderant nēxi profiteri extemplo nomina; et undique ex tota urbe prōpien-tium se ex privato, cum retinendi ius creditorīorum non esset, concursus in forum, ut sacramentum dicerent, fieri. Magna ea manus fuit, neque aliōrum magis in Volscō bello virtus atque opera enuituit. Consul copias contra hostem educit; parvo dirimente intervallo castra ponit.

Fusis Auruncis, victor tot intra paucos dies bellis Romanus promissa consulis fidemque se-natus exspectabat; cum Appiua, et insita super-bia animo, et ut collegae vanam faceret fidem, quam asperrime poterat jus de creditis pecuniis dicere. Deinceps et qui ante nexi fuerant, creditorisibus tradebantur, et nectebantur alii.

Quod ubi cui militi incideret, collegam appellabat; concur-sus ad Servilium fiebat; illius promissa jactabant, illi expro-brabant sua quisque belli merita cicatricesque acceptas. Postulabant, ut aut referret ad senatum, aut ut auxilio esset consul civibus suis, imperator militibus. Movebant consu-lem hæc; sed tergiversari res cogerat: adeo in alteram cau-sam non collega solum praecps ierat, sed omnis factio nobilium. Ita, medium se gerendo, nec plebis vitavit odium, 15 nec apud patres gratiam inuit. Patres mollem consulem et ambitiosum rati, plebes fallacem; brevique apparuit ade-quasse eum Appii odium. Certamen consulsibus inciderat, uter dedicaret Mercurii ædem. Senatus a se rem ad populum rejecit: utri eorum dedicatio jussu populi data esset, 20 eum præesse annone, mercatorum collegium instituere, so-lemnia pro pontifice jussit suscipere. Populus dedicationem ædis dat M. Lætorio, primi pili centurioni: quod facile ap-pareret non tam ad honorem ejus, cui curatio altior fastigio suo data esset, factum, quam ad consulum ignominiam. Sæ-25

A. Verginius inde et T. Vetusius consulatum ineunt. Tum vero plebs, incerta quales habitura consules esset, coeitus nocturnos, pars Esquilliis, pars in Aventino, facere, ne in foro subitis trepidaret consiliis, et omnia temere ac fortuito aegeret. Eam rem consules rati, ut erat, perniciosam, ad patres deferunt. Sed de latam consulere ordine non licuit: adeo tumultuose excepta est clamoribus undique et indignatione patrum, si, quod imperio consu-10 lari exsequendum esset, invidiam ejus consules ad senatum rejecerant. Profecto, si essent in re publica magistratus, nullum futurumuisse Romæ nisi publicum consilium: nunc in mille curias contiones-que, cum alia in Esquiliis, alia in Aventino fiant concilia, dis-15 persam et dissipatam esse rem publicam. Unum hereule virum (id enim plus esse quam consulem) qualis Appius Claudius fuerit, momento temporis discussurum illos cœtus fuisse. Correpti consules, cum, quid ergo se facere vellent (nihil enim segniss molliusve quam patribus placeat actu-20 ros), percunctarentur, decernunt, ut dilectum quam acerrimum habeant: otio lascivire plebem. Dimisso senatu consules in tribunal escendunt, citant nominatim juniores. Cum ad nomen nemo responderet, circumfusa multitudo in contionis modum negare, ultra decipi plebem posse; numquam 25 unum militem habituros, ni præstaretur fides publica. Libertatem unicumque prius reddendam esse quam arma danda, ut pro patria civibusque non pro dominis pugnent. Consules, quid mandatum esset a senatu, videbant; sed eorum, qui intra parietes curiae ferociter loquerentur, neminem adesse 30 invidiæ suæ participem: et apparebat atroch cum plebe certamen. Prius itaque quam ultima experientur, senatum iterum consulere placuit. Tum vero ad sellas consulum prope convolare minimus quisque natu patrum, abdicare consulatum jubentes et deponere imperium, ad quod tuev-35 dum animus deesset.

iiis, qui in conspectu erant, dedita opera jubebunt. Cum staret tacitus, et circa eum aliquot hominum, ne forte violaretur, constituisset glo-10 bus, lectorem ad eum consules mittunt. Quo repulso, tum vero, indignum facinus esse clamatantes, qui patrum consulibus aderant, devolant de tribunali, ut lictori auxilio essent. Sed ab lectore, nihil aliud quam prendere prohibito, cum conversus in patres impetus 15 esset, consulum intercursu rixa sedata est; in qua tamen, sine lapide, sine telo, plus clamoris atque irarum, quam injuriae, fuerat. Senatus, tumultuose vocatus, tumultuosius consulitur, quaestionem postulantibus iiis qui pulsati fuerant, decernente ferocissimo quoque, non sententiis magis quam 20 clamore et strepitu. Tandem cum irae resedissent, exprobrantibus consulis nihil plus sanitatis in curia, quam in foro, esse, ordine consuli cepit. Tres fuere sententiae. P. Verginius rem non vulgabat: de iiis tantum, qui, fidem securi Publii Servilii consulis, Volsco, Aurunco, Sabinoque mili-25 tassent bello, agendum censebat. Titus Lartius, non id tempus esse, ut meritam tantummodo egressentur; totam plebem aere alieno demersam esse, nec sisti posse, ni omnibus consulatur: quin, si alia aliorum sit condicio, accendi magis discordiam quam sedari. Ap. Claudius, et natura im-30 mitis, et efferatus hinc plebis odio, illine patrum laudibus, non miseriis, ait, sed licentia tantum concitum turbarum, et lascivire magis plebem quam saevire. Id adeo malum ex provocacione natum: quippe minas esse consulum, non imperium, ubi ad eos, qui una peccaverint, provocare liceat. 35 "Agedum" inquit "dictatorem, a quo provocatio non est, creemus. Jam hic, quo nunc omnia ardent, conticiscet furor. Pulset tum mihi lectorem, qui sciet jus de tergo vitaque sua penes unum illum esse, cujus majestatem violarit."

M. Valerius chosen dictator.

Multis, ut erat, horrida et atrox videbatur Appii sententia; rursus Verginii Lartiiique exemplo haud salubres. Utique Lartii putabat sententiam, quae totam fidem tolleret:
medium maxime et moderatum utroque con-silium Verginii habebatur. Sed factione re-spectuque rerum privatarum, quae semper offecerent officientque publicis consiliis, Appius vicit; ac prope fuit ut dictator ille idem crearetur. Quae res utique alienasset plebem periculosisissimo tempore, cum Volsci Æquique et Sabini forte 10 una omnes in armis esset. Sed curae fuit consulibus et senioribus patrum, ut imperium, suo vehemens, mansueto permetteretur ingenio. M. Valerium dictatorem, Volsci filium, creant. Plebes, etsi adversus se creatum dictatorem videbat, tamen, cum provocationem fratris lege haberet, nihil 15 ex ea familia triste nec superbum timebat. Edictum deinde a dictatore propositum confirmavit animos, Servilii fere consulis edicto conveniens. Sed et homini et potestati melius rati credi, omissa certamine nomina dedere. Quantus numquam ante exercitus, legiones decem effectae; ternae inde 20 date consulibus, quattuor dictator usus. Nec jam poterat bellum differri. Æqui Latinum agrum invaserant. Oratores Latinorum ab senatu petebant, ut aut mitterent subsidium, aut se ipso tuendorum finium causa capere arma sinnerant.
Tutius visum est defendi inermes Latinos, quam pati retracttare arma. Vetusius consul missus est. Is finis populationibus fuit. Cessere Æqui campis, locoque magis quam armis freti summis se jugis montium tutabantur. Alter consul in Volscos profectus, ne et ipse tereret tempus, vastandis maxime agris hostem ad conferenda propius castra dimicandum 30 que acie excivit. Medio inter castra campo, ante suum quia que vallum, instis signis constitere. Multitudine alian-tum Volsci superabant; itaque effusi et contemptim pugnam iniere. Consul Romanus nec promovit aciem, nec clamorem reddi passus, defixis pilis stare suos jussit; ubi ad manum 35 venisset hostis, tum coortos tota vi gladiis rem gerere. Vol-scri, cursu et clamore fessi, cum se velut stupentibus metu intulissent Romanis, postquam impressionem sensere ex ad-verso factam, et ante oculos micare gladios, haud secus quam si in insidias incidissent, turbati vertunt terga; et ne ad fugam quidem satis virium fuit, quia cursu in prœlimium ierant.
Romani contra, quia principio pugnæ quieti steterant, vigen-tes corporibus, facile adepti fessos, et castra impetu ceperunt, et, castris exutum hostem Velitras persecuti, uno agmine vic-tores cum victis in urbem irrupere: plusque ibi sanguinis, 45 promiscua omnium generum caede, quam in ipsa dimica-tione factum. Paucis data venia, qui inermes in ditionem venerunt.

XXXI.

Dum hæc in Volscis geruntur, dictator Sabinos, ubi longe plurimum belli fuerat, fundit fugatque exuquite castris. Equitatu immisso mediam turbaverat hostium aciem, qua, dum se cornua latius pandunt, parum apte intror-sum ordinibus aciem firmaverant; turbatos pedes invasit. Eodem impetu castra capta de-bellatumque est. Post pugnam ad Regillum lacum non alia illis annis puna clarius fuit.
Dictator triumphans urbem invehitur. Super 10 solitos honores locus in circo ipsi posterisque ad spectaculum datus; sella in eo loco curulis posita. Vol-scis devictis Veliternus ager ademptus; Velitras coloni ab urbe missi et colonia deducta. Cum Æquis post aliquanto pugnatum est, invito quidem consule, quia loco inquo sub-15 eundum erat ad hostes: sed milites extrahi rem criminantes, ut dictor, priusquam ipsi redirent in urbem, magistratu abiret, irritaque, sicut ante consulis, promissa ejus caderent, perpulere, ut forte temere in adversos montes agmen erigeret. Id male commissum ignavia hostium in bonum vertit; 20 qui, priusquam ad conjectum teli veniretur, obstupefacti au-dacia Romanorum, relictis castris, quæ munitissimis tene-rant locis, in aversas valles desiluere; ubi satis prædæ et victoria incruenta fuit.

Ita trifariam re bello bene gesta, de domesticarum rerum 25 eventu nec patribus nec plebi cura descesserat. Tanta cum gratia, tum arte praeparaverant feneratores, quæ non modo plebem, sed ipsum etiam dictatorem frustrarentur. Namque Valerius, post Vetusii consulis reeditum, omnium actionum in senatu primam habuit pro victore populo, rettulitque, 30 quid de nexis fieri placeret. Quæ cum rejecta relatio esset, "Non placeo" inquit "concordiæ auctor. Optabitis, me dius fidius, prope diem, ut mei similes Romana plebes patronos habeat. Quod ad me attinet, neque frustrabor ultra civès meos, neque ipse frustra dictator ero. Discordiæ in-testinæ, bellum externum fecere, ut hoc magistratu egeret res publica. Pax foris parta est, domi impeditur. Privati-tus potius quam dictator seditioni interero." Ita curia egressus dictatura se abdicavit. Apparuit causa plebi, suam vi-cem indignantem magistratu abisse. Itaque, velut persoluta 40 fide, quoniam per eum non stetisset, quin præstaretur, decedentem domum cum favore ac laudibus prosecuti sunt.

Consules deinde T. Geganius P. Minucius facti. Eo anno cum et foris quieta omnia a bello essent, et domi sanata discordia, aliud multo gravior malum civitatem invasit; caritas primum annonae, ex in cultis per secessio- nem plebis agris; fames deinde, qualis clausis solet. Ventumque ad interitum servitiorum utique et plebis esset, ni consules providissent, dimissis passim ad frumentum coemendum, non in Etruriam modo dextris ab Ostia litori- bus, lavoque per Volscos mari usque ad Cumas, sed quasitum in Siciliam quoque: adeo finitimorum odia longinquis coegerat indigere auxiliis. Frumentum Cumis cum coemptum esset, naves pro bonis Tarquiniorum ab Aristodemo tyranno, qui heres erat, retentae sunt. In Volscis Pompintoque ne emi quidem potuit; periculum quoque ab impetu hominum ipsis frumentatoribus fuit. Ex Tuscis frumentum Tiberi venit: eo sustenta est plebs. Incommodo bello in tam artis commen- tibus vexati forent, ni Volscos jam moentes arma pestilen- tia ingens invasisset. Ea clade conterratae hostium animis, etiam ubi ea remisisset, terrore aliquo teneretur, et Venetis auxere numerum colonorum Romanorum, et Norbae in montes novam coloniam, quae arx in Pompinto esset, miserunt. M. Minucio deinde et A. Sempronio consulibus, magna vis frumenti ex Sicilia ad victa; agitatufque in senatu, quanti plebi dare tur. Multi venisse tempus premendae plebis postabunt, recuperandique jura, quae extorta secessione ac vi patriibus essent. In primis Marcius Coriolanus, hostis tribu- niciæ potestatis, "si annonam" inquit "veterem volunt, jus pristinum reddant patribus. Cur ego plebeios magistratus, cur Sicinium potentem video, sub jugum missus, tamquam

Et senatui nimis atrox visa sententia est, et plebem ira prope armavit: Fame se jam sicut hostes peti, cibo victuque fraudari; peregri-num frumentum, quae sola alimenta ex inspe-rato fortuna dederit, ab ore rapi, nisi Caio 5 Marcio victi dedantur tribuni, nisi de ergo plebis Romanæ satisiat. Eum sibi carnificem novum exortum, qui aut mori aut servire ju-beat. In exeuntem e curia impetus factus esset, ni peropportune tribuni diem dixissent. 10 Ibi ira est suppressa: se judicem quisque, se dominum vitae necisque inimici factum videbat. Contemptim primo Marcius audiebat minas tribunicias: auxilii non poenæ jus datum illi potestati, plebisque non patrum tribunos esse. Sed adeo infensa erat 15 cocta plebs, ut unius poena defungendum esset patribus. Restiterunt tamen adversa invidia, usque sunt qua suis quisque qua totius ordinis viribus. Ac primo temptata res est, si, dispositis clientibus, abстерrendo singulos a coitionibus conciliisque disjicere rem possent. Universi deinde proces-20 sere (quidquid erat patrum res diceres) precibus plebem exposcentes, unum sibi civem, unum senatorem, si innocentem absolvere nollent, pro nocente donarent. Ipse cum die

Inde in curiam jussu consulum delatus eadem illa cum patribus ingenti omnium admiratione narrasset, ecce aliud miraculum: qui captus omnibus membris delatus in curiam esset, eum functum officio pedibus suis domum redisse traditum 30 memoriae est.

Ludi quam amplissimi ut feren, senatus decrevit. Ad eos ludos auctore Attio Tullio vis magna Volsorum venit. Priusquam committerentur ludi, Tullius, ut domi compositum cum Marcio fuerat, ad consules venit; dicit esse quæ secreto agere de re publica velit. Arbitris remotis “invitus” inquit, “quod sequius sit, de meis civibus loquor; non tamen admissum quidquam ab iis criminatum venio, sed cautum, ne admittant. Nimi plus quam ve-10 lim nostrorum ingenia sunt mobilia: multis id cladibus sensimus, quippe qui non nostro merito, sed vestra patientia incolumes simus. Magna hic nunc Volsorum multitudo est; ludi sunt; spectaculo intenta civitas erit. Memini, 15 quid per eandem occasionem ab Sabinorum juventute in hac urbe commissum sit. Horret animus, ne quid incon- sulte ac temere fiat. Hæc nostra vestraque causa prius dicenda vobis, consules, ratus sum. Quod ad me attinet, extemplo hinc domum abire in animo est, ne cujus facti 20 dictive contagione præsens violer.” Hæc locutus abit. Consules cum ad patres rem dubiam sub auctore certo detulissent, auctor magis, ut fit, quam res ad præcavendum vel ex supervacuo movit; factoque senatus consulto, ut urbem excederent Volsi, præcones dimittuntur, qui omnes eos 25 proficisci ante noctem juerent. Ingens pavor primo discurrentes ad suas res tollendas in hospitia perculit. Proficisc-centibus deinde indignatio oborta, se, ut conseleratos contaminatosque, ab ludis, festis diebus, cætu quodam modo hominum deorumque abactos esse.

XXXVIII.

Cum prope continuato agmine iient, præ-gressus Tullius ad caput Ferentinum, ut quis-que veniret, primores eorum excipiens, que-rendo indignandoque, et eos ipsos, sedulo audientes secunda iræ verba, et per eos multi-tudinem aliam in subjectum viæ campum de-duxit. Ibi in contiohis modum orationem exorsus "veteres populi Romani injurias cladesque gentis Volsorum, ut om-nia," inquit "obliviscamini alia, hodiernam hanc contume-liam quo tandem animo fertis, qua per nostram ignominiam ludos commiseres? An non sensistis triumphatum hodie de vobis esse? vos omnibus, civibus, peregrinis, tot finitimis populis spectacula abeuntes fuisse; vestras conjuges vestros liberos traductos per ora hominum? Quid eos, qui audivere vocem praæconis, quid, qui nos videre abeuntes, quid eos, qui 15 huic ignominioso agmini fuere obvi, existimasse putatis, nisi aliquod profecto nefas esse, quo, si intersimus spectaculo, violaturi simus ludos piaculumque merituri; ideo nos ab sede piorum cætu concilioque abigi? Quid deinde? illud non succurrir, vivere nos, quod maturarimus proficisci? si 20 hoc profectio et non fugâ est. Et hanc urbem vos non ho-stium ducitis, ubi si unum diem morati essetis, moriendum omnibus fuit? Bellum vobis indictum est magno eorum malo, qui indixere, si viri estis." Ita, et sua sponte irarum pleni et incitati, domos inde digressi sunt, instigandoque 25 suos quisque populos effecerere, ut omne Volscum nomen de-ficeret.
XXXIX.

Imperatores ad id bellum de omnium populorum sententia lecti Attius Tullius et C. Marcius exsul Romanus, in quo aliquanto plus spei repositum. Quam spem nequaquam fefellit, ut facile appareret ducibus validiorem quam exercitu rem Romanam esse. Circeios profectus primum colonos inde Romanos expulit, liberamque eam urbem Volscis tradidit. Inde in Latinam viam transversis tramitibus transgressus, Satricum, Longulam, Poluscam, Corio-10 los, Mugillam; hae Romanioppida ademit. Inde Lavinium receptit; tum deinceps Corbionem, Vitelliam, Trebium, Labicos, Pedum cepit. Postremum ad urbem a Pedo ducit, et ad fossas Cluilias, quinque ab urbe milia passuum, castris positis, populatur inde agrum Romanum, custodibus inter popolatores missis, qui patriciorum agros intactos servarent, sive insensus plebi magis, sive ut discordia inde inter patres plebenque oreretur. Quæ profecto orta esset (adeo tribuni jam ferocem per se plebem criminando in primores civitatis instigabant), sed externus timor, maxi-15 mum concordiæ vinculum, quamvis suspectos insensosque inter se jungebat animos. Id modo non conveniebat, quod senatus consulesque nusquam alibi spem quam in armis ponebant, plebes omnia quam bellum malebat. Sp. Nautius jami et Sex. Furius consules erant. Eos recensentes legiones, 25 præsidia per muros aliaque, in quibus stationes vigiliæisque esse placuerat, loca distribuentes, multitudo ingens pacem poscentium primum seditioso clamore conterruit; deinde vocare senatum, referre de legatis ad C. Marcium mittendis coegit. Acceperunt relationem patres, postquam apparuit 30 labare plebis animos; missique de pace ad Marcium oratores atrox responsum rettulerunt: si Volscis ager redderetur, posse agi de pace: si præda belli per otium frui velint, memorem se et civium injuriae, et hospitum beneficii, adnisi-rum, ut appareat exsilio sibi irritatos, non fractos animos esse. Iterum deinde iudem missi non recipiuntur in castra. Sacerdotes quoque, suis insignibus velatos, isse supplices ad castra hostium traditum est; nihil magis quam legatos flexisse animum.

XL.

Tum matronae ad Veturiam, matrem Coriolani, Volumniamque uxorem, frequentes coeunt. Id publicam consilium, an muliebris timor fuerit, parum invenio. Pervicere certe, ut et Veturia, magno natu mulier, et Volumnia, duos parvos ex Marcio ferens filios secum, in castra hostium irent, et, quoniam armis viri defendere urbem non possent, mulieres precibus laetissisque defenderent. Ubi ad castra ventum est, nuntiatumque Coriolano est adesse ingens mulierum agmen, in primo (ut qui nec publica majestate in legatis, nec in sacerdotibus tanta offusa oculis animoque religione motus esset), multo obstinatior adversus lacrimas muliebres erat. Dein familiarium quidam, qui insignem maeotitiae inter ceteras cognoverat Veturiam, inter nurum nepotesque stantem, “nisi me frustratur” inquit “oculi, mater tibi conjunxque et liberi adsunt.” Coriolanus, prope ut amens, consternatus ab sede sua cum ferret matri obvias complexum, mulier in iram ex precibus versa “sine, prius quam complexum accipio, sciam,” inquit, “ad hostem an ad filium venerim, captiva materne in castris tuis sim. In hoc me longa vita et infelix senecta traxit, ut exsulem te, deinde hostem viderem? Potuisti populari banc terram, quæ te genuit atque aluit? Non tibi quamvis infesto animo et mi naci perveneras, ingredienti fines ira cecidit? Non, cum in conspectu Roma fuit, succurrut ‘intra illa moenia domus ac penates mei sunt, mater, conjunx liberique?’ Ergo ego nisi peperissem, Roma non oppugnaretur; nisi filium haberem, libera in libera patria mortua essem. Sed ego nihil jam?

sum miserrima, diu futura sum: de his videris, quos, si per-gis, aut immatura mors aut longa servitus manet." Uxor deinde ac liberi amplexi, fletusque ab omni turba mulierum ortus, et comploratio sui patriaque, fregere tandem virum. 35 Complexus inde suos dimittit; ipse retro ab urbe castra movit. Abductis deinde legionibus ex agro Romano invidia rei oppressum perisse tradunt, alii alio leto. Apud Fabium, longe antiquissimum auctorem, usque ad senectutem vixisse eundem invenio: refert certe, hanc sæpe eum exacta ætate 40 usurpasse vocem, multo miserius seni exsilium esse. Non inviderunt laude sua mulieribus viri Romani: adeo sine obtrectatione gloriae alienae vivebatur: monumento quoque quod esset, templum Fortunae muliebri ædificatum dedica-tumque est. Rediere deinde Volsci, adjunctis Æquis, in 45 agrum Romanum, sed Æqui Attium Tullium haud ultra tulere ducem. Hinc ex certamine, Volsci Æquine imperato-rem conjuncto exercitui darent, seditio, deinde atrox præulum ortum. Ibi fortuna populi Romani duos hostium exercitus hauud minus pernicioso quam pertinaci certamine confecit. 50 Consules Titus Sicinius et C. Aquilius. Sicinio Volsci, Aquilio Hernici (nam ii quoque in armis erant) provincia evenit.
Eo anno Hernici devicti; cum Volscis æquo Marte discestato exacerbatoque in se militum odio. Obtinuere tamen patres, ut in Fabia gente consulatus maneret: M. Fabium consulem creant; Fabio collega Cn. Manlius datur.

XLIV.

Et hic annus tribunum auctorem legis agrariae habuit. Tib. Pontificius fuit. Is eandem viam, velut processisset Sp. Licinio, ingressus dilectum paulisper impediit. Perturbatis ite-rum patribus, Appius Claudius victam tribuni-ciam potestatem dicere, priore anno; in præsentia re ipsa, exemplo in perpetuum, quando inventum sit suis ipsam viribus dissolvi. Neque enim umquam defuturum, qui, et ex col-lega victoriam sibi, et gratiam melioris partis 10 bono publico velit quæsitam: et plures, si pluribus opus sit, tribunos ad auxilium consunum paratos fore, et unum vel adversus omnes satis esse. Darent modo et consules et pri-mares patrum operam, ut, si minus omnes, aliquos tamen ex tribunis rei publicæ ac senatu conciliarent. Praeceptis Appii moniti patres, et universi comiter ac benigne tribunos ap-pellare; et consulares, ut cuique eorum privatim aliquid juris adversus singulos erat, partim gratia, partim auctoritate, ob-tinnere, ut tribuniciæ potestatis vires salubres vellent rei publicæ esse: quattuorque tribunorum adversus unum moratorem publici commodi auxilio dilectum consules habent.
Inde ad Veiens bellum profecti, quo undique ex Etruria auxilia convenerant, non tam Veientium gratia concitata, 25 quam quod in spem ventum erat discordia intestina dissolvi rem Romanam posse. Principesque in omnium Etruriae populorum conciliiis fremeabant, æternas opes esse Romanas, nisi inter semet ipsi seditionibus sæviant. Id unum vene-

XLV.

Consules quoque Romani nihil præterea aliud quam suas vires, sua arma horrebant: memoria pessimi proximo bello exempli terrebat, ne rem committerent eo, ubi duæ simul acies timendæ essent. Itaque castris se tenebant, tam ancipiti periculo aversi: diem tem-pusque forsitam ipsum lenitum iras, sanitatemque animis adlaturum. Veiens hostis Etruscique eo magis præpropere agere; lacesse ad pugnam, primo obequando castris 10 provocandoque, postremo, ut nihil movebant, qua consules ipsos qua exercitum increpando: simulationem intestinæ discordiæ remedium timoris inventum; et consules magis non confidere quam non credere suis militibus. Novum seditioinis 15 genus, silentium otiumque inter armatos. Ad hæc in novitatem generis originisque, qua falsa, qua vera jacere. Hæc cum sub ipso vallo portisque streperent, haud ægre consules pati. At imperitæ multitudini nunc indignatio, nunc pudor pectora versare, et ab intestinis avertere malis: nolle inultos 20 hostes, nolle successum, non patribus, non consulibus; ex-terna et domestica odia certare in animis. Tandem superant externa: adeo superbe insolenterque hostis eludebat.
Frequentes in prætorium conveniunt, poscunt pugnam, postulant ut signum detur. Consules, velut deliberabundi, capita conferunt, diu colloquuntur. Pugnare cupiebant; sed retro revocanda et abdenda cupiditas erat, ut adversando remorandoque incitato semel militi adderent impetum. Reddi-tur responsum immaturam rem agi, nondum tempus pugnæ esse: castris se tenerent. Edicunt inde, ut abstineant pug-na: si quis injussu pugnaverit, ut in hostem animadversuros.
Ita dimissis, quo minus consules velle credunt, crescit ardo pugnandi. Accedunt insuper hostes ferocius multo, ut statuisse non pugnare consules cognitum est: quippe impune se insultaturos, non credi militi arma, rem ad ultimum seditionis erupturam, finemque venisse Romano imperio. His freti occursant portis, ingerunt probra, ægre abstinent quin castra oppugnent. Enimvero non ultra contumeliam pati Romanus posse: totis castris undique ad consules curritur.
Non jam sensim, ut ante, per centurionum principes postulant, sed passim omnes clamoribus agunt. Matura res erat; tergiversantur tamen. Fabius deinde, ad crescentem tumul-tum jam metu seditionis collega concedente, cum silentium classico fecisset: "Ego istos, Cn. Manli, posse vincere scio; velle ne scirem ipsi fecerunt. Itaque certum atque decretum est, non dare signum, nisi victores se redituros ex hac pugna jurant. Consulem Romanum miles semel in acie fefellit, deos numquam fallet." Centurio erat M. Flavoleius, inter primores pugnæ flagitator. "Victor" inquit, "M. Fabi, re-vertar ex acie." Si fallat, Jovem patrem, Graivumque Mar-tem, aliosque iratos invocat deos. Idem deinceps omnis exercitus in se quisque jurat. Juratis datur signum; arma capiunt; eunt in pugnam irarum speique pleni. Nunc jubent Etruscos probra jacere, nunc armatis sibi quisque lingua promptum hostem offerri. Omnium illo die, qua plebis, 55

Instruirur acies; nec Veiens hostis Etruscæque legiones detractant. Prope certa spes erat, non magis secum pugnâturos, quam pugnarint cum Æquis; majus quoque aliquod, in tam irritatis animis, et occasione ancipiti, haud desperandum esse facinus. Res aliter longe event. Nam non alio ante bello infestor Romanus (adeo hinc contumelii hostes, hinc consules mora exacerbaverant) prœlium iniit. Vix explicandi ordines spatium Etruscis fuit, cum, pilis inter primam trepidationem abjectis temere magis quam emissis, pugna jam in manus, jam ad gladios, ubi Mars est atrocissimus, venerat. Inter primores genus Fabium insigne spectaculo exemploque civibus erat. Ex his Quintum Fabium (tertio hic anno ante consul fuerat), principem in confertos Veientes euntem, ferox viribus et armorum arte Tusculus, incautum inter multas versantem hostium manus, gladio per pectus transfigit. Telo extracto, præceps Fabius in vulner abiiit. Sensit utraque acies unius viri casum, cedebatque inde Romanus; cum M. Fabius consul transiluit jacentis corpus, objectaque parma “hoc jurastis” inquit, “milites, fugientes vos in castra redi-turos? adeo ignavissimos hostes magis timetis, quam Jovem Martemque, per quos jurastis? At ego injuratus aut victor revertar, aut prope te hic, Quinte Fabi, dimicants cadam.” Consuli tum Kæso Fabius prioris anni consul: “Verbisne istis, frater, ut pugnet, te impetraturum credis? Dii impe-trabunt, per quos juraver. Et nos, ut decet proceres, ut Fabio nomine est dignum, pugnando potius, quam adhortando, accendamus militum animos.” Sic in primum infensis hastis provolant duo Fabii, totamque moverunt secum aciem.
XLVII.

Prœlio ex parte una restituto, nihilö segnis in cornu altero Cn. Manlius consul pugnam ciebat; ubi prope similis fortuna est versata.
Nam ut altero in cornu Q. Fabium, sic in hoc ipsum consulem Manlium, jam velut fusos agentem hostes, et impigre milites securi sunt; et, ut ille gravi vulnere ictus ex acie cessit, inter-fectum rati gradum rettulere: cessissentque loco, ni consul alter, cum aliquot turnis equi-tum in eam partem citato equo adventus, vivere 10 clamitans collegam, se victorem fuso altero cornu adesse, rem inclinatam sustinuisset. Manlius quoque ad restituen-dam aciem se ipse coram offert. Duorum consulum cognita ora accendunt militum animos. Simul et vanior jam erat hostium acies, dum, abundante multitudine freti, subtracta 15 subsidia mittunt ad castra oppugnanda. In quæ hand mag-no certamine impetu facto, dum prædæ magis, quam pugnæ, memores terunt tempus, triarii Romani, qui primam irruptionem sustinere non potuerant, missis ad consules nuntius, quo loco res essent, conglobati ad prætorium redeunt, et sua 20 sponte ipsi prœlium renovant. Et Manlius consul revectus in castra, ad omnes portas milite opposito, hostibus viam clauserat. Ea desperatio Tuscis rabiem magis quam audaciam accendit. Nam cum incursantes, quacumque exitum ostenderet spes, vano aliquotiens impetu issent, globus juve-25 num unus in ipsum consulem, insignem armis, invadit. Prima excepta a circumstantibus tela; sustineri deinde vis nequit: consul mortifero vulnere ictus cadit, fusique circa omnes. Tuscis crescit audacia; Romanos terror per tota castra trepidat agit; et ad extrema ventum foret, ni legati, 30 rapto consulis corpore, patefecissent una porta hostibus viam. Ea erumpunt; consternatoque agmine abeuntes in victorem alterum incidunt consulem. Ibi iterum casi fusique passim. Victoria egregia parta, tristis tamen duobus tam claris funeribus. Itaque consul, decernente senatu trium-35 phum, si exercitus sine imperatore triumphare possit, pro eximia eo bello opera facile passurum respondit: se, familia funesta Quinti Fabii fratis morte, re publica ex parte orba consule altero amisso, publico privatoque deformem luctu lauream non accepturum. Omni acto triumpho depositus 40 triumphus clarior fuit: adeo spreta in tempore gloria interdum cumulatior redit. Funera deinde duo deinceps collegae fratrisque ducit, idem in utroque laudator, cum concedendo illis suas laudes ipse maximam partem earum ferret. Neque immemor ejus, quod initio consulatus imiberat, reconcilian-di animos plebis, saecios milites curandos dividit patribus.
Fabii plurimi dati, nec alibi magiore cura habiti. Inde instructo agmine videt; acceptus in medium signa ferri jubet. Numquam exercitus neque minor numero, neque clarior fama et admiratione hominum, per urbeem incessit. Sex et trecenti milites, omnes patricii, omnes unus 15 gentis, quorum neminem ducem sperneret egregius quibuslibet temporibus senatus, ibant, unius familiae viribus Veienti populo pestem munitantes. Sequebatur turba, propria alia cognatorum sodaliumque, nihil medium, nec spem nec curam, sed immensa omnia volventium animo; 20 alia publica, sollicitudine excitata, favore et admiratione stupens. Ire fortis, ire felices jubent, inceptis eventus pares reddere; consulatus inde ac triumphos, omnia præmia ab se, omnes honores sperare. Praetereuntibus Capitolium arcemque et alia templæ, quidquid deorum oculis, quidquid 25 animo occurrit, precantur, ut illud agmen faustum atque felix mittant, sospites brevi in patriam ad parentes restituant. Incassum missæ preces. Infelici via dextra Jano portæ Carmentalis profecti, ad Cremeram flumen perveniunt. Is opportunus visus locus communiendo præsidio. LÆmilius inde et G. Servilius consules facti, et, donec nihil alius quam in populationibus res fuit, non ad præsidium modo tutandum Fabii satis erant, sed tota regione, qua Tuscus ager Romano adjacet, sua tuta omnia, infesta hostium vagantes per utrumque finem fecere. Intervallum deinde haud 35 magnum populationibus fuit; dum et Veientes, accito ex Etruria exercitu, præsidium Cremeræ oppugnant, et Romanæ legiones, ab LÆmilio consule adductæ, comminutus cum Etruscis dimicant acie. Quamquam vix dirigendi aciem spatium Veientibus fuit: adeo inter primam trepidationem, 40 dum post signa ordines introeunt subsidiaque locant, inventa subito ab latere Romana equitum ala non pugnæ modo incipienda, sed consistendi ademit locum. Ita fusi retro ad Saxa Rubra (ibis castra habebant) pacem supplices petunt; cujus impetrae, ab insita animis levitate, ante deductum 45 Cremera Romanum præsidium, pœnituit.

Rursus cum Fabii erat Veienti populo, sine ullo majoris belli apparatu, certamen; nec erant incursiones modo in agros, aut subiti impetus incurrantium, sed aliquotiens æquo campo collatisque signis certatum, gensque una populi Romani sæpe ex opulentissima, ut tum res erant, Etrusca civitate victoriam tulit. Id primo acerbum indignumque. Veientibus est visum; inde consilium, ex re naturam, insidiis feroce hostem captandi. Gaudere etiam, multo successu Fabii audaciam crescere. Itaque et pecora prædantibus aliquotiens, velut casu incidissent, obviam acta; et agrestium fuga vasti relictì agri; et subsidia armatorum, ad arcendas populationes missa, sæpius simulato, quam vero pavore, refugerunt. Jamque Fabii adeo conterserant hostem, ut sua invicta arma neque loco neque tempore ullo crederent sustineri posse. Hæc spes proverit, ut ad conspecta procul a Cremera magni campi intervalllo pecora (quamquam rara hostium apparebant arma) decurrent. Et cum improvidi effuso cursu insidias circa ipsum iter locatas superassen, palatique passim vaga, ut fit pavore injecto, raperent pecora, subito ex insidiis consurgitur, et adversi et undique hostes erant. Primo clamor circumulatus exterruit, dein tela ab omni parte accidebant; coeuntibusque Etruscis, jam continenti agmine armatorum septi, quo ma-gis se hostis inferebat, cogeabantur breviore spatio et ipsi orbem colligere. Quæ res et paucitatem eorum insignem, et multitudinem Etruscorum, multiplicatis in arto ordinibus, faciebat. Tum omissa pugna, quam in omnes partes parem intenderant, in unum locum se omnes inclinant. Eo nisi corporibus armisque rupere cuneo viam. Duxit via in editum leniter collem: inde primo restitere. Mox, ut respirandii superior locus spatum dedit, recipiendique a pavore tanto animum, pepulere etiam subeuntes; vincebatque auxilio loci paucitas, ni jugo circummissus Veiens in verticem collis evasisset. Ita superior rursus hostis factus. Fabii caesi ad unum omnes, præsidiumque expugnatum. Trecentos sex perisse satis convenit; unum prope puberum ætate relictum, stirpem genti Fabiae, dubiisque rebus populi Romani sæpe domi bellique vel maximum futurum auxilium.

Certamina domi finita. Veiens bellum exortum, quibus Sabini arma conjunxerunt. P.
Valerius consul accitis Latinorum Hernicorumque auxiliis, cum exercitu Veios missus castra Sabina, quae pro ménibus sociorum locata erant, confestim ad greditur; tantamque trepidationem injecit, ut, dum dispersi alii alia manipulatim excurrunt ad ancendam hostium vim, ea porta, cui signa primum intulerat, capere-tur. Intra vallum deinde caedes magis, quam prelium, esse. Tumultus e castris et in urbem penetrat: tamquam Veis captis, ita pavidis Veientes ad arma currunt; pars Sabinis eunt subsidio; pars Romanos, toto impetu intentos in castra, adorintur. Paulisper aversi turbatique sunt; dein-de et ipsi utroque versis signis resistunt, et eques ab consule immissus Tuscos fundit fugatique: eademque hora duo ex-ercitus, duæ potentissimæ et maximæ finitimæ gentes supe-ratæ sunt.—Dum haec ad Veios geruntur, Volsci Æquein Latino agro posuerant castra, populatique fines erant.
Eos per se ipsi Latini, adsumptis Hernicis, sine Romano aut duce aut auxilio, castris exxerunt. Ingenti præda præter suas recuperatas res potiti sunt. Missus tamen ab Roma consul in Volscos C. Nautius. Mos, credo, non placebat, sine Romano duce exercituque socios propriis viribus consi-liisque bella gerere. Nullum genus calamitatis contumelias quoque non editum in Volscos est; nec tamen perpelli potuere ut acie dimicarent.

Truce for forty years with the Veientes.— Fresh agrarian commotions.
—Furius and Manlius sum-

L. Furius inde et C. Manlius consules. Manlia Veientes provincia evenit. Non tamen bellatum: indutiae in annos quadraginta petentibus datae, frumento stipendioque impe-to. Paci externæ confestim continuatur discordia domi. Agrariæ legis tribuniciis stimulis plebs furebat. Consules, nihil Menenii damnatione, nihil periculo deterriti Servilii, summa vi resistunt. Abentes magistratu Cn. Genuciius tribunus plebis arripuit.—L. æmilius 10 et Opiter Verginius consulatum ineunt. Vopiscum Julium pro Verginio in quibusdam annalibus consulem invenio. Hoc anno (quos-cumque consules habuit) rei ad populum Furius et Manlius circumvent sordidati non plebem magis, quam 15 juniores patrum. Suadent, monent, honoribus et administratione rei publicæ abstineant; consulares vero fasces, prætextam curulemque sellam nihil aliud quam Pompeam funeris putent: claris insignibus velut infulis velatos ad mortem destinari. Quod si consulatus tanta dulcedo sit, 20 jam tunc ita in animum inducant, consulatum captum et oppressum ab tribunicia potestate esse; consuli, velut appa-ritori tribunicio, omnia ad nutum imperiumque tribuni agen-da esse. Si se commoverit, si respererit patres, si aliud quam plebem esse in re publica crediderit, exsiliun C. Mar-25 cii, Menenii damnationem et mortem sibi proponant ante oculos. His accensi vocibus patres consilia inde, non publica, sed in privato, seductaque a plurium conscientia, habuere. Ubi cum id modo constaret, jure an injuria eripiens esse reos, atrocissima quæque maxime placebat sententia; nec 30 auctor quamvis audaci facinori deerat. Igitur judicii die cum plebs in foro erecta exspectatione staret, mirari primo, quod non descenderet tribunus; dein, cum jam mora suspec-tior fieret, deterritum a primoribus credere, et desertam ac prodictam causam publicam queri; tandem, qui obversati 35 vestibulo tribuni fuerant, nuntiant domi mortuum esse in-ventum. Quod ubi in totam contionem pertulit rumor, si-cut acies funditur duce occiso, ita dilapsi passim alii alio. Præcipuus pavor tribunos invaserat, quam nihil auxilii sacrae leges haberent, morte collegæ monitos. Nec patres 40 satis moderate ferre lætitiain; adeoque neminem noxisæ pænitebat, ut etiam insontes fecisse videri vellent, palamque ferretur, malo domandam tribuniciam potestatem.

LV.

Sub hac pessimi exempli victoria dilectus edicitur; paventibusque tribunis, sine intercessione ulla consules rem peragunt. Tum vero irasci plebes tribunorum magis silentio, quam consulum imperio, et dicere actum esse de libertate sua, rursus ad antiqua reditum; cum Genucio una mortuam ac sepultam tribuniciam potestatem. Aliud agendum, ac cogitandum, quo modo resistatur patribus. Id autem unum consilium esse, ut se ipsa plebes, quando aliud nihil auxilii habeat, defendat. Quat 10 tuor et viginti lictores apparere consulibus, et eos ipsos plebis homines: nihil contemptius neque infirmius, si sint quic contemnunt. Sibi quemque ea magna atque horrenda facere. His vocibus ali i alios cum incitassent, ad Voleronem Publilium, de plebe hominem, quia, quod ordines duxisset, 15 negaret se militem fieri debere, lictor missus est a consulibus. Volero appellat tribunos. Cum auxilio nemo esset, consules spoliari hominem et virgas expediri jubent. "Pro voco" inquit "ad populum" Volero, "quoniam tribuni ci vem Romanum in conspectu suo virgis caedi malunt, quam 20 ipsi in lecto suo a vobis trucidari." Quo ferocius clamitabat, eo infestius circumscindere et spoliare lictor. Tum Volero, et praevales ipse, et adjuvantis advocates, repulso iictore, ubi indignantium pro se acerrimus erat clamor, eo se in turbam conferissimam recept, clamitans, "Provoco, et fidem plebis imploro. Adeste cives, adeste commilitones: nihil est quod exspectetis tribunos, quibus ipsis vestrus auxilio opus est." Concitatci homines veluti ad praelium se expediunt; apparebatque omne discrimen adesse, nihil cuquam sanctum non publici fore non privat juris. Huic 30 tandae tempestati cum se consules obtulissent, facile experti sunt, parum tutam majestatem sine viribus esse. Violatis

LVI.

Principio statim anni nihil prius quam de lege agebatur. Sed ut inventor legis Volero, sic Lætorius collega ejus, auctor cum recentior tum aerior erat: ferocem faciebat belli gloria ingens, quod ætatis ejus haud quisquam manu promptior erat. Is, cum Volero nihil præterquam de lege loqueretur, insectatione abstinens consulum, ipse in accusa-tionem Appii, familiaeque superbissimae ac crudelissimae in plebem Romanam, exorsus, cum a patribus non consulem, 30 sed carnificem ad vexandam et lacerandam plebem, creatum esse contenderet; rudis in militari homine lingua non suppœtebat libertati animoque. Itaque deficiente oratione "Quando quidem non facile loquor" inquit, "Quirites, quam quod locutus sum præsto, crastino die adeste. Ego 35 hic aut in conspectu vestro moriar, aut perferam legem." Occupant tribuni templum postero die. Consules nobilitasque ad impediendam legem in contione consistunt. Submoveri Lætorius jubet præterquam qui suffragium ineant. Adolescentes nobiles stabant nihil cedentes viatori. Tum ex 40 his prendi quosdam Lætorius jubet. Consul Appius negare jus esse tribunum in quemquam nisi in plebeium: non enim populi, sed plebis eum magistratum esse. Nec illum ipsum submovere pro imperio posse more majorum, quia ita dicitur "Si vobis videtur, discedite, Quirites." Facile, con-45 temptim de jure disserendo, perturbare Lætorium poterat. Ardens igitur ira tribunus viatorem mittit ad consulem, consul licetorem ad tribunum, privatum esse clamitans, sine imperio, sine magistratu; violatusque esset tribunus, ni et contio omnis atrox coorta pro tribuno in consulem esset, et 50 concursus hominum in forum ex tota urbe concitatæ multitudinis fieret. Sustinebat tamen Appius pertinacia tantam tempestatem; certatumque haud incruento prœlio foret, ni Quinctius, consul alter, consularibus negotio dato ut collegam vi, si aliter non possent, de foro abducerent, ipse nunc 55 plebem saevientem precibus lenisset, nunc orasset tribunos, ut concilium dimitterent: Darent iræ spatium, non vim suam illis tempus adempturum, sed consilium viribus additurum; et patres in populi et consulem in patrum fore potestate.
LVII.

Ægre sedata ab Quinctio plebes, multo ægrius consul alter a patribus. Dimisso tandem concilio plebis senatum consules habent. Ubi cum timor atque ira in vicem sententias variasset; quo magis, spatio interposito, ab 5 impetu ad consultandum advocabantur, eo plus abhorrebat a certatione animi; adeo ut Quinctio gratias agerent, quod ejus opera mitigata discordia esset. Ab Appio petitur, ut tantam consularem majestatem esse vellet, quanta esse in 10 concordi civitate posset. Dum tribunique et consules ad se quisque omnia trahant, nihil relictum esse virium in medio; distractam laceratamque rem publicam magis quorum in manu sit, quam ut incolumis sit, quæri. Appius contra testari deos atque homines, rem publicam prodi per metum 15 ac deseri; non consulem senatui, sed senatum consuli deesse; graviores accipi leges quam in Sacro monte acceptæ sint. Victus tamen patrum consensu quievit. Lex silentio perfertur.

LVIII.

se victum ab ea; se unico consule electo adversus tribuni-15 ciam potestatem, perlatam legem esse; quam minore conatu, nequaquam tanta patrum spe, priores impedierunt consules. Hæc ira indignatioque fercem animum ad vexan-dum sævo imperio exercitum stimulabat; nec ulla vi domari poterat: tantum certamen animis imbibebant. Segniter,20 otiose, neglegenter, contumaciter omnia agere: nec pudor nec metus coercebatur. Si citius agit vellet agmen, tardius sedulo incedere: si adhortator operis adesset, omnes sua sponte motam remittere industrium: præsentis vultus de-mittere, tacite prætereuntem exsecrari; ut invictus ille odio 25 plebeio animus interdum moveretur. Omni nequidquam acerbitate prompta, nihil jam cum militia agere; a centuronibus corruptum exercitum dicere, tribunos plebei ca-villanis interdum et Volerones vocare.

LIX.

Nihil eorum Volsci nesciebant, instabantque eo magis, sperantes idem certamen animorum adversus Appium habiturum exercitum Romanum, quod adversus Fabium con-sulem habuisset. Ceterum multo Appio, 5 quam Fabio, violentior fuit: non enim vin-cere tantum noluit, ut Fabianus exercitus, sed vinci voluit. Productus in aciem turpi fuga petit castra; nec ante restitit, quam signa inferentem Volscum munimentis vidit fœdamque 10 extremi agminis cædem. Tum expressa vis ad pugnandum, ut victor jam a vallo summoveretur hostis, satis tamen appareret capi tantum castra militem Romanum noluisset; alibi gau-dere sua clade atque ignominia. Quibus nihil 15 infractus ferox Appii animus cum insuper sævire vellet, contionemque advocaret, concurrunt ad eum legati tribunique monentes, ne utique ex-periri vellet imperium, cujus vis omnis in con-flight of the latter. — Appius decimates his army.

sensu obedientium esset. Negare vulgo milites 20 se ad contionem ituros, passimque exaudiri voces postulantium, ut castra ex Volsco agro mo-veantur. Hostem victorem paulo ante prope in portis ac vallo fuisse; ingentisque mali non suspicionem modo sed apertam speciem obversari ante oculos. Victus tandem 25 (quando quidem nihil præter tempus noxæ lucrarentur), remissa contione, iter in inequentem diem pronuntiari cum jussisset, prima luce classico signum profectionis dedit. Cum maxime agmen e castris explicaretur, Volsci, ut eodem signo excitati, novissimos adoriantur. A quibus perlatus ad 30 primos tumultus eo pavore signaque et ordines turbavit, ut neque imperia exaudiri, neque instrui acies posset. Nemo ullius, nisi fugæ, memor. Ita effuso agmine per stragem corporum armorumque evasere, ut prius hostis desisteret se-qui, quam Romanus fugere. Tandem, collectis ex dissipato 35 cursu militibus, consul, cum revocando nequidquam suos persecutus esset, in pacato agro castra posuit; advocataque contione, invectus hau falso in proditorem exercitum militaris disciplinæ, desertorem signorum; ubi signa ubi arma essent, singulos rogitans, inermes milites, signo amisse signiferos; ad hoc centuriones duplicariosque, qui reliquerant ordines, virgis caesos securi percussit; cetera multitudo sorte decimus quisque ad supplicium lecti.

LX.

Contra ea in Æquis inter consulem ac milites comitate ac beneficiis certatum est. Et natura Quinctius erat lenior, et sævitia infelix collegæ, quo is magis gauderet ingenio suo, effecerat. Huic tantæ concordiæ ducis exerci-tusque non ausi offerre se, Æqui vagari popu-labundum hostem per agros passi sunt. Necullo ante bello latius inde actæ prædæ. Ea omnis militi data est. Addebantur et laudes, quibus haud minus quam præmio gaudent militum animi. Cum duci, tum propter 10 ducem patribus quoque placatior exercitus redit, sibi parentem alteri exercitui dominum datum ab senatu memorans. Varia fortuna belli, atroci discordia domi forisque annum exactum, insignem maxime comitia tributa efficiunt; res major victoria suscepti certaminis, quam usu: plus enim 15 dignitatis comitiis ipsis detractum est, patribus ex concilio summovendis, quam virium aut plebi additum est aut demptum patribus.

LXI.

Turbulentior inde annus exceptit, L. Valerio Tib. Æmilio consulibus, cum propter certamina ordinum de lege agraria, tum propter judicium Appii Claudii, cui, acerrimo adversario legis, causamque possessorum publici agri, tamquam terto consulii, sustinentei, M. Duellius et Cn. Siccius diem dixere. Numquam ante tam invisus plebi reus ad judicium vocatus populi est, plenus suarum, plenus paterna rum irarum. Patres quoque non temere pro ullo aequae adnisi sunt: propugnatorum senatus majestatisque vindicem suæ, ad omnes tribunicios plebeiosque oppositum tumultus, modum dumtaxat in certamine egressum, iratae objici plebi. Unus e patribus, ipse Ap. Claudius, et tribunos et plebem et suum judicium pro nihilo habebat. Illum non minæ plebis, non senatus preces perpellere umquam potuere, non modo ut vestem mutaret aut supplex prensaret homines, sed ne ut ex consueta quidem asperitate orationis, cum ad populum agenda causa esset, aliquid leniret atque summitteret. Idem habitus oris, eadem contumacia in vultu, idem in oratione spiritus erat, adeo ut magna pars plebis Appium non minus reum time ret, quam consulem timuerat. Semel causam dixit, quo semper agere omnia solitus erat, accusatorio spiritu; adeoque constantia sua et tribunos obstupefecit et plebem, ut diem ipsi sua voluntate proderrent, trahi deinde rem sine rent. Haud ita multum interim temporis fuit: ante tamen, quam profecta dies veniretur, morbo mortuus. Cuius cum laudationem tribuni plebis impedire conarentur, plebes fraudari sollemnii honore supremum diem tanti viri noluit; et 30 laudationem tam æquis auribus mortui audivit, quam vivi accusationem audierat, et exsequias frequens celebravit.

LXII.

Eodem anno Valerius consul cum exercitu in Æquos profectus, cum hostem ad prælium elicere non posset, castra oppugnare est ador-tus. Prohibuit fœda tempestas cum grandine ac tonitribus cælo dejecta. Admirationem deinde auxit, signo receptui dato, adeo tranquilla serenitas reddita, ut, velut numine alioquo defensa castra oppugnare iterum, religio fuerit. Omnis ira belli ad populationem agri vertit. Alter consul Æmilius in Sabinis bellum gessit: 10 et ibi, quia hostis mœnibus se tenebat, vastati agri sunt. Incendiis deinde non villarum modo sed etiam vicorum, quibus frequenter habitabatur, Sabini exciti, cum prædatoribus occurrissent, ancipiti prælio digressi, postero die rettulere castra in tutiora loca. Id satis consuli visum, cur 15 pro victo relinqueret hostem, integro inde decedens bello.

LXIII.

Inter hæc bella, manente discordia domi, consules Titus Numicius Priscus A. Verginius facti. Non ultra videbatur latura plebes dilatationem agrariorum legis, ultimaque vis parabatur, cum, Volscos adesse fumo ex incendiis villarum 5 fugacque agrestium cognitum est. Ea res maturam jam seditionem ac prope erumpentem repressit. Consules, coacti extemplo ab senatu ad bellum, educta ex urbe juventute, tranquilliorem ceteram plebeum fecerunt. Et 10 hostes quidem, nihil aliud quam perfusis vano

I.

Origin of the Second Punic War—Reflections on its importance. Hannibal's oath against the Romans, taken in early boyhood, at the instance of his father, Hamilcar.

In parte operis mei licet mihi præfari, quod in principio summæ totius professi plerique sunt rerum scriptores, bellum maxime omnium memorabile, quæ umquam gesta sint, me scripturum, quod Hannibale duce Carthaginenses cum populo Romano gessère. Nam neque validiores opibus ulla inter se civitates gentesque contulerunt arma, neque his ipsis tantum umquam virium aut roboris fuit; et haud ignotas belli artes inter sese, sed expertas primo Punico conserebant bello; et adeo varia fortuna belli ancespque Mars fuit, ut propius periculum fuerint qui vicerunt. Odiis etiam prope majoribus certarunt quam viribus: Romanis indignantibus, quod victoribus victi ultero inferrent arma; Pœnis, quod superbe avareque, crederent imperitatum victis esse. Fama est etiam, Hannibalem annorum ferme novem, pueriliter blandientem patri Hamilcaris, ut duceretur in Hispaniam, cum, perfecto Africo bello, exercitum eo trajecturus sacrificaret, altaribus admotum, tactis sacris jurejurando adactum, se, cum primum posset, hostem 20 fore populo Romano. Angebant ingentis spiritus virum Sicilia Sardiniaque amisse: nam et Siciliam nimirum celeri desperatione rerum oculos, et Sardiniam inter motum.
Africæ fraude Romanorum, stipendio etiam insuper imposito, interceptam

II.

His anxius curis ita se Africo bello, quod fuit sub recentem Romanam pacem, per quinque annos, ita deinde novem annis in Hispania augendo Punico imperio gessit, ut apparatus majus eum quam quod gereret agitare in animo bellum, et si diutius vixisset, Hamilcare duce Pœnos arma Italiæ illaturos fuisse, qui Hannibalis ductu intulerunt. Mors Hamilcaris peropportuna et pueritia Hannibalis distulerunt bellum. Medius Hasdrubal inter patrem ac filium octo ferme annos imperium obtinuit, flore ætatis, uti ferunt, primo Hamilcarí conciliatus; gener inde ob altam indolem profecto animi adscitus, et, quia gener erat, factionis Bercinæ opibus, quæ apud mi lites plebemque plus quam modicæ erant, hand sane voluntate principum, in imperio positus, plura consilio quam vi gerens, hospitiis regulorum magis, conciliandisque per amicitiam principum novis gentibus, quam bello aut armis rem Carthaginensem auxit. Ceterum nihil ei pax tutor fuit: barbarus eum quidam palam, ob iram interfecti ab eo domini, obtruncat; comprensusque ab circumstantibus, hand alio quam si evasisset vultu, tormentis quoque cum laceraretur, eo fuit habita oris, ut, superante lactitia dolores, ridentis etiam spe cien præbuerit. Cum hoc Hasdrubale, quia mirâ artis in sollicitandis gentibus imperioque suo jungendis fuerat, fœdus renovaverat populus Romanus, ut finis utriusque imperii esset annis Iberus, Saguntinisque mediis inter imperia duorum populorum libertas servaretur.
III., IV.

In Hasdrubala locum haud dubia res fuit, quin praerogativam militarem, qua exemplum juvenis Hannibal in prætorium delatus, imperatoremque ingenti omnium clamore atque adsensu appellatus erat, favor plebis sequeretur. Hunc vixdum puberem Hasdrubal litteris ad se arcessierat; actaque res etiam in senatu fuerat, Barcinis nitentibus, ut adsuesceret militiae Hannibal, atque in paternas succederet opes.

decum metus, nullum jusjurandum, nulla religio. Cum hac 35 indole virtutum atque vitiorum triennio sub Hasdrubale i-meratore meruit, nulla re, quae agenda videndaque magno futuro duci esset, prætermiss.

Ceterum ex quo die dux est declaratus, velut Italia ei provincia decret, bellumque Romanum mandatum esset, nihil prolatandum ra-tus, ne se quoque, ut patrem Hamilcarem, deinde Hasdrubalem, cuntantem casus aliquis 5 opprimeret, Saguntinis inferre bellum statuit.
Quibus oppugnandis quia haud Æubie Romana arma movebantur, in Olcadum prius fines (ultra Iberum ea gens in parte magis quam in dicione Carthaginicensium crat) induxit exercitum, ut non petisse Saguntinos, sed rerum se-rie, finitimis domitis gentibus, jungendoque, tractus ad id bellum videri posset. Cartalam, urbem opulentam, caput gentis ejus, expugnat diripitque; quo metu perculsae minores civitates, stipendio imposito, imperium accepère. Victor exercitus, opulentusque præda, Cartháginem novam in hiberna est deductus. †Ibi large partiendo prædam, stipendioque præterito cum fide exsolvendo, cunctis civium sociorumque animis in se firmatis, vere primo in Vaccæos promotum bellum. Hermandica et Arbocala eorum urbes vi cap-tæ. Arbocala et virtute et multitudine oppidanorum diu defensa. Ab Hermandica profugi exsulibus Olcadum, priore æstate domitæ gentis, cum se junxissent, coincitant Carpeta-nos; adortique Hannibalem, regressum ex Vaccæis, haud procul Tago flumine agmen grave præda turbavere. Hannibal prælio abstinuit; castrisque super ripam positis, cum prima quies silentiumque ab hostibus fuit, annem vado tra-jecit, valloque ita producto, ut locum ad transgrediendum hostes haberent, invadere eos transcuentes statuit. Equitibus præcepit, ut, cum ingressos aquam viderent, adorirentur 30 impeditum agmen; in ripa elephantos (quadraginta autem erant) disponit. Carpetanorum cum appendicibus Olcadum Vaceæorumque centum milia fuere, invicta acies, sì æquo dimicare tur campo. Itaque et ingenio feroces et multitudine freti, et, quod metu cessisse credebant hostem, id mo- 35 rari victoriam rati, quod interesset annis, clamore sublato, passim sine ullius imperio, qua cuique proximum est, in annem ruunt. Et ex parte altera ripae vis ingens equitum in flumen immissa, medioque alveo haudquaquam pari certamine concurrem; quippe ubi pedes instabilis, ac vix vado 40 fidens, vel ab inermi equite, equo temere acto, perverti posset; eques corpore armisque liber, equo vel per medios gurgites stabili, comminus eminusque rem gereret. Pars magna flumine absumpta; quidam, verticoso amni delati in hostes, ab elephantis obtiti sunt: postremi, quibus regressus in suam ripam tutior fuit, ex varia trepidatione cum in unum colligerentur, priusquam ex tanto pavore recuperent animos, Hannibal, agmine quadrato annem ingressus, fugam ex ripa fecit, vastatisque agris, intra paucos dies Carpetanos quoque in dedicationem accepit.

Et jam omnia trans Iberum praetor Saguntinos Carthaginiensium erant.

VI.

Cum Saguntinus bellum nondum erat, ceterum jam belli causa certamina cum finitimis serebantur, maxime Turdetanis. Quibus cum adset idem, qui hitis erat sator, nec certamen juris, sed vim quæri appareret, legati a Saguntinis Romam missi, auxilium ad bellum jam haud dubie imminens orantes. Consules tunc Romæ erant P. Cornelius Scipio et Tib. Sempronius Longus; qui cum, legatis in senatum introductis, de re publica rettulissent, placuis-5 setque mitti legatos in Hispanicam ad res sociorum inspiciendas, quibus si videretur digna Ambassadors sent to Hannibal at Saguntum, who are to proceed to Carthage if he does not desist from the war. causa, et Hannibali denuntiarent, ut ab Saguntinis, sociis populi Romani, abstineret, et Carthaginem in Africam trajicerent, ac sociorum 15 populi Romani querimonias deferrent, hæc legatione decreta necdum missa, omnium spe celerius Saguntum oppugnari adlatum est.

Tunc relata de integro res ad senatum; et alii, provincias consulibus Hispaniam atque Africam decernentes, terra marisque rem gerandum censebant; alii totum in Hispaniam Hannibalemque intenderant bellum. Erant qui non temere movendam rem tantam, expectandosque ex Hispania legatos censerent. Hæc sententia, quæ tutissima videbatur, vicit; legatique eo maturius missi, P. Valerius Flaccus et Q. 25 Bæbius Tamphilus, Saguntum ad Hannibalem atque inde Carthaginem, si non absisteretur bello, ad ducem ipsum in pœnam fæderis rupti deposeendum.

VII.

Dum ea Romani parant consultantque, jam Saguntum summa vi oppugnabatur. Civitas ea longe opulentissima ultra Iberum fuit, sita passus mille ferme a mari. Oriundi a Zacyntho insula dicuntur, mixtique etiam ab Ardea 5 Rutulorum quidam generis: ceterum in tantas brevi creverant opes, seu maritimis seu terrastribus fructibus, seu multitudinis incremento, seu disciplinæ sanctitate, qua fidem socialem usque ad perniciem suam coluerunt. Hannibal infesto exercitu ingressus fines, 10 pervastatur passim agris, urbebem tripertito adgreditur. An godus muri erat in planiorem patentioremque, quam cetera circa, vallem vergens. Adversus eum vineas agere instituit, per quas aries mœnibus admoveri posset. Sed ut locus procul muro satis æquus agendis vineis fuit, ita haudquaquam 15 prospere, postquam ad effectum operis ventum est, ceptis succedebat. Et turris ingens imminebat, et murus, ut in suspecto loco, supra ceteræ modum altitudinis emunitus... erat; et juventus delecta, ubi plurimum periculi ac timoris ostendebatur, ibi vi majore obsistebant. Ac primo missili-20 bus summovere hostem nec quidquam satis tutum munientibus pati. Deinde jam non pro moenibus modo atque turri tela micare, sed ad erumpendum etiam in stationes operaque hostium animus erat: quibus tumultuariis certaminibus haud ferme plures Saguntini cadebant quam Pœni. Ut vero Han-25 nibal ipse, dum murum incautius subit, adversum femur tragula graviter ictus ceccidit, tanta circa fuga ac trepidatio fuit, ut non multum abesset, quin opera ac vineæ deserentur.

Vigorous renewal of the siege.—Resolute bravery of the Saguntines.— Description of the missile call-

used by the Saguntines. — Its formidable nature.

Obsidio deinde per paucos dies magis quam oppugnatio fuit, dum vulnus ducis curaretur:
per quod tempus ut quies certaminum erat, ita ab apparatu operum ac munitionum nihil cessatum. Itaque acrius de integro coortum 5 est bellum, pluribusque partibus (vix accipien-tibus quibusdam opera locis) vineæ cœptae agi ad moverique aries. Abundabat multitudine hominum Pænus (ad centum quinquaginta milia habuisse in armis satis creditur); oppidani, ad omnia tu-10 enda atque obeunda multifariam distineri cœpti, non suffi-ciebant. Itaque jam feriebant arietibus muri quassataeque multæ partes erant. Una continentibus ruinis nudaverat urbem: tres deinceps turres, quantumque inter eàs muri erat, cum fragore ingenti prociderant. Captum oppidum 15 ea ruina crediderant Pœni; qua, velit si pariter utrosque murus texisset, ita utrimque in pugnam consequeretur. Ni-hil tumultuariae pugnæ simile erat, quales in oppugnatione bus urbium per occasionem partis alterius conciri solent; sej justæ acies, velut patenti campo, inter ruinas muri tectaque urbis modico distantia intervallo constiterant. Hinc spes, hinc desperatio animos irritat; Pæno cepisse jam se urbem, si paulum adnitatur, credente; Saguntinis pro nu-data moenibus patria corpora opponentibus, nec ullo pedem referente, ne in relictum a se locum hostem immitteret. 25 Itaque quo acrius et confertim magis utrimque pugnabat, eo plures vulnerabantur, nullo inter arma corporaque vano intercidente telo. Falarica erat Saguntinis, missile telum hastili abiegnio et cetera tereti praeferquam ad extremum, unde ferrum exstabat. Id, sicut in pilo quadratum, stuppa 30 circumligabant lineabantque pice. Ferrum autem tres longum habebat pedes, ut cum armis transfigere corpus posset.
Sed id maxime, etiam si hæsisset in scuto, nec penetrasset in corpus, pavorem faciebat, quod, cum medium accensum mitteretur, conceptumque ipso motu multo majorem ignem 35 ferret, arma omittit cogebat, nudumque militem ad insequen-tes ictus præbebat.

IX.

Cum diu aniceps fuisset certamen, et Sagun-tinis, quia præter spem resisterent, crevissent animi; Poenus, quia non vicisset, pro victo es-set; clamorem repente oppidani tollunt, ho-stemque in ruinas muri expellunt, inde impe-ditum trepidantemque exturbant, postremo fugatumque in castra redigunt.

Interim ab Roma legatos venisse nuntiatam est; quibus obviam ad mare missi ab Hanni-bale qui dicerent, nec tuto eos adituros inter 10 tot tam effrenatum gentium arma, nec Han-nibali in tanto discrimine rerum operæ esse legationes au-dire. Apparebat non admissos Carthaginem protinus ituros; litteras igitur nuntiosque ad principes factionis Barcinae præmittit, ut præpararent suorum animos, ne quid pars altera gratificari pro Romanis posset.

Itaque præterquam quod admissi auditique sunt, ea quoque vana atque irrita legatio fuit.
Hanno unus adversus senatum causam fœde-ris, magno silentio propter auctoritatem suam, Hanno alone, in opposition to the rest of the Senate, pleads the cause of the treaty with Rome.—His speech on this occasion.

non cum adsensu audientium egit, per deos, 5 foederum arbitros ac testes, senatum obtestans, ne Romanum cum Saguntino suscitarent bel-dum. Monuisse, prædixisse se, ne Hamilcaris progeniem ad exercitum mitterent. Non manus, non stirpem ejus conquiescere viri; nec 10 umquam, donec sanguinis nominisque Barcini quisquam supersit, quietura Romana fœdera. "Juvenem flagrantem cupidine regni, viamque unam ad id cernentem, si ex bellis bella serendo suceinetus armis legionibusque vivat, velut materiam igni præbentes ad exercitus misistis. Alui-15 stis ergo hoc incendium, quo nunc ardetis. Saguntum vestri circumsedent exercitus, unde arcenitur fœdere: mox Carthaginem circumsedebunt Romanæ legiones ducibus isdem diis, per quos priorë bello rupta fœdera sunt ulti. Utrum ho-stem an vos an fortunam utriusque populi ignoratis? Lega-20 tos ab sociis et pro sociis venientes bonus imperator vester in castra non admisit, jus gentium sustulit. Hi tamen, unde ne hostium quidem legati arcenur, pulsi ad vos venerunt. Res ex fœdere repetuntur. Publica fraus absit; auctorem culpæ et reum criminis deposcant. (Quo lenius agunt, seg-25 nius incipiunt, eo, cum œperint, vereor ne perseverantius sæviant.) Ægates insulas Erycemque ante oculos proponite, que terra marique per quattuor et viginti annos passi sitis. Nec puer hic dux erat sed pater ipse Hamilcar, Mars alter, ut isti volunt. Sed Tarento, id est Italia, non abstinueram 30 mus ex fœdere, sicut nunc Sagunto non abstinemus. Vice-runt ergo dii hominesque; et id de quo verbis ambigebatur, uter populus fœsus rupisset, eventus bellii velut aequus ju-dex, unde jus stabat, eï victoriam dedit. Carthagini nunc Hannibal vineas turresque admovet; Carthaginis mœnia qua-35 tit ariete: Sagunti ruinæ (falsus utinam vates sim) nostris capitis incident, susceptumque cum Saguntinis bellum habendum cum Romanis est. Dedemus ergo Hannibalem? dicet aliquis. Scio meam levem esse in eo auctoritatem propter paternas inimicitias. Sed et Hamilcarem eo perisse 40 quod, si ille viveret, bellum jam haberemus in his; et hunc juvenem tamquam furiam facemque hujus habili odi ac detestor. Nec dedendum solum ad piaculum rupti foederis, sed, si nemo depositat, devehendum in ultimas maris terrarumque oras, ablegandum eo, unde nec 45 ad nos nomen famaque ejus accedere, neque ille sollicitare quietae civitatis statum possit. Ægo ita censeo, legatos ex-templo Romam mittendos, qui senatui satisfaciant, alios, qui Hannibali nuntient, ut exercitum ab Sagunto abducat, ipsumque Hannibalem ex foedere Romanis dedant: tertiam legationem ad res Saguntinis reddendas decerno."

XI.

Cum Hanno perorasset, nemini omnium cer-tare oratione cum eo necesse fuit: adeo prope omnis senatus Hannibalis erat; infestiusque locutum arguebant Hannonem quam Flaccum Valerium legatum Romanum. Responsum inde legatis Romanis est, bellum ortum ab Sa-guntinis non ab Hannibale esse: populum Romanum injuste facere, si Saguntinos vetustissimæ Carthaginiensium societati praeponat.

Dum Romani tempus terunt legationibus mittendis, Hannibal, quia fessum militem preliis operibusque habebat, paucorum his dierum quietem dedit, stationi-bus ad custodiam vinegarum aliorumque operum dispositis.
Interim animos eorum nunc ira in hostes stimulando, nunc spe præmiorum ascendet. Ut vero pro contione prædam 15 captæ urbis edixit militum fore, adeo accensi omnes sunt; ut, si extemplo signum datum esset, nulla vi resisti videretur posse. Saguntini ut a preliis quietem habuerant, nec laceussenec lacesstitiper aliquot dies, ita non nocte, non die quam cessaverant ab opere, ut novum murum ab ea 20 parte, qua patefactum oppidum ruinis erat, reficerent. Inde oppugnatio eos aliquanto atrocior quam ante adorta est; nec, qua primum aut potissimum parte ferrent operm, cum omnia variis clamoribus streperent, satiatis seire profectis munimenta aderat. Quæ cum ad- Hannibal, qua turris mobilis, omnia rans altitudo, agebatur, hortator mota, catapultis ballistiisque per omnia tabulata dispositis, muros defensoribus nudasset, tum Hannibal, occasionem ratus, quingentos ferme Afros cum dolabris ad subruendum ab ino murum mittit. Nec erat difficile opus, quod cæ-menta non calce durata erant, sed interlita luto, structuræ antiquæ genere. Itaque latius, quam cæderetur, ruebat, per-que patentia ruinis agmina armatorum in urbem vadebant. Locum quoque editum capiunt, collatisque eo catapultis ballistiisque, ut castellum in ipsa urbe velut arcem imminentem haberent, muro circumdant. Et Saguntini murum interio-rem ab nondum capta parte urbis ducunt. Utriumque summa vi et muniunt et pungant: sed interna tuendo minorem in dies urbem Saguntini faciunt. Simul crescit inopia om- nium longa obsidione, et minuitur exspectatio externæ opis, cum tam procul Romani, unica spes, circa omnia hostium essent. Paulisper tamen affectos animos recreavit repen- tina profectio Hannibalis in Oretanos Carpetanosque, qui duo populi, dilectus acerbitate consternati, retentis conquisi- toribus, metum defectionis cum præbuisser, oppressi celeri- tate Hannibalis, omiserunt mota arma.

XII.

Nec Sagunti oppugnatio segnior erat, Ma- harbale Himilconis filio (eum præfecerat Hannibale) ita impigre rem agente, ut ducem abesse nec cives nec hostes sentirent. Is et prœlia aliquot secunda fecit, et tribus arieturibus ali- quantum muri discussit, strataque omnia re- centibus ruinis advenienti Hannibali ostendit.

Itaque ad ipsam arcem extemplo ductus ex- ercitus, atroque prœrium cum multorum utrimque caede initum, et pars arcis capta est.

Temptata deinde per duos est exigua pacis spes, Alconem Saguntinum et Alorcum Hispanum. Alco, insciis Saguntinis, precibus aliquid moturum ratus, cum ad Hannibalem noctu transisset, postquam nihil lacrime movebant, conditionesque tristes, ut ab irato victore, ferebantur, transfuga 15 ex oratore factus, apud hostem mansit, moriturum adfirmans, qui sub condicionibus iis de pace ageret. Postulabatur autem, reddiderent res Turdetanis, traditoque omni auro atque argento, egressi urbe cum singulis vestimentis ibi habitarent, ubi Pœnus jussisset. Has pacis leges abnuente Alcone ac 20 cepturos Sanguntinos, Alorcu, vinci animos, ubi alia vincantur, adfirmans, se pacis ejus interpretim fore pollicetur. Erat autem tum miles Hannibalis, ceterum publice Saguntinis amicus atque hospes. Tradito palam telo custodibus hostium, transgressus munimenta, ad prætorem Saguntinum 25 (et ipse ita jubebat) est deductus. Quo cum extemplo concursus omnis generis hominum esset factus, summata cetera multitudine, senatus Alorcu datum est, cuju talis oratio fuit.

"Si civis vester Alco, sicut ad pacem petendarum ad Hannibalem venit, ita pacis conditiones ab Hannibale ad vos rettulisset, supervacaneum hoc mihi fuisset iter, quo nec orator Hannibalis nec transfuga ad vos venisset. Cum ille aut vestra aut sua culpa manserit apud hostem (sua, si metum simulavit, vestra, si periculum est apud vos vera referentibus) ego, ne ignoraretis esse aliquas et salutis et pacis vobis condiciones, pro vetusto hospitio quod mihi vobiscum est, ad vos veni. Vestra autem carissime, suavis alterius, 10 loqui quæ loqueris ab vos, vel estides et, quod neque dum vestris viribus, neque dum auxilia ab Romanis sperasti, pascarum facit, et vos mentionem feci. Postquam nec ab Romanis auferret, ne illa est spes, nec vestra vos jam aut arma aut mentia satisfacere possunt, pacem adfero ad vos 15 magis necessariam quam æquam. Cujus ita aliqua spes est, si eam, quem ad modum ut viro cert Hannibal, sic vos ut victi audiatis; et non id, quod amittitur, in damno, cum omnia victoris sint, sed, quidquid reliquitor, pro munere habituri estis. Urbem vobis, quam, ex magna parte diru-tam, captam fere totam habet, adimit, agros relinquuit, locum adsignaturus, in quo novum oppidum sedificetis. Aurum et argentum omne, publicum privatumque, ad se jubet deferri: corpora vestra conjugum ac liberorum vestrorum servat in-violata, si inermes cum binis vestimentis velitis ab Sagunto exire. Hæc victor hostis imperat; hæc, quamquam sunt gravia atque acerba, fortuna vestra vobis suadet. Equidem haud despero, cum omnium potestas ei facta sit, aliquid ex his rebus remissurum: sed vel hæc patienda censeo potius quam trucidari corpora vestra, rapi trahique ante ora vestra conjuges ac liberos bellii jure sinatis.”

XIV.

Ad hæc audienda cum circumfusa paulatim multitudine permixtae senatui esset populi concilium, repente primores, secessione facta, priusquam responsum dare tur, argentum aurumque omne, ex publico privatoque in forum collatum, in ignem ad id raptim factum coniciientes, eodem plerique semet ipsi præcipitaverunt. Cum ex eo pavor ac trepidatio totam urbem pervasisset, alius insuper tumul-tus ex arce auditur. Turris diu quassata pro-10 cederat, perque ruinam ejus cohors Poenorum, impetu facto, cum signum imperatori dedisset nundamationibus custodiiisque solitis hostium esse urbem, non cunctandum in ali occasione ratus Hannibal, totis viribus adgressus urbem acuento cepit, sig-15 no dato, ut omnes puberes intercererent in mod imperium crudele, ceterum prope necessin ab cogitabatur ipso eventu est: cui enim parci potuit esse, qui aut inclusi cum con-jugibus ac libera domos suos et se ipsos concremaverunt, aut armati nullum ante finem sanguis quam morientes fecerunt. 20

XV.

Captum oppidum est cum ingenti praeda. Quamquam pleraque ab dominis de industria corrupta erant, et in caedibus vix 5 ullum discrimen aetatis ira fecerat, et captivi militum praeda fuerant, tamen et ex pretio rerum venditarum aliquantum pecuniae redactum esse constat, et multam pretiosam supellectilem vestemque missam Carthaginem.

Octavo mense, quam captum oppugnari, captum Saguntum quidam scripsere; inde Carthaginem novam in hiberna Hannibalem concessisse; quinto deinde mense, quam ab Carthagine prefectus sit, in Italian pervenisse. Quae si ita sunt, fieri non potuit, ut P. Cornelius Tib. Sempronius consules fuerint, ad quos et principio oppugnationis legati Saguntini missi sint, et qui in suo magistratu cum Hannibale, alter ad Ticianum amnem, ambo aliquanto post ad Trebiam pugnaverint. Aut omnia breviora aliquanto fuere, aut Saguntum principio anni, quo P. Cornelius Tib. Sempronius consules fuerunt, non cœptum oppugnari est sed captum. Nam excessisse pugna ad Trebiam in annum Cn. Servili et C. Flaminii non potest, quia C. Flaminius Arimini consulatum iniit, creatus a Tib. Sempronio consule, qui post pugnam ad Trebiam ad creandos consules Romanum cum venisset, comitiiis perfectis ad exercitum in hiberna reedit.

XVI.

Sub idem fere tempus et legati, qui redierant ab Carthagine, Romanum rettulerunt omnia hostilia esse, et Sagunti excidium nuntiaturum est; tantusque simul mœror patres misericordiae sociorum peremptorum indigne et pudor non lati auxiliis et ira in Carthaginienses metusque de summa rerum cepit, velut si jam ad portas hostis esset, ut 5 tot uno tempore motibus animi turbati trepidarent magis quam consulerent. Nam neque hostem acriorem bellicosio-remque secum congressum, nec rem Romanam tam desidem umquam fuisset atque imbellem. Sados Corsosque et Hi-stros atque Illyrios lacessisse magis quam exercuisse Romana arma, et cum Gallis tumultuatam verius quam belligeratam.
Pœnum hostem veteranum, trium et viginti annorum militia durissima inter Hispanas gentes semper victorem, duci acerrimo adsuetum, recentem ab excidio opulentissimae urbis Iberum transire; trahere secum tot excitos Hispanorum populos, concitatum avidas semper armorum Gallicas gentes: cum orbe terrarum bellum gerendum in Italia ac pro mœnibus Romanis esse.

Arrangement made by the Romans against the foe.

Nominatæ jam antea consulibus provinciæ erant, tum sortiri jussi. Cornelio Hispania, Sempronio Africa cum Sicilia evenit. Sex in eum annum decretæ legiones, et socium quantum ipsis videretur, et classis quanta parari posset. Quat-tuor et viginti peditum Romanorum milia scripta et mille octingenti equites, sociorum quadraginta milia peditum, quattuor milia et quadrungenti equites; naves ducentæ viginti quinqueremes, celoces viginti deductæ. Latum inde ad po-pulum, vellent juberen populo Carthaginiensi bellum in-dici: ejusque belli causa supplicatio per urbem habita, atque adorati dīi, ut bene ac feliciter eveniret, quod bellum populus Romanus jussisse. Inter consules ita copiæ divisæ: Sempronio datæ legiones due (ea quaterna milia erant pe-ditum et trecenti equites), et sociorum sedecim milia pedi-tum, equites mille octingenti, naves longæ centum sexaginta, celoces duodecim. Cum his terestribus mari timisque copiis Tib. Sempronius missus in Siciliam, ita in Africam transmissurus, si ad arcendum Italia Pœnum consul alter satis esset.
Cornelio minus copiarum datum, quia L. Manlius pretor et ipse cum haud invalido præsidio in Galliam mittebatur.
Navium maxime Cornelio numerus deminitus: sexaginta quinqueremes dàtē (neque enim mari venturum aut ea parte belli dimicaturum hostem credebant), et duae Romanae le-giones: cum suo justo equitatu et quattuordecim milibus 25 sociorum peditum, equitibus mille sexcentis. Duas legiones Romānas et decem milia sociōrum peditum, mille equites socios, sexcentos Romanos Gallia provincia nondum versa in Punicum bellum habuit.

XVIII.

His ita comparatis, ut omnia justa ante bel-lum fierent, legatos majores natu, Q. Fabium, M. Livium, L. Æmilium, C. Licinimum, Q. Bæbium, in Africam mittunt ad percunctandos Carthaginienses, publicone consilio Hannibal 5 Saguntum oppugnasset, et si, id quod facturi videbantur, faterentur ac defenderent publico consilio factum, ut indicerent populo Cartha-giniensi bellum. Romani postquam Carthaginem venerunt, cum senatus datus esset, et 10
Q. Fabius nihil ultra quam unum, quod mandat datum erat, percunctatus esset, tum ex Carthaginiensisibus unus: "Præceps vestra, Romani, et prior legatio fuit, cum Hannibalem tamquam suo consi-lio Saguntum oppugnantem deposingebatis: ceterum hæc le-15 gatio verbis adhuc lenior est, re asperior. Tunc enim Hann ibal et insimulabatur et deposingebatur: nunc ab nobis et confessio culpæ exprimitur, et, ut a confessis, res extemplo repentuntur. Ego autem non, privato publicone consilio Sa-guntum oppugnatum sit, quærendum censeam, sed utrum 20 jure an injuria. Nostra enim hæc quæstio atque animad versio in civem nostrum est, quid nostro aut suo fecerit ar bitrio: vobiscum una disceptatio est, licueritne per fœdus fieri. Itaque quoniam discerni placet, quid publico consilio, quid sua sponte imperatores faciant, nobis vobiscum fœdus 25 est a C. Lutatio consuleictum, in quo cum caveretur utrorumque sociis, nihil de Saguntinis (neclud enim erant socii vestri) cautem est. At enim eo fœdere, quod cum Hasdrubale ictum est, Saguntini excipiantur. Adversus quod ego nihil dicturus sum, nisi quod a vobis didici: vos enim, quod 30 C. Lutatius consul primo nobiscum fœdus fecit, quia neque auctoritate patrum nec populi jussu ictum erat, negastis vos eo teneri: itaque aliud de integro fœdus publico consilio ictum est. Si vos non tenent fœdera vestra nisi ex auctoritate aut jussu vestro icta, ne nos quidem Hasdrubalis fœdus, 35 quod nobis insciis fecit, obligare potuit. Proinde omittite Sagunti atque Iberi mentionem facere, et, quod diu parturit animus vester, aliquando pariat." Tum Romanus, sinu ex toga facto, "hic" inquit "vobis bellum et pacem portamus: utrum placet, sumite." Sub hanc vocem hand minus fero-40 citer, daret utrum vellet, succlamatum est. Et cum is iterum sinu effuso bellum dare dixisset, accipere se omnes respondunt, et, quibus acciperent animis, isdem se gesturos.

XIX.

Hæc directa percunctatio ac denuntiatio belli magis ex dignitate populi Romani visa est, quam de fœderum jure verbis disceptare, cum ante, tum maxime Sagunto excisa. Nam si verborum disceptationis res esset, quid fœdus Hasdrubalis cum Lutatii priore fœdere, quod mutatum est, comparandum erat, cum in Lutatii fœdere diserte additum esset, ita id ratum fore, si populus censuisset; in Hasdrubalis fœdere nec exceptum tale quidquam fœ-5 dit, et tot annorum silentio ita vivo eo comprobatum sit fœdus, ut ne mortuo quidem auctore quidquam mutaretur. Quamquam, et si priore fœdere staretur, satis cautem erat Saguntinis, sociis utrorumque exceptis: nam neque additum erat iis qui tunc essent, nec ne qui postea adsumeren-15 tur: et cum adsumere novos liceret socios, quis æquum censeret aut ob nulla quemquam merita in amicitiam recipi, aut receptos in fidem non defendi? Tantum ne Carthaginiensium socii aut sollicitarentur ad defeccionem, aut sua sponte desciscientes recipierentur.

Legati Romani ab Carthagine, sicut iis Romæ imperatum erat, in Hispaniam, ut adirent civitates, et in societatem perlicerent aut averterent a Pœnis, trajecerunt. Ad Bargusios primum venerunt, a quibus benigne excepti, quia tædebat imperii Punici, multos trans Iberum populos ad cupidinem novæ fortunæ erecserunt. Ad Volcianos inde est ventum, quorum celebre per Hispaniam responsum ceteros populos ab societate Romana avertit. Ita enim maximus natu ex iis in concilio respondit: "Quæ verecundia est, Romani, postulare vos, uti vestram Carthaginiensium amicitia praepona mus, cum, qui id fecerunt, Saguntinos crudelius, quam Pœnus hostis perdidit, vos socii prodideritis? Ibi quaeratis socios censeo, ubi Saguntina clades ignota est: Hispanis populis, sicut lugubre, ita insigne documentum Sagunti ruinæ erunt, ne quis fidei Romanae aut societati confidat." 35 Inde extemplo abire finibus Volcianorum jussi ab nullo deinde concilio Hispániae benigniora verba tulere. Ita nequidquam peragrata Hispania in Galliam transeunt.

XX.

The Roman ambassadors having passed into Gaul, endeavor to prevail upon the Gallic tribes to refuse a passage through their territories to the Carthaginian army. — Their attempts are received with shouts of derision, and meet with a prompt denial. — They then, after visiting Massilia, an

In iis nova terribilisque species visa est, quod armati (ita mos gentis erat) in concilium venerunt. Cum verbis extollentes gloriam virtutemque populi Romani ac magnitudinem imperii petissent, ne Pœno bellum Italie inferenti per agros urbesque suas transitum darent, tantum cum fremitu risus dicitur ortus, ut vix a magistratibus majoribusque natu juventus sedaretur: adeo stolida impedensque postulatio visa est, censere, ne in Ita-10 liam transmittant Galli bellum, ipsos id advertere in se, agrosque suos pro alienis populandos objicere. Sedato tandem fremitu responsum legatis est, neque Romanorum in se meri-

Eadem ferme in cete- ris Gallis conciliis dicta auditaque; nec hospitale quidquam 20 pacatumve satis prius auditum quam Massiliam venere. Ibi omnia ab sociis inquisita cum cura ac fide cognita, praecu- patos jam ante ab Hannibale Gallorum animos esse: sed ne illi quidem ipsi satis metem gentem fore (adeo ferocia atque indomita ingenia esse), ni subinde auro, cujus avidissima 25 gens est, principum animi concilientur. Its peragratis His-paniae et Galliae populis legati Romam redeunt, haud ita molto post quam consules in provincias prefecti erant. Ci- vitatem omnem in exspectatione belli erectam invenerunt, satis constante fama jam Iberum Poenis tramisisse. 30

XXI.

Hannibal, Sagunto capto, Carthaginem novam in hiberna concesserat, ibique auditis quæ Romæ quæque Carthagine acta decretaque forent, seque non ducem solum sed etiam causam esse belli, partitis divenditisque reliquis prædæ, nihil ultra differendum ratus, Hispani generis milites convocat. "Credo ego vos," inquit "socii, et ipsos cernere, pacatis omnibus Hispaniæ populis, aut finiendam nobis militiam exercitusque dimittendos esse, 5 aut in alias terras transferendum bellum: ita enim hæ gentes non pacis solum sed etiam victoriae bonis florebunt, si ex aliis gentibus prædam et gloriam quæremus. Itaque cum longinqua a domo instet militia, incertumque sit, 10 quando domos vestras et quæ cuique ibi cara sunt visuri sitiis, si quis vestrum suos invisere vult, commeatum do. Primo vere edico adsitis, ut, diis bene juvantibus bellum ingentis gloriae praedaeque futurum incipiamus." Omnibus fere visendi domos oblata ultero potestas grata erat, et jam 20 desiderantibus suos et longius in futurum providentibus desiderium. Per totum tempus hiemis quies inter labores aut jam exhaustos aut mox exhauriendos renovavit corpora animosque ad omnia de integro patienda. Vere primo ad edictum convenere.

Neque Hispaniam negligendum ratus (atque id eo minus, quod haud ignarus erat circumi- tam ab Romanis eam legatis ad sollicitandos principum animos), Hasdrubali fratri, viro impigro, eam provinciam destinat, firmatque eum Africis maxime praeidiis, peditum Afrorum undecim milibus ooctingentis quinquaginta, Litiguribus trecentis, Balearibus quingentis. Ad hae peditum auxilia additi equites Libyphoenices, mixtum Punicum Afris genus, quadringenti quinquaginta, et Numidiae Maurique, accolae Oceani, ad mille octingenti, et parva Ilergetum manus ex Hispania, ducenti equites, et, ne quid terrestris desset auxili genus, elephanti viginti unus. Classis præterea data ad tuendam maritimam oram, quia, qua parte bellii vicerant, ea tum quoque rem gesturos Romanos credi poterat, quinquaginta quinqueremes, quadrimarces due, triremes quinque; sed aptae instructaeque remigio triginta et due quinqueremes erant et triremes quinque.

Ab Gadibus Carthaginem ad hiberna exercitus redit; atque inde profectus præter Etovissam urbem ad Iberum maritimamque oram ducit. Ibi fama est in quie te visum ab eo juvenem divina specie, qui se ab Jove diceret ducem in Italiam Hannibali missum: proinde sequeretur, neque usquam a se deflecteret oculos. Pavidum primo, nusquam quam circumspicientem aut respicientem, securum; deinde cura ingenii humani, cum, quidnam id esset quod respicere vetitus esset, agitaret animo, temperare oculis nequississe eum; vidisse post sese serpentem mira magnitudine cum ingenti arborum ac virgultorum strage ferri, ac post insequi cum fragore coeli nimbum. Tum, quæ moles ea quidve prodigii esset, quæruntem audisse vastitatem Italiæ esse: pergeret porro ire, nec ultra inquireret, sineretque fata in occulto esse.

Hoc visu latus tripertito Iberum copias trajectit, præmissis qui Gallorum animos, quæ traducendus exercitus erat, donis conciliarent, Alpiumque transitus specularentur. Nonaginta milia peditum, duodecim milia equitum Iberum traduxit. Ilergetes inde Bargusiosque et Austanos et Lacetaniam, quæ subjecta Pyreneis montibus est, subegit; oræque huic omni praefecit Hannonom, ut fauces quæ Hispanias Galliis jungunt in potestate essent. Postquam per Pyrenaeum saltum traduci exercitus est ceptus, rumorque per barbaros manavit certior de bello Romano, tria milia inde Car-15 petanorum peditum iter averterunt. Constabat non tam bello motos quam longinquitate viæ insuperabiliisque Alpium transitu. Hannibal, quia revocare aut vi retinere eos ances erat, ne ceterorum etiam ferores animi irrita-20 rentur, supra septem milia hominum domos remisit, quos et ipse gravari militia senserat, Carpetanos quoque ab eis dimissos simulans.

In Italian interim nihil ultra quam Iberum transisse Hannibalem a Massiliensium legatis Romam perlatum erat, cum, perinde ac si Alpis jam transisset, Boii sollicitatis Insubribus defecerunt, nec tam ob veteres in populum Romanum iras, quam quod nuper circa Padum Placentiam Cremonaque colonias in agrum Gallicum deductas ægre patiebantur. Itaque, armis repente arreptis, in eum ipsum agrum impetu facto, tantum terroris ac tumultus fe-10 cerunt, ut non agrestis modo multitudo, sed ipsi triumviri Romani, qui ad agrum venerant adsignandum, diffusi Placentiae mœnibus, Mutinam confugerint, C. Lutatius, C. Servilius, M. Annius. Lutatii nomen haud dubium est: 15 pro Annio Servilioque Q. Acilium et C. Herennium habent quidam annales, alii P. Cornelium Asinam et C. Papirium Masonem. Id quoque dubium est, legati ad expostulandum missi ad Boios violati sint, an in triumviros agrum me-20 tantes impetus sit factus. Mutinæ cum obserdentur, et gens, ad oppugnandarum urbi-um artes rudis, pigerrima eadem ad militaria opera, segnis intactis adsideret muris, simulari cœptum de pace agi; evocatique ab Gallorum 25 principibus legati ad colloquium, non contra jus modo gentium, sed violata etiam, quæ data in id tempus erat, sive, comprehenduntur, ne-gantibus Gallis, nisi obsides sibi redderentur, eos dimissuros. Cum hæc de legatis nuntiata essent, et Mutina præsidium-30 que in periculo esset, L. Manlius prætor ira accensus effusum agmen ad Mutinam ducit. Silvæ tunc circa viam erant, plerisque incultis. Ibi, inexplorato profectus, in insidias præcipitatus, multaque cum cæde suorum ægre in apertos capos emersit. Ibi castra communita; et, quia Gallis ad 35 temptanda ea defect spes, refecti sunt militum animi, quamquam ad quingentos cecidisse satis constabat. Iter deinde de integro cceptum; nec, dum per patentia loca ducebatur agmen, apparuit hostis: ubi rursus silvae intratae, tum postremos adorti, cum magna trepidatione ac pavore omnium, 40 septingentos milites occiderunt, sex signa ademere. Finis et Gallis territandi et pavendi fuit Romanis, ut e saltu invio atque impedito evasere. Inde, apertis locis facile tutantes agmen, Romani Tannetum, vicum propinquum Pado, contendere: ibi se munimento ad tempus commeatibusque flu: 45 minis et Brixianorum etiam Gallorum auxilio, adversus crescentem in dies multitudinem hostium, tutabantur.

Qui tumultus repens postquam est Romam perlatus, et Punicum insuper Gallico bellum auctum patres acceperunt, C. Atilium prætorem cum una legione Romana et quinque milibus sociorum, dilectu novo a consulate conscriptis auxilium ferre-Manlio jubent; qui sine ullo certamine (absesserant enim metu hostes) Tannetum pervenit.

Et P. Cornelius, in locum ejus, quæ missa cum prætore erat, scripta legione nova, pro-10 fectus ab urbe sexaginta longis navibus, præter oram Etruriae Ligurumque, et inde Salviuim montes, pervenit Massiliam, et ad proximum ostium Rhodani (pluribus enim divisus amnis in mare decurrit) castra locat, vixdum satis 15 credens Hannibalem superasse Pyrenæos montes. Quem ut de Rhodani quoque transitu agitare animadvertit, incertus quonam ei loco occurreret, necdum satis refectis ab jactatione maritima militibus, trecentos interim delectos equites, ducibus Massiliensibus et 26 auxiliaribus Gallis, ad exploranda omnia visendosque ex tuto hostes præmittit. Hannibal, ceteris metu aut pretio pacatis, jam in Volcarum pervenerat agrum, gentis validæ. Colunt autem circa útramque ripam Rhodani; sed diffusis ceterius agro arceri Pœnum posse, ut flumen pro munimento habe·rent, omnibus ferme suis trans Rhodanum træctis, uteriores ripam amnis armis obtinebant. Ceteros accolas fluminis Hannibal, et eorum ipsorum, quos sedes suæ tenuerant, simul perlicit donis ad naves undique·contrahendas fabricandasque; simul et ipsi trajici exercitum levarique quam 30 primum regionem suam tanta hominum urgente turba cupidabant. Itaque ingens coacta vis navium est lintriumque temere ad vicinalem usum paratarum; novasque alias primum Galli inchoantes cavabant ex singulis arboreibus; inde et ipsi milites, simul copia materiæ simul facilitate 35 operis induti, alveos informes, nihil, dummodo innare aquae et capere onera possent, curantes, raptim, quibus se suaque transvehentur, faciebant.

Jamque omnibus satis comparatis ad trajicendum, terrebant ex adverso hostes, ommem ripam equites virique obtinentes; quos ut averteret, Hannonem Bomilcaris filium vigilia prima noctis cum parte copiarum, maxime Hispanis, adverso flumine ire iter unius diei jubet, et, ubi primum possit, quam occultissime træcto amni, circumducere agmen, ut, cum opus facto sit, adoriatur ab·tergo hostem. Ad id dati ducés Galli edocent, inde milia quinque et viginti ferme supra parvae insulae circumfusum amnem latiorem, ubi dividebatur, 10 coque minus alto alveo transitum ostendere. Ibi raptim cesa materia ratesque fabricatae, in quibus equi virique et alia onera træciceruntur. Hispani, sine alla mole, in utres vestimentis conjectis ipsi cæstris superpositis incubantes flumen tranavere. Elephantorum trajiciendorum varia consilia fuisse credo; certe variata memoria actae rei. Quidam, congregatis ad ripam elephantis, tradunt, ferocissimum ex iis irritatum ab rectore suo, cum refugientem in aquam nantem sequeretur, traxisse gregem, ut queneque timentem altitudinem destituorat vadum, impetu ipso fluminis in alteram ripam rapiente. Ceterum magis constat ratibus trajectos; id ut tutius consilium ante rem foret, ita acta re ad fidem pronius est. Ratem unam ducentos longam pedes, quinquaginta latam, a terra in 2 amnem porrexerunt; quam, ne secunda aqua deferretur, pluribus validis retinaculis parte superiore ripae reliquatam, pontis in modum humo injecta constraverunt, ut belvae audacter velut per solum ingrederentur. Altera ratis, aequae latae, longa pedes centum, ad traiiciendum flumen apta, huic copulata 30 est; et cum elephanti per stabilem ratem tamquam viam, prægredientibus feminis, acti, in minorem applicatam transgressi sunt, extemplo resolutis, quibus leviter adnexa erat vinculis, ab actuariis aliquot navibus ad alteram ripam per- trahit. Ita primis expositis, alii deinde repetiti ac trajecti 35 sunt. Nihil sane trepidabant, donec contineri velut pone agerentur: primus erat pavor, cum, soluta ab ceteris rate, in altum raperentur. Ibi, urgentes inter se, cedentibus extremis ab aqua, trepidationis aliquantum edebant; donec quies- tem ipse timor circumspectantibus aquam fecisset. Exci- 40 dere etiam saevientes quidam in flumen; sed, postare ipso stabiles, dejectis rectoibus, quærendis pedetem evadis, in terram evasere.

While the elephants are being conveyed across the stream Hannibal sends five hundred Numidian horsemen towards the Roman camp, to ascertain if possible the numbers and probable movements of the enemy.—These fall in with the Roman horsemen and Gauls, sent out by Scipio for a similar purpose. —A fierce encounter ensues, in which the Ro-

Dum elephanti traiiciuntur, interim Hannibal Numidas equites quingentos ad castra Romana miserat speculatum, ubi et quantæ copiæ essent et quid pararent. Huic alæ equitum missi, ut ante dictum est, ab ostio Rhodani trecenti Romanorum equites occurrunt. Prælium atrocissimum quam pro numero pugnantium editur. Nam, praeter multa vulnera, caedes etiam prope utrimque fuit; fugaque et pavor Numidarum Romanis, jam admodum fessis, 5 victoriis dedit. Victores ad centum sexaginta, nec omnes Romani, sed pars Gallorum; victi amplius ducenti ceciderunt. Itaque Hannibal, postquam ipsi sententia noxam sibi dedi postularet populus Romanus, Iberum tra-

Arrives at the junction of the Isara and the Rhone.—Acts as arbitrator in settling the dissensions of the Allobroges.—Is supplied by them with provisions and other necessaries.—Continues his march. Crosses the Druentia.

His adhortationibus incitatos corpora curare atque ad iter se parare jubet. Postero die prefectus adversa ripa Rhodani mediterranea Gallia petit, non quia rector ad Alpes via esset, sed quantum a mari recessisset, minus obvium fore Romanum credens, cum quo, priusquam in Italiam ventum foret, non erat in animo manus conserer. Quartis castris ad Insulam pervenit. Ibi Isara Rhodanusque amnes, diversis ex Alpibus decurrentes, agri 10 aliquantum amplexi, confluent in unum: mediis campis Insulæ nomen inditum. Incolunt prope Allobroges, gens jam inde nulla Gallica gente opibus aut fama inferior. Tum discors erat. Regni certamine ambigeabant frates. 15 Major, et qui prius imperitarat, Brancus nomine, minore ab fratre et estu juniorum, qui jure minus vi plus poterat, pellebatur. Hujus seditionis peropportuna disceptatio cum ad Hannibalem ejecta esset, arbiter regni factus, quod ea senatus principumque sententia 20 fuerat, imperium majori restituit. Ob id meritum commens-tu copiaque rerum omnium, maxime vestis, est adjutus, quam infames frigoribus Alpes praeparari cogebat. Sedatis Han-nibal certaminibus Allobrogum, cum jam Alpes peteret, non recta regione iter instituit, sed ad laevam in Tricastinos fle-25 xit; inde per extremamoramVocontiorum agri tendit in Tricorios, haud usquam impedita via, priusquam ad Druen-tiam flumen pervenit. Is et ipse Alpinus annis, longe om-nium Galliae fluminum difficilimus transitu est. Nam, cum aquae vim vehat ingerem, non tamen navium patiens est; 30 quia nullis coercitus ripis, pluribus simul neque isdem alveis fluens, nova semper vada novosque gurgites (et ob eadem pediti quoque incerta via est), ad hoc saxa glareosa volvens, nihil stabile nec tutum ingredienti praebet. Et tum forte imbribus auctus ingemem transgressentibus tumultum fecit, 35 cum super cetera trepidatione ipsi sua atque incertis clamoribus turbarentur.

XXXII.

P. Cornelius consul, triduo fere post quam Hannibal a ripa Rhodani movit, quadrato ag-mine ad castra hostium venerat, nullam dimi-candi moram facturus. Ceterum ubi deserta munimenta, nec facilis se tantum progressos adsecuturum videt, ad mare ac naves reedit, tutius faciliusque ita descendenti ab Alpibus Hannibali occursurus. Ne tamen nuda auxiliis Romanis Hispania esset, quam provinciam sortitus erat, Cn. Scipionem fratrem cum maxima parte copiarum adversus Hasdrubalem misit, non ad tuendos tantummodo veteres socios conciliandosque novos, sed etiam ad pellen-dum Hispania Hasdrubalem. Ipse cum admodum exiguis copiis Genuam repetit, eo, qui 15 circa Padum erat, exercitu Italiam defensurus. Hannibal ab Druentia, campestri maxime from the nature of the route and the attacks of the mountaineers. Itinerare, ad Alpes, cum bona pace incolentium ea loca Gallorum perveniit. Tum, quamquam fomam prius, qua incerta in majus vero ferri solent, præceptra res erat, tamen ex propinquo visa montium altitudo, nivesque cælo prope immixtæ, tecta informia imposita rupibus, pecora jumentaque torrida frigore, homines intinsi et inculti, animalia inanimaliaque omnia rigentia gelu, cetera visu quam dictu fædiora, terrorem renovarunt. Erigentibus in primos agmen clivos apparuuerunt imminentes tumulos insidientes montani; qui, si valles occultiores insedissent, coorti ad pugnam repente ingentem fugam stragemque dedissent. Hannibal consistere signa jussit; Gallisque ad visenda loca præmissis postquam comperit transitum ea non esse, castra inter confragosa omnia præruptaque, quam extentissima potest valle, loca. Tum per eodem Gallos, haud sane multum lingua moribusque abhorrentes, cum se immisquissent colloquiis montanorum, edoctus interdiu tantum obsideri saltum, nocte in suum quemque dilabi tecta, luce prima subiit tumulos, ut ex aperto atque interdiu vim per angustias facturus. Die deinde simulando aliud quam quod parabatur consumpto, cum eodem quo constiterat loco castra communissent, ubi primum digressos tumulis montanos laxatasque sensit custodias, pluri bus ignibus quam pro numero manentium in speciem factis, impedimentisque cum equite relictis et maxima parte peditum, ipse cum expeditis, acerrimo quoque viro, raptim angustias evadit, iisque ipsis tumulis, quos hostes tenuerant, consedit.

March over the Alps continued.—Fresh difficulties and disasters.—Puts the mountaineers at length to flight.—Makes now considerable progress. Prima deinde luce castra mota, et agmen reliquum incedere ecepit. Jam montani signo dato ex castellis ad stationem solitam conveniebant, cum repente conspicuunt alios, arce occupata suarum super caput imminentes, alios via transire hostes. Utraque simul objecta res oculis animisque immobiles parumper eos defixit. Deinde, ut trepidationem in angustiis suoque ipsum tumultu miseri agmen videre, equis maxime consternatis, quidquid adiecissent ipsi terroris satis ad perniciem 10 fore rati, perversis rupibus, juxta invidia ac devia adsueti, decurrunt. Tum vero simul ab hostibus simul ab iniquitate locorum Pœni oppugnabantur; plusque inter ipsos, sibi quoque tendente ut periculo prius evaderet, quam cum hostibus certaminis erat. Equi maxime infestum agmen 15 faciebant, qui et clamoribus dissentis, quos nemora etiam repercussæque valles augebant, territi trepidabant, et icti forte aut vulnerati aut co consternabantur, ut stragem ingenstem simul hominum ac sancinarum omnis generis facerent. Multosque turba, cum precipites deruptæque utrimque 20 gustia essent, in immensum altitudinis dejecti; quosdam et armatos. Sed ruinæ maxime modo jumenta cum oneribus devolvebantur. Quæ quamquam fœda visu erant, stetit parumper tamen Hannibal ac suas continuat, ne tumultum ac trepidationem auget. Deinde, postquam interrupi agmen vidit, periculumque esse, nec exutum impedimentis exercitum nequidquam incoletum traduxisset, decurrit ex superiori loco, et cum impetu ipso fudisset hostem, suis quoque tumultum auxit. Sed is tumultus momento temporis, postquam liberata itinera fuga montanorum erant, sedatur; nec 30 per otium modo sed prope silentio mox omnes traducti. Castellum inde, quod caput ejus regionis erat, viculosque circumjectos capit, et captivo cibo ac pecoribus per triduum exercitum aluit, et, quia nec montanis primo perculusis nec loco magno operè impediebantur, aliquantum eo triduo viæ 35 confecit.

XXXIV.

Perventum inde ad frequentem cultoribus alium, ut inter montanos, populum. Ibi non bello aperto sed suis artibus, fraude et insidiis, est prope circumventus. Magno natu principis castellorum oratores ad Pœnum veniunt, 5 alienis malis, utili exemplo, doctos memorantes amicitiam malle quam vim experiri Pœnorum: itaque obedierent imperata facturos; commetum itinerisque duces, et, ad fidem promissorum, obsides acciperet. Hannibal nec temere credendum nec aspernandâ ratus, ne repudiati aperte hostes fieren, benigne cum respondisset, obsidibus quos dabant acceptis, et commetatu, quem in viam ipsi detulerant, usus, nequaquam ut inter pacatos, composito agmine duces eorum sequitur. Primum agmen elephanti et equites erant; ipse post, cum robore peditum, circumspectans sol-licitusque omnia incedebat. Ubi in angustiorem viam, et parte altera subjectam jugo insuper imminenti, ventum est, undique ex insidiis barbari a fronte ab tergo coorti comminus eminus petunt, saxa ingentia in agmen devolvunt. Maxima ab tergo vis hominum urget. In eos versa peditum acies haud dubium fecit, quin, nisi firmata extrema agminis fuissent, ingens in eo saltu accipienda clades fuerit. Tunc quoque ad extremum periculi ac prope perniciem ventum est. Nam dum cunctatur Hannibal demittere agmen in angustias, quia non, ut ipse equitibus præsidio erat, ita peditis-25 bus quidquam ab tergo auxili, reliquerat, occurrentes per obliqua montani, interrupto medio agmine, viam insedere; noxque una Hannibali sine equitibus atque impedimentis acta est.

XXXV.

Posterio die, jam segnius intercursantibus barbaris, junctæ copiæ, saltusque haud sine clade, majore tamen jumentorum quam hominum pernicie, superatus. Inde montani pauciores jam, et iatrocinii magis quam belli more, concursabant modo in primum modo in novissimum agmen, subitumque aut locus opportunitatem daret, aut progressi morative aliquam occasionem fecissent. Elephanti, sicut per artas præcipites vias magna mora agebantur, ita tu-10 tum ab hostibus, quacumque incederent, quia

NonÒ die in jugum Alpium perventum est, per invia pleraque et errores, quos aut ducen—15 tiùm fraus, aut, ubi fides iis non esset, temere initae valles a conjectantibus iter faciebant. Biduum in jugo stativa habita, fessisque labore ac pugnando quies data militibus; jumentaque aliquot, quæ prolapsa in rupibus erant, sequen—20 do vestigia agminis in castra pervenerunt. Fessis tædio tot mai—lorum nivis etiam casus occidente jam sidere Vergiliarum, ingenæm terorem adjectis. Per omnia nive oppleta cum, signis prima luce motis, segniter agmen incideret, pigritiæque et desperatio in omnium vultu emineret, prægressus signa Hannibal in promontorio quodam, unde longe ac late prospectus erat, consistere jussis militibus Italian ostentat, subjectosque Alpinis montibus Circumpadanos campos : møeniaque eos tum transcenderet non Italiam modo, sed etiam urbis Romanæ. Cetera plana, proclivia fore; uno aut summum altero pra—30 lio arcem et caput Italiam in manu ac potestate habituros. Procedere inde agmen coœpit, jam nihil ne hostibus quidem præter parva furta per occasionem temptantibus. Ceterum iter multo, quam in ascensu fuerat, ut pleraque Alpium ab Italia sicut breviora ita arrectiora sunt, difficilium fuit. Om—35 nis enim ferme via præceps, angusta, lubrìca erat, ut neque sustinere se a lapsu possent, nec, qui paulum titubassent, haerere adìcti vestigio suo, alique super alios et jumenta in homines occiderent.

Ventum deinde ad multo angustiorem rupem, atque ita rectis saxis, ut ægre expeditus miles temptabundus manibusque retinens virgulta ac stirpes circa eminentes demittere sese posset. Natura locus jam ante præceps recenti lapsu terra in pedum mille admodum altitudi—

Conflicting accounts of different writers as to the number of troops which Hannibal brought into Italy.—Remarks of Livy on the question over what part of the Alps Hannibal crossed.—He censures and rejects two opinions on this subject, the former being the one which was general in his time, namely, that he crossed the Pe-nine Alps.

Hoc maxime modo in Italianam perventum est, quinto mense a Carthagine nova, ut quindam auctores sunt, quinto decimo die Alpibus superatis. Quantae copiae transgresso in Italianam Hannibali fuerint, nequaquam inter 5 auctores constat. Qui plurimum, centum milia peditum viginti equorum fuisse scribunt; qui minimum, viginti milia peditum, sex equorum. L. Cincius Alimentus, qui captum se ab Hannbale scribit, maxime auctor moveret, nisi con-10 funderet numerum Gallis Liguribusque additis; cum his octoginta milia peditum, decem equi-tum adducta (in Italia magis adfluxisse veri simile est, et ita quidam auctores sunt): ex ipso autem audisse Hannibale, postquam Rho-15 danum transierit, triginta sex milia hominum ingentemque numerum equorum et aliorum jumentorum amississe. E Taurinis, quae Galliae proxima gens erat, in Italianam degressum cum inter omnes constet, eo magis miror ambigu, quanam Alpes transierit, et vulgo cre-20 dere Penino (atque inde nomen ei jugo Alpium inditum) transgressum, Coelium per Cremonis jugum dicere transisse; qui ambo saltus eum non in Taurinos sed per Salassos montanos ad Libuos Gallos deduxerint. Nec veri simile est e tum ad Galliam patuisse itinera; utique quae ad Peninum ferunt obsepta gentibus semigermanis fuissent. Neque Hercule montibus his, si quem forte id movet, ab transitu Pœorumullo Seduni Veragri, incolae jugi ejus, norint nomen inditum, sed ab eo quem in summo sacratum vertice Peninum montani appellant.

XXXIX.

Peropportune ad principia rerum Taurinis, proximae genti, adversus Insubres motum bellum erat. Sed armare exercitum Hannibal, ut parti alteri auxilio esset, in reficiendo maxime sentientem contracta ante mala, non poterat: otium enim ex labore, copia ex inopia, cultus ex illuvie tabequie squalida et prope efferata corpora varie movebat. Ea P. Cornelio consulii causa fuit, cum Pisas navibus venisset, exercitu a Manlio Atilioque accepto tirone et in novis ignominii trespido, ad Padum festinantii, ut cum hoste nondum refecto manus consenret. Sed cum Placentiam consul venit, jam ex stativis moverat Hannibal, Taurinorumque unam urbem, caput gentis ejus, quia volentes in amicitiam non veniebant, vi expugnarat; et junxisset sibi, non metu solum sed etiam voluntate, Gallos accolas Padi, ni eos circumspectantes defectionis tempus subito adventu consul oppressisset. Et Hannibal movit ex Taurinis, incertos, quae pars sequenda esset, Gallos praesentem se secuturos esse ratus. Jam prope in conspectu erant exercitus, convenerantque duces sicii inter se nondum satis noti, ita jam imbutus uterque quadam admiratione alterius. Nam Hannibalibus et apud Romanos jam ante Sagunti excidium celeberrimum nomen erat, et Scipio nem Hannibal eo ipso, quod adversus se dux potissimum lectus esset, præstantem virum credebatur. Et auxerant inter se opinionem, Scipio, quod relictus in Gallia obvius fuerat.
in Italiam transgresso Hannibali, Hannibal et conatu tam audaci trajiciendarum Alpium et effectu.

Occupavit tamen Scipio Padum traiicere, et ad Ticinum amnem motis castris, priusquam educeret in aciem, adhortandorum militum causa talem orationem est exorsua.

XL.

“Si eum exercitum, milites, educerem in aciem, quem in Gallia mecum habui, supersediasem loqui apud vos: quid enim adhortari referret aut eos equites, qui equitatum hostium ad Rhodanum flumen egregie vicissent, aut eae legiones, cum quibus fugientem hunc ipsum hostem secutus confessi-onem cedentis ac detractantis certamen pro victoria habui! Nunc, quia ille exercitus, Hispaniae provinciae scriptus, ibi cum fratres Cn. Scipione meis auspiciis rem gerit, ubi eum gerere senatus populusque Romanum voluit, ego, ut consu-lem ducem adversus Hannibalem ac Pœnos haberetis, ipsæ me huic voluntario certaminis obtuli, novo imperatori apud novos milites paucâ verba facienda sunt. Ne genus bellī nēve hostem ignoretis, cum iis est vobis, milites, pugnandum, quos terra marique priore bello vicistis; quibus sti-pendum pēr viginti annōs exēgistis; quibus capta belli præmia Siciliam ac Sardiniam habētis. Erit igitur in hoc certamine is vobis illisque animūs, qui victoribus et victis esse solet. Nec nunc illi, quia audēnt, sed quia necessē est, pugnaturi sunt, nisi creditis, qui exercitu incolumi pugnam detractaverē, eos duabus partibus peditum equitumque in transitu Alpium amissīs, cum plures perierint quam super-sint, plus spei nāctos esse. At enim pauci quidem sunt sed vigentes animis corporibusque, quorum robora ac vires vix sustineri vis ulla possit. Effigies, immo umbrā hominum, fame, frigore, illuvie, squalore enecti, contusi ac debilitati inter saxa rupesque: ad hoc præusti artus, nīve rigentes nervi, membrā torrida gelu, quassata fractaque arma, claudi ac debili-les equī—cum hoc equite, cum hoc pedite pugnaturi estis; reliquias extremas hostium, non hostem habetis. Ac nihil 30 magis vereor, quam ne, vos cum pugnaveritis, Alpes vicisse Hannibalem videantur. Sed ita forsitan decuit, cum fœderum ruptore duce ac populo deos ipsos, sine ulla humana ope, committere ac prosilgere bellum; nos, qui secundum deos violati sumus, commissum ac prosilgatum conficere. 35

XLI.

"Non vereor, ne quis me hæc vestri adhortandi causa magnifice loqui existimet, ipsum alter animo affectum esse. Licuit in His-paniam provinciam meam, quo jam prefectus eram, cum exercitu ire meo, ubi et fratrem consilii participem ac peri-culi socium haberem, et Hasdrubalem potius quam Hannibalem hostem, et minorem haud dubie molem belli: tamen, cum praeterveherer navibus Galliae oram, ad famam hujus hostis in terram egressus, præmisso equitatu, ad Rhodanum movi castra. Equestri prælio, qua parte copiarum conseq-10 rendi manum fortuna data est, hostem fudi; peditum ag-men, quod in modum fugientium raptim agebatur, quia ad-sequi terra non poteram, regressus ad naves, quanta maxime potui celeritate, tanto maris terrarumque circuitu in radici-cum declinarem certamen, improvisus incidisse videor an oc-currere in vestigiis ejus, lascere ac trahere ad decernendum?

Experiri juvat, utrum alios repente Carthaginienses per viginti annis terra ediderit, an iidem sint, qui ad Ægates pugna-verunt insulas, et quos ab Eryce duodevicenis denariis aesti-

Herculis, ut ipse fert, an vectigalis stipendiariusque et servi-bus populi Romani a patre relictus: quem nisi Saguntinum scelus agitaret, respiceret profecto, si non patriam victam, domum certe patremque et fœdera Hamilcaris scripta manu, 25 qui jussus ab consule nostro presidium deduxit ab Eryce; qui graves impositas victis Carthaginiensibus leges fremens mærensque accepit; qui decedens Sicilia stipendium populo Romano dare pactus est. Itaque vos ego, milites, non eo solum animo, quo adversus alios hostes soletis, pugnare ve-30 lim, sed cum indignatione quadam atque ira, velut si servos videatis vestros arma repente contra vos ferentes. Licuit ad Erycem clausos, ultimo supplicio humanorum, fame interficere; licuit victricem classem in Africam trajecere, atque intra paucos dies sine ullo certamine Carthaginem delere—: 35 veniam dedimus precentibus, emisimus ex obsidione, pacem cum victis fecimus, tutelæ deinde nostræ duximus, cum Africo bello urgerentur. Pro his impertitis, furiosum juvenem sequentes, oppugnatum patriam nostram veniunt. Atque utinam pro decore tantum hoc vobis et non pro salute 40 esset certamen! Non de possessione Siciliæ ac Sardiniae, de quibus quondam agebatur, sed pro Italia vobis est pugnandum. Nec est alius ab tergo exercitus, qui, nisi nos vincimus, hosti obsistat, nec Alpes aliae sunt, quas dum superant, comparari nova possint praesidia. Hic est obstan-45 dum, milites, velut si ante Romana mœnia pugnemus. Unus quisque se non corpus suum, sed conjugem ac liberos parvos armis protegere putet; nec domesticas solum agitet curas, sed identidem hoc animo reputet, nostras nunc intueri manus senatum populumque Romanum; qualis nostra 50 vis virtusque fuerit, talem deinde fortunam illius urbis ac Romani imperii fore.”

Hannibal having drawn his army around for the spectacle, places in the midst the captive mountaineers, and asks, through an interpreter, whether any among them, on condition of being released

Hæc apud Romanos consul.

Hannibal rebus prius quam verbis adhorrando milites ratus, circumdatu ad spectaculum exercitu, captivos montanos vinctos in medio statuit; armisque Gallicis ante pedes eorum projectis, interrogare interpretem jussit, ecquis, si vinculis levaretur armaque et equum victor acciparet, decertare ferro vellet. tabat, quem fortuna in id certamen legeret. Ut cujuisque sors exciderat, alacer, inter gratulantes gaudio exsultans, cum sui moris tripudiis arma raptim capiebat. Ubi vero dimicarent, is habitus animorum non inter ejusdem modo condicionis homines erat, sed etiam inter spectantes vulgo, ut non vincentium magis quam bene morientium fortuna laudaretur.

XLIII.

Cum sic aliquot spectatis paribus affectos dimisisset, contione inde advocata, ita apud eos locutus fertur: "Si, quem animum in aliena sortis exemplo paulo ante habuistis, eundem mox in aestimanda fortuna vestra habueritis, vicimus, milites. Neque enim spectaculum modo illud, sed quaedam veluti imago vestrae condicionis erat. Ac nescio an majora vincula majoresque necessitates vobis quam captivis vestris fortuna circumdederit. Dextra lævae duo maria claudunt, nullam ne ad effugium quidem navem habentibus: contra Padus amnis, major Padus ac violentior Rhodano; ab tergo Alpes urgent, vix integris vobis ac vigentibus transitæ. Hic vincendum aut moriendum, milites, est, ubi primum hosti occurristis. Et eadem fortuna, quæ necessitatem pugnandi imposuit, præmia vobis ea victoribus proponit, quibus amplior ora homines ne ab diis quidem immortalibus optare solent. Si Siciliam tantum ac Sardiniam parentibus nostris ereptas nostra virtute recuperaturi essemus, satis tamen ampla pretia essent. Quidquid Romani tot triumphis partum congestumque possident, id omne vestrum cum ipsis dominis futurum est. In hanc tam opimam mercedem, agite, cum diis bene juvantibus arma capite. Satis adhuc in vastis Lusitaniae Celtiberiaeque montibus pecora consequando nullum emolumentum tot laborum periculorumque vestrorum vidistis: tempus est jam opulenta vos ac ditia stipendia facere et 25 tam difficilem existimariatis victoriam fore. Sæpe et con-

XLV.

The Romans throw a bridge over the Ticinus, and erect a fort to defend it. Mahurabali sent by Hannibal, while the Romans are engaged in this work, with a body of Numid-Ian horse to lay waste the territories of the Roman allies. — The Romans cross the Ticinus, and take up a position near Hannibal. — Hannibal animates his soldiers by promises of rewards, if they should prove victorious.

fecto, traductus Romanus exercitus in agrum 10 Insibrium quinque milia passuum a Victumulis consedit. Ibi Hannibal castra habebat; revocatoque propere Maharbale atque equitibus, cum instare certamen cerneret, nihil umquam satis dictum præmonitumque ad cohortandos 15 milites ratus, vocatis ad contionem certa præmia pronuntiat, in quorum spem pugnarent: agrum sese daturum esse in Italia, Africa, Hispania, ubi quisque velit, immunem ipsi qui accepisset liberisque; qui pecuniam quam agrum 20 maluisset, ei se argento satisfacturum; qui sociorum cives Carthaginenses fieri vellent, potestatem facturum; qui domos redire malleant, daturum se operam, ne cujus suorum popularium mutatam secum fortunam esse vellent. Servis quoque dominos prosecutis libertatem proponit, binaque pro 25 his mancipia dominis se redditurum. Eaque ut rata scirent fore, agrum laeva manu, dextera silicem retinens, si falleret, Jovem ceterosque precatus deos, ita se maactarent, quem ad modum ipse agrum mactasset, secundum precatationem caput pecudis saxo elisit. Tum vero omnes, velut diis auctoribus 30 in spem suam quisque acceptis, id morae quod nondum pugnarent ad potienda sperata rati, prælium uno animo et voce una poscunt.

XLVI.

Apud Romanos handquaquam tanta alacritas erat, super cetera recentibus etiam territos prodigiis: nam et lupus intraverat castra, laniatique obviis ipse intactus evaserat, et examen spum in arbores pretorio imminente concededat. Quibus procuratis, Scipio, cum equitatu jaculatoribusque expeditis profectus ad castra hostium, exque propinquo copias, quantae et cujus generis essent, speculandae, obvius fit Hannibali et ipsi cum equitibus ad explo 10 randa circa loca progresso. Neutri alteros

Hoc primum cum Hannibale praelium fuit; quo facile apparuit et equitatu meliorem Pae-20 num esse, et ob id campos patentes, quales sunt inter Padum Alpesque, bello gerendo Ro-30 manis aptos non esse. Itaque proxima nocte, 5 jussis militibus vasa silentio colligere, castra ab Ticino mota festinaturnque ad Padum est, level country between the Alps and the Po. They cross this latter river, and arrive at Placentia. — Hannibal pursues. — Delayed, however, for some time in effecting the passage of the Ticinum. — Encamps finally six miles from Placentia. — Offers the Romans battle.

ut ratibus, quibus junxerat flumen, nondum resolutis, sine tumultu atque insectatione hostis, copias trajiceret. Prius Placentiam perse-10 nere quam satis sciret Hannibal ab Ticino pro- fectos: tamen ad sexcentos moratorum in citeriore ripa Padi, segniter ratem solventes, cepit. Transire pontem non potuit, ut extrema resoluta erant, tota rate in secundam aquam 15 labente. Cælius auctor est, Magonem cum equitatu et Hispanis peditibus flumen extemplo transnasse; ipsum Hannibalem per superi- ora Padi vada exercitum traduxisse, elephantis in ordinem ad sustinendum impetum fluminis 20 oppositis. Ea peritis amnis ejus vix fidem fecerint; nam neque equites, armis equisque salvis, tantam vim fluminis superasse veri simile est, ut jam Hispanos omnes inflati transve- rint utres; et multorum dierum circitu Padi vada petenda fuerint, qua exercitus gravis impedimentis transduci posset. 25 Potiores apud me auctores sunt, qui biduo vix locum rate jungendo flumini inventum tradunt; ea cum Magone equi- tes Hispanorum expeditos praemissos. Dum Hannibal, circa flumen legationibus Gallorum audiendis moratus, trajicit gravius peditum agmen, interim Mago equitesque ab transi-30 tu fluminis diei unius itinere Placentiam ad hostes conten- dunt. Hannibal paucis post diebus sex milia a Placentia castra communivit, et postero die in conspectu hostium acie directa potestatem pugnæ fecit.

XLVIII.

Insequenti nocte caedes in castris Romanis, tumultu tamen quam re major, ab auxiliariibus Gallis factura est. Ad duo milia peditum et ducenti equites, vigilibus ad portas trucidatis, ad Hannibalem transfugiunt; quos Penus bene- nigne adlocutus, et spe ingenti animorum accensos, in civitates quemque suas ad sollicitandos popularium animos dimisit. Scipio, cædem eam signum defectionis omnium Gallorum esse ratus, contactosque eo scelere ve-10 lut injecta rabie ad arma ituros, quamquam gravis adhuc vulnere erat, tamen quarta vigilia noctis inequentis tacito agmine profectus ad Trebiam fluvium, jam in loca altiora collesque impeditores equiti castra movet. Minus 15 quam ad Ticinum fefellit; missisque Hannibal primum Numidis, deinde omni equitatu, turbasset utique novissimum agmen, ni aviditate prædæ in vacua Romana castra Numidæ devertissent. Ibi dum, perscrutantes loca om-20 nia castrorum, nullo satis digno moræ pretio tempus terunt, emissus hostis est de manibus; et cum jam transgressos Trebiam Romanos metantesque castra conspexissent, paucos moratorum occiderunt citra flumen interceptos. Scipio, nec 25 vexationem vulneris in via jactati ultra patiens et collegam (jam enim et revocatum ex Sicilia audierat) ratus exspectandum, locum, qui prope flumen tutissimus stativis est visus, delectum communiit. Nec procul inde Hannibal cum consedisset, quantum victoria equestri elatus, 30 tantum anxius inopia, quæ per hostium agros euntere nusquam præparatis commeatibus major in dies excipiæbat, ad Clastidium vicum, quo magnum frumenti numerum congresserat Romani, mittit. Ibi cum vim pararent, spes facta proditionis; nec sane magno pretio, nummis aureis quad-35 ringentis, Dasio Brundisino præfecto præsidii, corrupto, traditur Hannibali Clastidium. Id horreum fuit Pœnis sedentibus ad Trebiam. In captivos ex tradito præsidio, ut fama clementiæ in principio rerum colligeretur, nihil sævitum est.

Ipse, compositus Siciliiæ rebus, decem navibus oram Italiam legens Ariminum pervenit. Inde cum exercitu suo profectus ad Trebiam flumen collegæ conjungitur.

LII.

Jam ambo consules, et quidquid Romana-rum virium erat, Hannibali oppositum, aut illis coipiis defendi posse Romanum imperium aut spem nullam aliam esse satis declarabat. Ta-men consul alter, equestri prœlio uno et vulnere suo deminutus, trahi rem malebat: re-centis animi alter, eoque ferocior, nullam diliationem patiebatur. Quod inter Trebiam Pa-dumque agri est, Galli tum incolabant; in duorum præpotentium populum certamine, per 10 ambiguum favorem, haud dubie gratiam victoris spectantes. Id Romani, modo ne quid moverint, æquo satis, Pænus perinquo animo fe-rebat, ab Gallis accitum se venisse ad liberandos eos dictitans. Ob eam iram, simul ut præda militem aleret, duo milia peditum et mille equites, Numidas plerosque, mixtos quosdam et Gallos, populari omnem deinceps agrum usque ad Padi ripas jussit. Egentes ope Galli, cum ad id dubios servassent animos, coacti ab 20 auctoribus injuriæ ad vindices futuros declinant; legatisque ad consulem missis, auxilium Romanorum terræ, ob nimiam cultorum fidem in Romanos laboranti, orant. Cornelioc nec causa, nec tempus agendæ rei placebat; suspectaque ei gens erat, cum ob 25 infida multa facinora, tum, ut alia vetustate obsolevissent, ob recentem Boiorum perfidiam. Sempronius contra, continen-dis in fide sociis maximum vinculum esse primos quoque, qui egiissent opes, defensos, censebat. Tum, collega cunctante, equitatum suum, mille peditum jaculatoribus ferme 30 admixtis, ad defendendum Gallicum agrum trans Trebiam mittit. Il sparsos et incompositos, ad hoc graves praeda plerosque, cum inopinatos invasisset, ingentem terrem cædemque ac fugam usque ad castra stationesque hostium fecere; unde multitudine effusa pulsi, rursus subsidio sornum 35 prœlium restituere. Varia inde pugna sequentes cedentesque cum ad extremum æquassent certamen, major tamen quam hostium Romano fama victoriam fuit.

LI

Ceterum nemini omnium major justiorque quam ipsi consuli videri: gaudio efferri, qua parte copiarum alter consul victus foret, ea se vicisse. Restitutos ac refectos militibus animos, nec quemquam esse praeter collegam qui 5 dilatam dimicationem vellet: eum animo magis quam corpore ægrum memoria vulneris aciem ac tela hordere. Sed non esse cum ægro senescendum. Quid enim ultra differri aut teri tempus? quem tertium consulem, quem 10 alium exercitum exspectari? Castra Carthaginiensium in Italia ac prope in conspectu urbis esse. Non Siciliam ac Sardiniam victis ademptas, nec cis Iberum Hispaniam peti, sed solo patrio terraque, in qua geniti forent, pelli 15 Romanos. "Quantum ingemiscant" inquit "patres nostri circa mœnia Carthaginis bellare soliti, si videant nos, pro-geniem suam, duos consules consularesque exercitus, in media Italia paventes intra castra; Pœnum, quod inter Alpes Apenninumque agri sit, suæ dicionis fecisse:" hæc 20 adsidens ægro collegæ, hæc in prætorio prope contionabundus agere. Stimulabat et tempus propinquum comitiorum, ne in novos consules bellum differretur, et occasio in se unum vertendæ gloriae, dum ægor collega erat. Itaque, nequidquam dissentiente Cornelio, parari ad propinquum 25 certamen milites jubet.

Hannibal cum, quid optimum foret hosti, cerreret, vix ullam spem habebat temere atque improvide quidquam consules acturos. Cum alterius ingenium, fama prius, deinde re cognitum, percitum ac ferox sciret esse, feroeciusque factum prospero cum prædatoribus suis certamine crederet, ad-esse gerendæ rei fortunam haud diffidebat. Cujus ne quod prætermitteret tempus, sollicitus intentusque erat, dum tiro hostium miles esset, dum meliorem ex ducibus inutilim vulnus faceret, dum Gallorum animi vigerent, quorum ingen-tem multitudinem sciebat segnius secuturam, quanto longius ab domo traherentur. Cum ob hæc taliaque speraret propinquum certamen, et facere, si cessaretur, cuperet, speculatoresque Galli, ad ea exploranda, quæ vellet, tutiores, quia in utrisque castris militabant, paratos pugnæ esse Romanos 40 rettulissent, locum insidiis circumspectare Pœnus cæpit.

LIV.

Erat in medio rivus peraltis utrimque clausus ripis, et circa obsitus palustribus herbis et, quibus inculta ferme vestiuntur, virgultis ve-pribusque. Quem ubi equites quoque tegendo satis latebrosum locum circumvectus ipse oculis perlustravit, “Hic erit locus” Magoni fratri ait “quem teneas: delige centenos viros ex omni pedite atque equite, cum quibus ad me vigilia prima venias: nunc corpora curare tempus est.” Ita prætorium missum. Mox cum 10 deletis Mago aderat. “Robora virorum cerno,” inquit Hannibal; “sed uti numero etiam, on animis modo valeatis, singulis vobis no-venos ex turmis manipulisque vestri similis eligite. Mago locum monstrabit, quem insi-deatis: hostem cæcum ad has belli artes habetis.” Ita mille equitibus Magoni mille peditibus dimissis, Hannibal prima luce Numidas equites transgressos Trebiam flumen obequitare jubet hostium portis, jaculandoque in stationes elicere ad pugnam hostem; injecto deinde certamine 20 cedendo sensim citra flumen pertrahere. Hae mandata Numidis: ceteris ducibus peditum equitumque præceptum, ut prandere omnes juberent, armatos deinde instratisque equis signum exspectare.

Sempronius ad tumultum Numidarum primum omnem 25 equitatum, ferox ea parte virium, deinde sex milia peditum, postremo omnes copias ad destinatum jam ante consilio avidus certaminis eduxit. Erat forte brumæ tempus et nivalis dies in locis Alpibus Apenninoque interjectis, propinquitate etiam fluminum ac paludum prægelidis. Ad hoc 30 raptim eductis hominibus atque equis, non capto ante cibo, non ope ulla ad arcendum frigus adhibita, nihil caloris ine- rat; et quidquid auræ fluminis appropinquabant, adflabat acrior frigoris vis. Ut vero refugientes Numidas insequen- tes aquam ingressi sunt (et erat pectoribus tenus aucta noc- 35 turno imbri) tum utique egressis rigere omnibus corpora, ut vix armorum tenendorum potentia esset, et simul lassitudine et procedente jam die fame etiam deficere.

LV.

Hannibalis interim miles, ignibus ante ten- toria factis, oleoque per manipulos, ut molli- rent artus, misso, et cibo per otium capto, ubi transgressos flumen hostes nuntiatum est, ala- cer animis corporibusque arma capit atque in aciem procedit. Baleares locat ante signa, levemque armaturam, octo ferme milia homi- num; dein graviorem armis peditem, quod virium, quod roboris erat. In cornibus cir- cumfudit decem milia equitum, et ab cornibus in utramque 10 partem divisos elephantos statuit. Consul effusos sequentes equites, cum ab resistentibus subito Numidis incauti excipe- rentur, signo receptui dato, revocatos circumdedidit peditibus.
Duodeviginti milia Romani erant, socium nominis Latinorum viginti; auxilia præterea Cenomanorum: ea sola in fide 15 manserat Gallica gens. His copiis concursum est. Prœlium a Balearibus ortum est; quibus cum majore robore legiones obsisterent, deductæ propere in cornua leves armaturæ sunt. Quæ res efficit ut equitatus Romanus extemplo urgeretur: nam cum vix jam per se resisterent decem milibus equitum 20 quattuor milia, et fessi integris plerisque, obruti sunt insuper velut nube jaculorum a Balearibus conjecta. Ad hoc elephanti, eminentes ab extremis cornibus, equis maxime non visu modo sed odore insolito territis, fugam late faciebant. Pedestris pugna par animis magis quam viribus erat, quas 25 recentes Pœnus, paulo ante curatis corporibus, in prœlium attulerat: contra jejuna fessaque corpora Romanis et rigen-tia gelu torpebant. Restitisses tamen animis, si cum pede dite solum foret pugnatum: sed et Baleares, pulso equite, jaculabantur in latera, et elephanti jam in median peditum 30 aciem sese tulerant; et Mago Numidæque, simul latebras eorum improvida præterlata acies est, exorti ab tergo ingen-tem tumultum ac terrem fecere. Tamen in tot circum-stantibus malis mansit aliquandiu immota acies, maxime præter spem omnium adversus elephántos. Eos velites, ad 35 id ipsum locati, verutis conjectis et avertere, et insecuti aversos sub candidis, qua maxime molli cete vulnera accipiant, fodiebant.

LVI.

Trepidantes inde, et prope jam in suos con-sternatos, media acie in extremam ad sinistrum cornu adversus Gallos auxiliares agi jussit Hannibal. Ii extemplo haud dubiam fecere fugam, eoque novus terror additus Romanis, ut fusæ auxilia sua viderunt. Itaque cum jam in orbem pugnarent, decem milia ferme hominum, cum alibi evadere nequissent, media Afrorum acie, quæ Gallicis auxiliis firmata erat, cum ingenti cæde hostium perrupere: et cum neque 10 in castra reditus esset flumine interclusis, neque præ imbri satis decernere possent, quae suis opem ferrent, Placentiam recto itinere perrexere. Plures deinde in omnes partes eruptiones factæ; et qui flumen petiere, aut 15 gurgitibus assumpti sunt, aut inter cunctationem ingrediendi ab hostibus oppressi; qui passim per agros fuga sparsi erant, vestigia cedentis sequentes agminis Placentiam contendere. Aliis timor hostium audaciam in-20 grediendi flumen fecit, transgressique in castra pervenerunt. Imber nive mixtus et intoleranda vis frigoris et homines multos et jumenta et elephas prope omnes absumpsit. Finis insequendi hostes Pœnis flumen Trebia fuit; et ita torpentes gelu in castra rediere, ut vix laetitiam victoriae 25 sentirent. Itaque nocte insequenti, cum presidium castro- rum, et quod reliquum ex magna parte militum erat ratibus Trebiam trajicerent, aut nihil sensere obstrepente pluvia, aut, quia jam moveri nequiban præ lassitudine ac vulneri- bus, sentire sese dissimilarunt; quietisque Pœnis tacito 30 agmine ab Scipione consule exercitus Placentiam est per- ductus, inde Pado trajectus Cremonam, ne duorum exer- cituum hibernis una colonia premeretur.

LVII.

Romam tautus terror ex hac clade perlatus est, ut jam ad urbem Romanam crederent in- festis signis hostem venturum, nec quidquam spei aut auxiliii esse, quo portis menibusque vim arcenerent. Uno consule ad Ticinum victo, 5 altero ex Sicilia revocato, duobus consulibus, duobus consularibus exercitibus victis, quos alios duces, quas alias legiones esse quæ aces- santur? Ita territis Sempronius consul advenit, ingenti periculo per effusos passim ad præ-10 dandum hostium equites, audacia magis quam consilio aut spe fallendi resistendive, si non falleret, transgressus. Id quod unum maxime in præsenta desiderabatur, comitiis consularibus habitis, in hiberna redit. Creati consules 15 Cn. Servilius et C. Flaminius.

Ceterum ne hiberna quidem Romania quieta erant, vagantibus passim Numidis equitibus, et ut quæque iis impeditiora erant, Celtiberis Lusitanisque. Omnes igitur undique clausi commetatus erant, nisi quos 20 Pado naves subveherent. Emporium prope Placentiam fuit, et opere magno munitum et valido firmatum præsidio. Ejus castelli expugnandi spe cum equitibus ac levi armaturae profectus Hannibal, cum plurimum in celando incepto ad effectum spei habuisset, nocte adortus non fefellit 25 vigiles. Tantus repente clamor est sublatus, ut Placentiae quoque audiretur. Itaque sub lucem cum equitatu consul aderat, jussis quadrato agmine legionibus sequi. Equestre interim proelium commissum; in quo, quia saucius Hannibal pugna excessit, pavore hostibus injecto defensum 30 egregie præsidium est. Paucorum inde dierum quieta sumpta, et vixdum satis percurato vulnere, ad Victumvias oppugnandas ire pegrît. Id emporium Romanis Gallico bello fuerat munitum: inde locum frequentaverant accolae mixti undique ex finitimis populis; et tum terror popula35 tionum eo plerosque ex agris computerat. Hujus generis multitudo, fama impigre defensi ad Placentiam præsidii accensa, armis arreptis, obviam Hannibali procedit. Magis agmina quam acies in via concurrerunt; et, cum ex altera parte nihil præter inconditam turbam esset, in altera et 40 dux militi et duci miles fidens, ad triginta quinque milia hominum a paucis fusa. Postero die deditione facta præsidium intra moenia acceperë; jussique arma tradere cum dicto paruisset, signum repente victoribus datur, ut tamquam vi captam urbem diriperent. Neque ulla, quæ in 45 tali re memorabilis scribentibus videri solet, prætermissa clades est: adeo omnis libidinis crudelitatisque et inhu-manae superbiae editum in miseris exemplum est. Hae fuere hibernae expeditiones Hannibalis.

LVIII.

Haud longi inde temporis, dum intolerabilia frigora erant, quies militia data est; et ad prima ac dubia signa veris profectus ex hibernis in Etruriam ducit, eam quoque gentem, sicut Gallos Liguresque, aut vi aut voluntate adjunc-turus. Transeuntem Appenninum adeo atrox adorta tempestas est, ut Alpium prope foedita-tem superaverit. Vento mixtus imber cum ferretur in ipsa ora, primo, quia aut arma omittenda erant, aut contra enitentes vertice intorti adfligebantur, constitere; dein, cum jam spiritum includeret nec reciprocare animam sineret, aversi a vento parumper consedere. Tum vero in-genti sono cœlum strepere, et inter horrendos fragores micare ignes: captis auribus et oculis metu omnes torpere. Tandem effuso imbre, cum eo magis accensa vis venti esset, ipso illo, quod deprensis erant, loco castra ponere necessarium visum est. Id vero laboris velut de integro initium fuit: nam nec explicare quidquam nec statuere poterant, nec quod statu-tum esset manebat, omnia perscindente vento et rapiente.
Et mox aqua levata vento, cum super gelida montium juga concreta esset, tantum nivosae grandinis deject, ut, omnibus ommissis, procumberent homines, tegminibus suis magis ob-ruti quam tecti: tantaque vis frigoris insecuta est, ut ex illa miserabili hominum jumentorumque strage cum se quisque extollere ac levare vellet, diu nequiret, quia torrentibus ri-gore nervis vix flectere artus poterant. Deinde, ut tandem agitando sese movere ac recipere animos, et raris locis ignis fieri estceptus, ad alienam opem quisque inops tendere.
Biduum eo loco velut obsessi mansere: multi homines, multa jumenta, elephanti quoque ex iiis, qui prœlio ad Trebiam facto superfuerant, septem assumpti.
Hannibal, having descended from the Apennines, moves his camp back towards Placentia. — Skirmish. — The Romans attack the Carthaginian camp. — Hannibal salutes them. — Fierce but indecisive encounter. — Hannibal retires among the Ligurians, Sempronius to Luca.

LX.

Dum hæc in Italia geruntur, Cn. Cornelius Scipio in Hispaniam cum classe et exercitu missus, cum ab ostio Rhodani profectus Pyreneæosque montes circumvectus, Emporiis appulisset classem, exposito ibi exercitu, orsus a Lacetanis, omnem oram usque ad Iberum flu-men, partim renovandis societatibus, partim novis instituendis, Romanæ dicionis fecit. Inde conciliata facilitatis clem-entiæque fama non ad maritimos modo populos, sed in mediterraneis quoque ac montanis ad ferociores jam gentes 10 valuit; nec pax modo apud eos, sed societas etiam armorum parata est, validæque aliquot auxiliorum cohortes ex iis con-scriptæ sunt. Hannonis cis Iberum provincia erat: eum reliquerat Hannibal ad regionis ejus præsidium. Itaque, priusquam alienarentur omnia, obviam eundum ratus, castris 15 in conspectu hostium positis, in aciem eduxit. Nec Romano differendum certamen visum, quippe qui sciret cum Hannone et Hasdrubale sibi dimicandum esse, malletque ad-versus singulos separatim, quam adversus duos simul rem gerere. Nec magni certaminis ea dimicatio fuit: sex milia 20 hostium cæsa, duo capta cum praesidio castrorum. Nam et castra expugnata sunt, atque ipse dux cum aliquot principibus capiuntur, et Cissis, propinquum castris oppidum, expugnatur. Ceterum præda oppidi parvi pretii rerum fuit, supellex barbarica ac villium mancipiorum: castra militem 25 ditavere, non ejus modo exercitus, qui victus erat, sed et ejus, qui cum Hannibale in Italia militatbat, omnibus fere caris rebus, ne gravia impedimenta ferentibus essent, citra Pyrenæum relictis.

LXI.

Priusquam certa hujus cladis fama accideret, transgressus Iberum Hasdrubal cum octo milibus peditum, mille equitum, tamquam ad primum adventum Romanorum occursurus, pos-Hasdrubal.—Counter-movements of Scipio. —Subdues the Ilergetes, who had revolted at the instigation of Hasdrubal.—Overcomes the Ausetani, who had also revolted.

quam perditas res ad Cissim amissaque castra accepit, iter ad mare convertit. Haud procul Tarraconae classicos milites navalesque socios, vagos palantesque per agros, quod ferme fit, ut secundae res neglectentiam creent, equite passim dimisso cum magna cæde, majore fuga ad naves compellit. Nec diutius circa ea loca morari ausus, ne ab Scipione opprimeretur, trans Iberum sese receptit. Et Scipio, raptim ad famam novorum hostium agmine acto, cum in paucos praefectos navium animadvertisset, praesidio Tarraconae modico relictio, Emporias cum classe reedit. Vixdum digresso eo, Hasdrubal aderat; et, Ilergetum populo, qui obsides Scipioni dederat, ad defectionem impulso, cum eorum ipsorum juventute agros fidelium Romanis sociorum vastat. Excito deinde Scipione hibernis, hostico cis Iberum rursus cedit agro. Scipio, relictam ab auctore defectionis Ilergetum gentem cum infesto exercitu invasisset, compulsionem omnibus Atanagrum urbem, quæ caput ejus populi erat, circumsegit; intraque dies paucos, pluribus quam ante obsidibus imperatis, Ilergetes pecunia etiam multatos in jus dicionemque recepit. Inde in Ausetanos prope Iberum, socios et ipsos Pœnorum, procedit; atque, urbe eorum obsessa, Lacetanos auxilium finitimis ferentes nocte, haud procul jam urbe, cum intrare vellent, exceptis insidiis. Cæsa ad duodecim milia; exuti prope omnes armis domos passim palantes per agros difugere. Nec obsessos alia ulla res quam iniqua oppugnantibus hiems tutabatur. Triginta dies obsidio fuit, per quos raro umquam nix minus quattuor pedes alta jacuit; adeoque pluteos ac vineas Romanorum operuerat, ut ea sola, ignibus aliquotiens conjectis ab hoste, etiam tutamentum fuerit. Postremo, cum Amusicus princeps eorum ad Hasdrubalem profugisset, viginti argenti talentis pacti deduntur. Tarraconem in hiberna reditum est.
LXII.

Romae aut circa urbem multa ea hieme prodigia facta, aut, quod evenire solet motis semel in religionem animis, multa nuntiata et temere credita sunt; in quis ingenuum infantem, semestrem, in foro olitorio triumphum clamasse; et foro boario bovem in tertiam contignationem sua sponte escendisse, atque inde tumultu habitorum territum sese deificisse; et navium speciem de caelo adfulsisse; et aedem Spei, quae est in foro olitorio, fulmine ictam; et Lanuvii hastam se com movisse, et corvum in aedem Junonis devolasse, atque in ipso pulvinario consedisse; et in agro Amiternino multis locis hominum specie procul candida veste visos, nec cumullo congressos; et in Piceno lapidibus pluvisse; et Cære sortes extenuatas; et in Gallia lupum vigili gladium ex vagina raptum abstulisse. Ob cetera prodigia libros adire decemviri jussi: quod autem lapidibus pluvisset in Piceno, novemdiale sacrum edictum, et subinde aliis procurandis prope tota civitas operata fuit. Jam primum omnium urbs lustrata est, hostiæque maiores, quibus editum est, diis cæsæ; et donum ex auri pondo quadraginta Lanuvium Junonis portatum est; et signum seneum matronæ Junoni in Aventino dedicaverunt; et lectisternium Cære, ubi sortes attenuata erant, imperatum; et supplicatio Fortunæ in Algido: Romæ quoque et lectisternium Juventati et supplicatio ad aedem Herculis nominatim, deinde universo populo circa omnia pulvinaria indícta; et Genio maiores hostiæ cæsæ quinque; et C. Atilius Serranus prætor vota suscipere jussus, si in decem annos res publica eodem stetisset statu. Hæc procurata votaque ex libris Sibyllinis magna ex parte levaverant 30 religione animos.
LXIII.

Consulium designatorum alter Flaminius, cui hæ legiones, quæ Placentiæ hibernabant, sorte evenerant, edictum et litteras ad consulem misit, ut is exercitus Idibus Martiiis Arimin adesset in castris. Huic in provincia consulatum inire consilium erat, memori veterum certaminum cum patribus, quæ tribunus plebis et quæ postea consul, prius de consulatu, qui abrogabatur, dein de triumpho habuerat; invisus etiam patribus ob novam legem, quam Q. Claudius tribunus plebis adversus senatum, atque, uno patrum adjuvante C. Flaminio, tulerat, ne quis senator, cuive senator pater fuisset, maritimam nave, quæ plus quam trecentarum amphorarum esset, haberet. Id satis habetur, bitum ad fructus ex agris vectandos: quæstus omnis patribus indecorus visus. Res per summam contentionem acta invidiam apud nobilitatem suasori legis Flaminio, favorem apud plebem alterumque inde consulatum peperit.

Ob hæc ratus auspiciis ementiendis, Latinarumque feriarum mora, et consularibus aliis impedimentis, retenturos se in urbe, simulato itinere privatus clam in provinciam abiit. Ea res ubi palam facta est, novam insuper iram infestis jam ante patribus movit: non cum senatu modo sed jam cum diis immortalibus C. Flaminium bellum gerere: consulem ante inauspicato factum revocantibus ex ipsa acie diis atque hominibus non paruisse; nunc conscientia spretorum et Capitolium et sollemnem votorum nuncupationem fugisse, ne die initi magistratus Jovis optimi maximi templum adiaret; ne senatum invisus ipse et sibi uni invisum videret consuleretque: ne Latinas indiceret, Jovique Latiari sollemne sacrum in monte faceret; ne auspicato prefectus in Capitolium ad vota nuncupanda, paludatus inde cum licto-

Liber XXII.

I.

Jam ver appetebat, cum Hannibal ex hibernis movit, et nequidquam ante conatus transcendere Apenninum intolerandis frigoribus, et cum ingenti periculo moratus ac metu. Galli, quos praedae populationumque concierat spes, 5 postquam pro eo, ut ipsi ex alieno agro rapeant agerentque, suas terras sedem belli esse premique utriusque partis exercituum hibernis viderent, vererunt retro in Hannibalem ab Romanis odia; petitusque sæpe principum 10 insidiis, ipsorum inter se fraudae, eadem levitate qua consenserant consensum indicantium, servatus erat, et, mutando nunc vestem nunc terum. — Varias tegumenta capitis, errore etiam sese ab insidiis munierat. Ceterum hic quoque ei timor 15 causa fuit maturius movendi ex hibernias.

Per idem tempus Cn. Servilius consul Romæ Idibus Martiiis magistratum iniit. Ibi cum de re publica rettulisset, redintegrata in C. Flaminium invidia est: duos se consules creasse, unum habere. Quod enim illi justum imperium, 20 quod auspiciun esse? Magistratus id a domo, publicis privatisque penatibus, Latinis feriis actis, sacrificio in monte perfecto, votis rite in Capitolio nuncupatis secum ferre: nec privatum auspicia sequi, nec sine auspiciis profection in externo ea solo nova atque integra concipere 25 posse. Augebant metum prodigia ex pluribus simul locis nuntiata: in Sicilia militibus aliquot spicula, in Sardinia autem in muro circumeunti vigiliae equitii scipionem, quem manu tenuerat, arsisse, et litora crebris ignibus fulsisse, et scuta duo sanguine sudasse, et milites quosdam ictos fulmis nibus, et solis orbem minui visum; et Præneste ardentes lapides caelo cecidisse; et Arpis parmas in caelo visas pugnantemque cum luna solem; et Capennes duas interdii lunas ortas, et aquas Cæretes sanguine mixtas fluxisse, fontemque, ipsum Herculis cruentis manasse respersum maculis; et 3 f Antii metentibus cruentas in corbem spicas cecidisse; et Faleriis caelum findi velut magno hiatu visum, quaque patuerit, ingens lumen effulsisse; sortes sua sponte attenuatas, unamque excidisse ita scriptam "Mavors telum suum concutit;" et per idem tempus Romæ signum Martis Appia 40 via ae simulacra luporum sudasse, et Capuæ speciem caeli ardentis fuisse lunæque inter imbre cadentis. Inde minori-ribus etiam dictu prodigiis fides habita: capras lanatas qui busdam factas, et gallinam in marem, gallum in feminam sese vertisse. His, sicut erant nuntiata, expositis, auctori- 45 busque in curiam introductis, consul de religione patres consuluit. Decretum, ut ea prodigia partim majoribus hostiis partim lactentibus procurarentur, et uti supplicatio per tri duum ad omnia pulvinaria haberetur; cetera, cum decemvi-ri libros inspexissent, ut ita fierent, quem ad modum cordi 50 esse divis carminibus præfarentur. Decemvirorum monitu decretum est, Jovi primum donum fulmen aurem pondo quinquaginta fieret, Junoni Minervæque ex argento dona darentur, et Junoni Reginae in Aventino, Junonique Sospitae Lenuvii, majoribus hostiis sacrificaretur; matronæque pe-55 eunia collata, quantum conferre cuique commodum esset, donum Junoni Reginae in Aventinum ferrent, lectisternium-que fieret; quin ut libertinæ et ipsæ, unde Feroniæ donum daretur, pecuniam pro facultatibus suis conferrent. Hæ ubi facta, decemviri Ardeæ in foro majoribus hostiis sacrifi-60 carunt. Postremo Decembri jam mense ad ædem Saturni Romæ immolatum est, lectisterniumque imperatum (et eum lectum senatores straverunt) et convivium publicum; ac per urbem Saturnalia diem ac noctem clamata, populusque cum diem festum habere ac servare in perpetuum jussus. 65

II.

Dum consul placandis Romæ diis habendoque diletu dat operam, Hannibal profectus ex hibernis, quia jam Flaminium consulem Arretium pervenisse fama erat, cum aliud longius ceterum commodius ostenderetur iter, 5 propriorem viam per paludem petit, qua fluvius Arnus per eos dies solito magis inunda-erat. Hispanos et Afros et omne veterani robur exercitus, admixtis ipsorum impedimentis, necubi consistere coactis necessaria ad usus 10 deessent, primos ire jussit; sequi Gallos, ut id agminis medium esset; novissimos ire equites; Magonem inde cum expeditis Numidis cogere agmen, maxime Gallos, si tædio laboris longæque viae, ut est mollis ad talia gens, dila-15 berentur aut subsisterent, cohibentem. Primi, qua modo præirent duces, per praetelas fluvii ac profundas voragines, hausti pæne limo immergentesque se tamen signa sequabantur. Galli neque sustinere se prolapsi neque adsurgere ex voraginibus poterant, aut corpora animis aut animos spe sustinebant, alii fessa aegre trahentes membra, alii, ubi semel victis tædio animis procubuissent, inter jumenta et ipsa jacentia passim morientes. Maximeque omnium vigiliae conficiabant per quadruiduum jam et tres noctes toleratæ. Cum, omnia obtinentibus aquis, nihil, ubi in sicco 25 fessa sternerent corpora, inveniri posset, cumulatis in aquas sarcinis insuper incumebant. Jumentorum itinere toto prostratorum passim acervi tantum, quod extaret aqua, quærentibus ad quietem parvi temporis necessarium cubile dabant. Ipse Hannibal, aeger oculis ex verna primum in-

Multis hominibus jumentisque fœde amissis, cum tandem de paludibus emersisset, ubi prinum in sicco potuit, castra locat; certumque per præmissos exploratores habuit exercitum Romanum circa Arretii ménia esse. Consul-lis deinde consilia atque animum, et situm regionum, itineraque, et copias ad comméatus expédiendos, et cetera, quæ cognóssé in rem erat, summa omnia cum cura inquiringo exsequebatur. Regio erat in primis Italiae fertilis, 10 Etrusci campi, qui Fæsulas inter Arretiumque jacent, frumenti ac pecoris et omnium copia rerum opulénti.
Consul ferox ab consulatu priore, et non modo legum sat-patrum majestatis, sed ne deorum quidem satis metuens.
Hanc insitam ingenio ejus temeritatem fortuna prospero; civilibus bellicosque rebus successu aluerat. Itaque satis ap-parebat, nec deos nec homines consuléntem, ferociter omnia ac præpropere acturum. Quoque pronior esset in vitia sua, agitate cùm atque irritare Pœnus parat; et læva relictò hoste Fœsulas petens, medio Etrurìæ agro prædatum pro-20 fectus, quantam maximam vastitatem potest, cædibus in-cendiisque consuli procùl ostendit. Flaminius, qui ne quieto quidem hoste ipse quieturus erat, tum vero, postquam res sociorum ante oculos prope suos ferri agique vidit, suum id dèducus ratus, per medium jam Italian vagari Pœnum, atque, 25 obsistente nullo, ad ipsa Romana menia ire oppugnanda, ceteris omnibus in consilio salutaria magis quam speciosa suadentibus; collegam exspectandum, ut conjunctis exerci-tibus communi animo consilioque rem gererent; interim equid equitatu auxilliisque levium armorum ab effusa prædandi li-centia hostem cohíbendum | iratus se ex consilio proripuit, signumque simul itineris pugnæque cum dedisset, "Immo

Hannibal, quod agri est inter Cortonam ur-bem Trasumennumque lacum, omni clade belli pervastat, quo magis iram hosti ad vindican-Trasumennus. — The army of Flaminius is surrounded. Cortonenses Trasumennus subit. Via tantum interest perangusta, velut ad id ipsum de industria relieco spatio; deinde paulo latior patescit campus; inde colles ad-insurgunt. Ibi castra in aperto locat, ubi ipse cum Afris modo Hispanicque consideret. Baleares ceteramque levem 10 armaturam post montes circumducit; equites ad ipsas fauces saltus, tumulis apte tegentibus, locat, ut ubi intrassent Romani, objecto equitatu clausa omnia lacu ac montibus essent.

Flaminius cum pridie solis occasu ad lacum pervenisset, inexplo rato, postero die, vixdum satis certa luce, angustiis 15 superatis, postquam in patentiorem campum pandi agmen coepit, id tantum hostium quod ex adverso erat conspexit: ab tergo ac super caput decepere insidiae. Poenus ubi, id quod petierat, clausum lacu ac montibus et circumfusum suis copiis habuit hostem, signum omnibus dat simul invadendi. Qui ubi, qua cuique proximum fuit, decucurrent, eo magis Romanis subita atque improvisa res fuit, quod orta ex lacu nebula campo quam montibus densior sederat, agminaque hostium ex pluribus collibus ipsa inter se satis conspecta eoque magis pariter decucurrent. Romanus clamore 25 prius undique orto quam satis cerneret, se circumventum esse sensit; et ante in frontem lateraque pugnari coepit est, quam satis instrueretur acies, aut expediti arma, stringique gladii possent.

Battle of the lake Trasumennus.—Desperate encounter.—The conflict so violent that none of the combatants felt an earthquake which occurred at the time, and was very severe in its effects.

Consul, percusis omnibus, ipse satis, ut in re trepida, impavidus, turbatos ordines, vertente se quoque ad dissonos clamores, instruit, ut tempus locusque patitur, et, quamque adire audire potest, adhortatur, ac stare et 5 pugnare jubet: nec enim inde votis aut exploratione deum, sed vi ac virtute, evadendum esse. Per medias acies ferro viam fieri; et quo timoris minus sit, eo minus ferme periculi esse. Ceterum præ strepitu ac tumultu nec consilium 10 nec imperium accipi poterat; tantumque aberat ut sua signa atque ordinem et locum nosceret miles; ut vix ad arma capienda aptandaque pugnæ competeret animus, opprimenter turque quidam onerati magis his quam testi. Et erat in tanta calligine major usus aurium quam oculo-15 rum. Ad gemitus vulnerum ictusque corporum aut armorum, et mixtos strepantium paventiumque clamores, circumferebant ora oculosque. Alii fugientes pugnantium globis illati hærebant; alios redeuentes in pugnam avertebat fugientium agmen. Deinde, ubi in omnes partes nequidquam im-20 petus capti, et ab lateribus montes ac lacus, a fronte et ab tergo hostium acies claudebat, apparuitque nullam nisi in dextra ferroque salutis spem esse; tum sibi quisque dux adhortatorque factus ad rem gerendam, et nova de integro exorta pugna est, non illa ordinata per principes hastatos-25 que ac triarios, nec ut pro signis antesignani, post signa alia pugnaret acies, nec ut in suæ legione miles aut cohorte aut manipulo esset: fors conglobat, et animus suus cuique ante aut post pugnandi ordinem dabat; tantusque fuit ardor armorum, adeo intentus pugnæ animus, ut eum motum terræ, 30 qui multarum urbium Italiae magnas partes prostravit, avertitque cursu rapidos amnes, mare fluminibus invexit, montes lapsum ingenti proruit, nemo pugnantium senserit.

VI.

Tres ferme horas pugnatum est, et ubique atrociter. Circa consulem tamen acrior infestiorque pugna est. Eum et robora virorum sequebantur, et ipse, quacumque in parte premi ac laborare senserat suos, impigre ferebat 5 opem insignemque armis et hostes summa vi petebant et tuebantur cives, donec Insuber eques (Ducario nomen erat) facie quoque noscritans consulem "En" inquit "hic est," popolaribus suis "qui legiones nostras cecidit, agrosque et ur-10 bem est depopulatus! jam ego hanc victimam Manibus peremptorum fæde civium dabo:” substitisque calcaribus equo, per confertissimam hostium turbam impetum facit; obtruncatoque prius armigero, qui se infesto venienti obvi- am objecerat, consulem lancea transfixit. [Spoilare cupien- tem triarii objectis scutis arcuere.] Magnae partis fuga inde primum cepit; et jam nec lacus nec montes pavori obsta- bant. Per omnia arata præruptaque velut cæci evadunt, ar- maquæ et viri super alium alii præcipitabant. Pars magna, ubi locus fugæ deest, per prima vada paludis in aquam pro- gressi, quoad capitibus, humeris, extare possunt, sese immer- gunt. Fuere, quos inconsulturn pavor nando etiam capessere fugam, impulerit, quæ ubi immensa ac sine spe erat, aut de- ficientibus animis hauriebantur gurgitibus, aut nequidquam fessi vada retro aegerrime repetebant, atque ibi ab ingressis 25 aquam hostium equitibus passim trucidabantur. Sex milia ferme primi agminis, per adversos hostes eruptione impigre facta, ignari omnium quæ post se agerentur, ex saltu evasere, et, cum in tumulo quodam constitissent, clamorem modo ac sonum armorum audientes, quæ fortuna pugnae esset, neque 30 scire nec perspicere praecalligine poterant. Inclinata denique re, cum incalescente sole dispulsa nebula aperuisset diem, tum liquida jam luce montes campique perditas res stratumque ostendere fœde Romanam aciem. Itaque, ne in conspectos procul immitteretur eques, sublatis raptim signis, quam cita- 35 tissimo poterant agmine, sese abripuerunt. Postero die, cum, super cetera, extrema fames etiam instaret, fidem dante Maha- harbale, qui cum omnibus equestribus copiis nocte consecu- tus erat, si arma tradidissent, abire cum singulis vestimentis passurum, sese dediderunt. Quæ Punica religione servata 40 fides ab Hannibale est, atque in vincula omnes conjecit.

VII.

Hæc est nobilis ad Trasumennum pugna, atque inter paucás memorata populi Romani clades. Quindecim milia Romanorum in acie longed deliberations of the Senate. Cæsa sunt; decem milia sparsa fugā per omnem Etruriam aversis itineribus urbem petierē: duo milia quingenti hostium in acie, multi postea utrimque ex vulneribus perierē. Multiplex cædes utrimque facta traditur ab aliis: ego, præterquam quod nihil hæustum ex vano velim, quo nimis inclinant ferme scribentium animi, Fabium aequalem temporibus hujusce belli potissimum auctorem habui. Hannibal, captivorum qui Latini nominis essent, sine pretio dimissis, Romanis in vincula datis, segregata ex hostium coacervatorum cumulis corpora suorum cum sepeliri jussisset, Flaminii quoque corpus, funeris causa magna cum cura inquisitum, non in venit. (Rome ad primum nuntium clādis ejus cum ingenti terrore ac tumultu concursus in forum populi est factus. Matronae vagae per vias, quae repens clades adlata, quaeve fortuna exercitus esset, obvios punctantur. Et cum frequentis contionis modo turba in comitium et curiam versa magistratus vocaret, tandem haud multō ante solis occasum M. Pomponius prætor “Pugna” inquit “magna victi sūmus;” et, quamquam nihil certius ex eo auditum est, tamen ab aliō impleti rumoribus domos referunt consulem 25 cum magna parte copiarum caesum; superesse paucos, aut fugā passim per Etruriam sparsos, aut captos ab hoste. Quot casus exercitus victi fuerant, tot in curas dispersiti animi eorum erant, quorum propinqui sub C. Flaminio consule meruerant, ignorantium, quae cu jusque suorum fortuna 30 esset: nec quisquam satis certum habet, quid aut speret aut timeat. Posterò ac deinceps aliquot diebus ad portas major prōpe mulierum quam virorum multitudo stetit, aut suorum aliquem aut nuntios de his opperiens circumfundebanturque obviis sciscitantantes, neque avelli, utique ab notis, 35 priusquam ordine omnia inquisissent, poterant. Inde varios vultus digredientium ab nuntiis cernerēs, ut cuique lāta aut tristia nuntiabantur, gratulantesque aut consolantes redeuntibus domos circumfusos. Feminarum præcipue et gaudia insignia erant et luctus. Unam in ipsa porta sospiti filio 40 repente oblatam in complexu ejus exspirasse ferunt; alteram, cui mors filii falsa nuntiata erat, maestam sedentem domi, ad primum conspectum redeuntis filii gaudio nimio examinatam. Senatum praetores per dies aliquot ab orto usque ad occidentem solem in curia retinent, consultantes, quonam duce aut copiis quibus resisti victoribus Pœnis posset.

VIII.

Prior quam satis certa consilia essent, repens alia nuntiatur clades, quattuor milia equitum cum C. Centenio propertore missa ad collegam ab Servilio consule in Umbria, quo post pugnam ad Trasumennum auditam averterant iter, ab Hannibale circumventa. Ejus rei fama varie homines adfectit: pars, occupatis majore ægritudine animis, levem ex comparatione priorum ducere recentem equitum jacturam; pars non id quod acciderat per se æstimare, sed, ut in adfecto corpore quamvis levis causa magis quam valido gravior sentiretur, ita tum ægræ et adfectæ civitati quodcumque adversi incidit, non rerum magnitudine, sed viribus extenuatis, quæ nihil quod adgravaret pati possent, æstimandum esse. Itaque ad remedium jam diu neque desideratum nec adhibitum, dictatorem dicendum, civitas confugit. Et quia et consul aberat, a quo uno dici posse videbatur, nec per occupatam armis Punicis Italiam facile erat aut nuntium aut litteras mitti, nec dictatorem populus creare poterat, quod numquam ante eam diem fac tum erat, predictatorem populus creavit Q. Fabium Maximum et magistrum equitum M. Minucium Rufum; hisque negotium ab senatu datum ut muros turresque urbis firman rent, et præsidia disponerent quibus locis videretur, pontesque rescinderent fluminum: pro urbe ac penatibus dimicant.
Hannibal recto itinere per Umbriam usque ad Spoletium venit. Inde, cum perpopulato agro urbem oppugnare adortus esset, cum magna cæde suorum repulsus, conjectans ex unius coloniæ haud nimis prospere temptatæ viribus, quanta moles Romanæ urbis esset, in agrum Picenum avertit iter, non copia solum omnis generis frugum abundantem, sed refer-tum præda, quam effuse avidi atque egentes rapiebant. Ibi per dies aliquot stativa habita, reflectusque miles hibernis itineribus ac palustris via prælioque magis ad eventum secundo quam lei aut facili adfectus. Ubi satis quieti datum præda ac populationibus magis quam otio aut reque gaudentibus, profectus 15 Prætutianum Hadrianum agrum, Marsos inde Marrucinosque et Pelignos devastat circaque Arpos et Luceriam proximam Apuliæ regionem. Cn. Servilius consul, levibus præliis cum Gallis actis et uno oppido ignobili expugnato, postquam de collegiæ exercitusque cæde audivit, jam mænibus patriæ metuens, ne abesset in discrimine extremo, ad urbem iter intendit.

Q. Fabius Maximus dictator iterum, quo die magistratum initiit, vocato senatu, ab diis orsus, cum edocuisset patres, plus neglegentia cærimoniarum auspiciarumque quam temeritate atque insitia peccatum a C. Flaminio consule esse, quæque piacula iræ deum essent, ipsos deos consulendos esse, pervicit, ut, quod non ferme decernitur nisi cum tetra prodigia nuntiata sunt, decemviri libros Sibyllinos adire jubentur. Qui, inspectis fatalibus libris, rettulerunt patribus, quod ejus 30 belli causa votum Marti foret, id, non rite factum, de integro atque amplius faciundum esse; et Jovi ludos magnos et ædes Veneri Erycinæ ac Menti vovendas esse, et supplicationem lectisterniumque habendum, et ver sacrum voven-

XI.

Ita rebus divinis peractis, tum de bello reque de publica dictator rettulit, quibus quotve legionibus victori hosti obviam eun-dum esse patres censerent. Decretum ut ab Cn. Servilio consule exercitum acciperet; scriberet praeterea ex civibus sociisque quantum equitum ac peditum videretur; cetera omnia ageret faceretque ut e re publica duceret.
Fabius duas legiones se adjecturum ad Servilianum exercitum dixit. Iis per magistrum 10 equitum scriptis Tibur diem ad conveniendum edxit. Edictoque proposito, ut, quibus oppida castellaque immunita essent, ii commigrarent in loca tuta; ex agris quoque demigra-rent omnes regionis ejus, qua iturus Hannibal 15 esset, tectis prius incensis ac frugibus corrupt-tis, ne cujus rei copia esset; ipse via Flaminia profectus obviam consuli exercituique, cum ad Tiberim circa Oriculum prospexisset agmen, consulemque cum equitibus ad se progredientem, viatorem 20 misit qui consuli nuntiaret ut sine lictoribus ad dictatorem veniret. Qui cum dicto paruisset, congressusque eorum ingentem speciem dictaturae apud cives sociosque, vetustate jam prope oblitos ejus imperii, fecisset, litterae ab urbe adlatae sunt, naves onerarias, commematum ab Ostia in Hispaniam ad 25 exercitum portantes, a classe Punica circa portum Cosanum captas esse. Itaque extempo consul Ostiam proficisci jussus, navibusque, quae ad urbem Romanam aut Ostiæ essent, completis milite ac navalibus sociis, persequi hostium classem ac litora Italiam tutari. Magna vis hominum conscripta 30 Romæ erat; libertini etiam, quibus liberi essent et ætas militaris, in verba juraverant. Ex hoc urbano exercitu, qui minores quinque et triginta annis erant, in naves impositi; alii ut urbi præsiderent relictì.

Fabius leads his forces against the enemy, and pitches his camp in sight of the foe, not far from Arpi.—Hannibal leads out his force to give him battle, but Fabius remains quiet.—He then tries to provoke the Roman commander to conflict, by laying waste the adjacent country, but without success.—The caution of Fabius dissatisfactory to the master of the horse, who openly expresses his feelings.

Dictator, exercitu consulis accepto a Fulvio Flacco legato, per agrum Sabinum Tibur, quo diem ad conveniendum edixerat novis militibus, venit. Inde Prænestæ, ac transversis limitibus in viam Latinam est egressus, unde, 5 itineribus summa cum cura exploratis, ad hostem ducit; nullo loco, nisi quantum necessitas cogeret, fortunæ se commissurus. Quo primum die haud procul Arpis in conspectu hostium posuit castra, nulla morte facta, quin 10 Penus educeret in aciem copiamque pugnandi faceret. Sed ubi quieta omnia apud hostes, nec castra ullo tumultu nota videt, increpans quidem, victos tandem suos Martios animos Romanis, debellatumque et concessum propam 15 lam de virtute ac gloria esse, in castra reedit: ceterum tacita cura animum incessit, quod cum duce haudquaquam Flaminio Sempronioque simili futura sibi res esset, ac tum demum edocti malis Romani parem Hannibali ducem 20 quæsissent. Et prudentiam quidem non vim dictatoris extemplo timuit: constantiam haudsum expertus, agitare ac temptare animum movendo crebro castra, populandoque in oculis ejus agros sociorum, cœpit. Et modo citato agrine ex conspectu abibat, modo repente in aliquo flexu viæ, si 25 excipere degressum in æquum posset, occultus obsistebat.
Fabius per loca alta agmen ducebat, modo ab hoste inter-vallo, ut neque omitteret eum neque congrederetur. Ca-stris, nisi quantum usus necessario cogeret, tenebatur miles; pabulum et ligna nec pauci petebant nec passim; equitum 30 levisque armaturae statio, composita instructaque in subitos tumultus, et suo militi tuta omnia et infesta effusis hostium populatoribus praebebat. Neque universo periculo summa rerum committebatur; et parva momenta levium certaminum ex tuto ceptorum, finitimoque receptu, adsuefaciebant 35 territum pristinis cladibus militem minus jam tandem aut virtutis aut fortunae penitere suas. Sed non Hannibalem magis infestum tam sanis consiliis habebat quam magistrum equitum, qui nihil aliud, quam quod impar erat imperio, morae ad rem publicam precipitandam habebat, ferox ra-40 pidusque in consiliis ac lingua immodicus. Primo inter paucos, dein propalam in vulgus pro cunctatore segnem, pro cauto timidum, ad fingens vicina virtutibus vitia, compella-bat; premendoque superiorem, quae pessima ars nimis prosperis multorum successibus crevit, se se extollebat. 45

teret, moverunt. Monitos etiam atque etiam ut promissa rebus adfirmarent, jussosque cum pluribus et aliquibus principum redire ad se dimisit. Ipse imperat duci, ut se in agrum Casinatem ducat, edoctus a peritis regionum, si eum saltum occupasset, exitum Romano ad opem ferendam sociis inter-20 clusurum. Sed Punicum abhorrens os ab Latinorum nominum prolatione Casilinum pro Casino dux ut acciperet fuit; aversusque ab suo itinere, per Allifanum Calatinumque et Calenum agrum in campum Stellatem descendit. Ubi cum montibus fluminibusque clausam regionem circumspexisset, 25 vocatum ducem peruncatur, ubi terrarum esset. Cum is Casilini eo die mansurum eum dixisset, tum demum cognitus est error, et Casinum longe inde alia regione esse; virgisque caeso duce et ad reliquorum terrem in cruce sublato, castris communitis, Maharbalem cum equitis in 30 agrum Falernum prædatum dimisit. Usque ad aquas Sinu-essanas populatio ea pervenit. Ingentem cladem, fugam tam; men terremque latius Numidae fecerunt: nec tamen is terror, cum omnia bello flagrarent, fide socios dimovit, videli-cet quia justo et moderato rege bantur imperio, nec abnue-35 bant, quod unum vinculum fidei est, melioribus parere.

XIV.

Hannibal, having reached Campania, proceeds to devastate this fine re-gion.—Indignation and inflammatory remarks of Minucius.

Ut vero, postquam ad Vulturnum flumen castra sunt posita, exurebatur amœnissimus Italæ ager villæque passim incendiis fumabant, per juga Massici montis Fabio ducente, tum prope de integro sedition accensa. Quieti fuerant 5 enim per paucos dies, quia, cum celerius solito ductum agmen esset, festinari ad prohibendam populationibus Campaniam crediderant. Ut vero in extrema juga Massici montis ventum, et hostes sub oculis erant Falerni agri colonorumque Sinuessa tecta uarentes, nec ulla 10 erat mentio pugnae, "Spectatumne huc" inquit Minucius "ut rem fruendam oculis, sociorum cedes et incendia, venimus? Nec si nullius alterius, nos ne civium quidem horum puget, quos Sinuessa colonos patres nostri miserunt, ut ab Samnita hoste tuta hæc ora esset, quam nunc non vicinus Samnis urit, sed Poenus advena, ab extremis orbis terrarum terminis nostra cunctatione et socordia jam huc progressus? Tantum, pro! degeneramus a patribus nostris, ut praeter quam oram illi suam Punicas vagari classes dedecus esse imperii sui duxerint, eam nunc plenam hostium Numidarum que ac Maurorum jam factam videamus? Qui modo Saguntum oppugnari indignando non homines tantum sed fædera et deos ciebamus, scandentem mœnia Romanæ coloniae Hannibalem læti spectamus. Fumus ex incendiis villarum agrorumque in oculos atque ora venit; strepunt aures clamori bus plorantium sociorum, sæpius nos quam deorum invocantium opem. Nos hic pecorum modo per æstivos saltus deviasque calles exercitum ducimus, conditi nubibus silvisque.

Si hoc modo peragrando cacumina saltusque M. Furius recipere a Gallis urbem voluisset, quo hic novus Camillus, no bis dictator unicus in rebus adfectis quæsitus, Italian ab Hannibale recuperare parat, Gallorum Roma esset; quam vereor ne, sic cunctantibus nobis, Hannibali ac Poenis toties servaverint majores nostri. Sed vir ac vere Romanus, quo die dictatorem eum ex auctoritate patrum jussuque populi dictum Veios adlatum est, cum esset satis altum Janiculum, ubi sedens prospectaret hostem, descendit in æquum, atque illo ipso die media in urbe, qua nunc busta Gallica sunt, et postero die citra Gabios cecidit Gallorum legiones. Quid? post multos annos, cum ad Furculas Caudinas ab Samnita hoste sub jugum missi sumus, utrum tandem L. Papirius Cursor juga Samnii perlustrando, an Luceriam premendo obсидendoque et lacesendo victorem hostem depulum ab Romanis cervicibus jugum superbo jugum Samniti imposuit? Modo C. Lutatius quæ alia res quam celeritas victoriam dedit, quod postero die quam hostem vidit, classem gravem commateibus, impeditam suomet ipsam instrumento atque apparatu, oppressit? Stultitia est sedendo aut votis debellari credere posse. Armari copias oportet deducendas in æquum, ut vir cum viro congestiaris. Audendo atque agendo res Romana 50 crevit, non his segnibus consiliis, quæ timidi cauta vocant." Hæc velut contionanti Minucio circumfundebatur tribunorum equitumque Romanorum multitudo, et ad aures quoque militum dicta ferocia evolventur; ac si militaris suffragii res esset, haud dubie ferebant, Minucium Fabio ducem præ- 55 latus.

XV.

Fabius, pariter in suos haud minus quam in hostes, intentus, prius ab illis invictum animum præstat. Quamquam probe scit non in castris modo suis sed jam etiam Romæ infa-mem suam cunctationem esse, obstinatus tamen tenore eodem consiliorum æstatis reli-quum extraxit, ut Hannibal, destitutus ab spe summa ope petiti certaminis, jam hibernis locum circumspexit, quia ea region præsens erat copiæ, non perpetuæ, arbusta vineæque, 10 et consita omnia magis amœnis quam necessariis fructibus. Hæc per exploratores relata Fabio. Cum satis sciret per easdem angustias, quibus intraverat Falernum agrum, reditu-rum, Calliculam montem et Casilinum occupat 15 modicis praesidiis, quæ urbs, Vulturno flumine dirempta, Falernum a Campano agro dividit: ipse jugis iisdem exercitum reductit, misso ex-ploratum cum quadringentis equitibus socio-rum L. Hostilio Mancino. Qui, ex turba juve-20 num audientium sœpe ferociter contionantem magistrum equitum, progressus primo exploratoris modo, ut ex tuto speculare tur hostem, ubi vagos passim per vicos Numidas vidit, per occasionem etiam paucos occidit, extemplo occupatus certamine est animus, excideruntque præcepta dicta-25 toris, qui, quantum tuto posset, progressum prius recipere sese jusserat quam in conspectum hostium veniret. Numidæ, alii atque alii occurrantes refugientesque, ad castra prope ipsum cum fatigacione equorum atque hominum pertrahere. Inde Carthalo, penes quem summa equestris im-30 perii erat, concitatis equis invectus, cum, priusquam ad conjectum teli veniret, avertisset hostes, quinque ferme milia continenti cursu secutus est fugientes. Mancinus, postquam nec hostem desistere sequi nec spem vidit effugiendo esse, cohortatus suos, in praelium rediit omni parte virium impar. 35 Itaque ipse et selecti equitum circumventi occiduntur; ceteri effuso rursus cursu Cales primum, inde prope inviis calibus ad dictatorem perfugerunt.

Eo forte die Minucius se conjunxerat Fabio, missus ad firmandum præsidio saltum, qui super Tarracina, in artas 40 coactus fauces, imminet mari, ne ab Sinuessa Pœnus Appiae limite pervenire in agrum Romanum posset. Conjunctis exercitibus dictator ac magister equitum castra in viam deferunt, qua Hannibal ducturus erat. Duo inde milia hostes aberant. 45

Postero die Pœni, quod viæ inter bina castra erat, agmine complevere. Cum Romani sub ipso constitissent vallo, haud dubie æquiore loco, successit tamen Pœnus cum expeditis peditibus equitibusque. Ad lacessendum hostem carptim Pœni et procursando recipiendoque pugnavere. Restitit suo loco Romana acies. Lenta pugna et ex dictatoris magis quam Hannibalis fuit voluntate. Ducenti ab Romanis, octingenti hostium cecidere. Inclusus inde videri Hannibal, 10 via ad Casilinum obsessa; cum Capua et Samnium et tantum ab tergo divitum sociorum Romanis commatus subvehoret, Pœnus inter Formiana saxa ac Literni arenas stagnaque perhorrida situ hibernaturus esset. Nec Hannibalem fefellit suis se artibus peti: itaque cum per Casilinum evadere non 15 posset, petendique montes et jugum Calliculæ superandum esset, necubi Romanus inclusum vallibus agmen adgredere tur, ludibrium oculorum, specie terrible, ad frustrandur hostem commentus, principio noctis furtim succedere ad montes statuit. Fallacis consilii talis apparatus fuit: faces 20 undique ex agris collectæ fascesque virgarum stque aridi sarmenti praëgantur cornibus bovm, quos domitos indomitosque multos inter ceteram agrestem prædam agebat. Ad duo milia ferme boum effecta; Hasdrubalique negotium datum, ut primis tenebris noctis id armentum, accensis cornibus, ad montes ageret, maxime, si posset, super saltus ab hoste insessos.

XVII.

Primis tenebris silentio mota castra, boves aliquanto ante signa acti. Ubi ad radices montium viasque angustas ventum est, signum extemplo datur, ut accensis cornibus armenta in adversos concitentur montes. Et metus 5 ipse reluentis flammar et capite, calorque jam ad vivum ad imaque cornuum adveniens, velut stimulos furore agebat boves. Quo repente discursn, haud secus quam silvis montibusque accensis, omnia circum virgulta ardere; capite 10 tumque irrita quassatio, excitans flammar, hominum passim discurrentium speciem præbebat. Qui ad transitum saltus insidendum locati erant, ubi in summis montibus ae super se quosdam ignes conspexere, circumventos se esse rati præ-15 sidio excessere; qua minime dense micabant flammar, velut tutissimum iter petentes summa montium juga, tamen in quosdam boves palatos a suis gregibus inciderunt. Et primo cum procul cernerent, veluti flammis spirantium miraculo attoniti constiterunt; deinde, ut humana apparuit fraus, 20 tum vero insidias rati esse, cum majore metu concitant se in fugam, levi quoque armaturæ hostium incurrere. Ceterum nox aequato timore neutros pugnam incipientes ad lucem tenuit. Interea toto aegmine Hannibal transducto per saltum, et quibusdam in ipso saltu hostium oppressis, in 25 agro Allifano posuit castra.
XVIII.

Hunc tumultum sensit Fabius: ceterum et insidias esse ratus, et ab nocturno utique abhorrens certamine, suos munimentis tenuit. Luce prima sub jugo montis prælium fuit; quo interclusam ab suis levem armaturam facile (et enim numero aliquantum præstabant) Romani superassent, nisi Hispanorum cohors, ad id ipsum remissa ab Hannibale, pervenisset. Ea, adsuetior montibus, et ad concursandum inter saxa rupesque aptior atque levior, cum velocitate corporum tum armorum habitu campestrem hostem, gravem armis statariumque, pugnae genere facile elusit. Ita handquaquam pari certamine digressi, Hispani fere omnes incolumes, Romani, aliquot suis amissis, in cas-15 tra contenderunt.

Fabius quoque movit castra, transgressusque saltum super Allifas loco alto ac munito consedit. Tum, per Samnium Romam se petere simulans, Hannibal usque in Pelignos popula-20 bundus rediit: Fabius medius inter hostium agmen urbemque Romam jugis ducebat, nec absistens nec congresidiens. Ex Pelignis Pœnum flexit iter, retroque Apuliam repetens, Gereonium pervenit, urbem metu, quia collapsa ruinis pars moenium erat, ab suis 25 desertam. Dictator in Larinate agro castra communiit. Inde sacrorum causa Romam revocatus, non imperio modo, sed consilio etiam ac prope precibus agens cum magistro equitum, ut plus consilio quam fortunae confidat, et se potius ducem quam Sempronium Flaminiumque imitetur. Ne 30 nihil actum censeret extracta prope æstate per ludificationem hostis. Medicos quoque plus interdum quiete quam movendo atque agendo proficere. Haud parvam rem esse ab toties victore hoste vinci desisse, ab continuo cladiburespirasse. Hæc nequidquam præmonito magistro equitum 35 Romam est profectus.

XIX.

Principio æstatis, qua hæc gerebantur, in Hispania quoque terra marique cæptum bellum est. Hasdrubal ad eum navium numerum, quem a fratre instructum paratumque acceperat, decem adjecit; quadranginta navium classem Hamilconi tradit; atque ita Carthagine prefectus navibus prope terram, exercitum in litore ducebat, paratus confligere, quacumque parte copiarum hostis occurrisset. Cn. Scipioni, postquam movisse ex hibernis hostem au 10 divit, primo idem consilii fuit; deinde minus terra propter ingentem famam novorum auxiliorum concurrere ausus, delecto milite ad naves imposito, quinque et triginta navium classe ire obviam hosti pergit. Altero ab Tarraco die 15 ad stationem decem milia passuum distantem ab ostio Iberi amnis pervenit. Inde duæ Massiliensium speculatoriae præmissæ rettulere classem Punicam stare in ostio fluminis, castraque in ripa posita. Itaque ut impridis in 20 cautosque universo simul effuso terrere opprimeret, sublatis anchoris ad hostem vadit. Multas et locis altis positas turres Hispania habet, quibus et speculis et propugnaculis adversus latrones utuntur. Inde primo conspectis hostium navibus datum signum Hasdrubali est; tumul 25 tusque prius in terra et castris quam ad mare et ad naves est ortus, nondum aut pulsu remorum strepituo alio nautico exaudito, aut aperientibus classem promonturii, cum repente eques alius super alium ab Hasdrubale missus vagos in litore quietosque in tentoriis suis, nihil minus quam hostem aut 30 prælium eo die expectantes, concendere naves propere atque arma capere jubet: classem Romanam jam haud procul portu esse. Hæc equites dimissi passim imperabant. Mox Hasdrubal ipse cum omni exercitu aderat; varioque omnia tumultu strepunt, ruentibus in naves simul remigibus militi-35 busque, fugientium magis e terra quam in pugnam euntium modo. Vixdum omnes conscenderant, cum alii resolutis oris in anchoras evehuntur, alii, ne quid teneat, anchoralia incidunt; raptimque omnia præpropere agendo, militum ap-paratu nauticæ ministeria impediantur, trepidatione nautæ-40 rum capere et aptare arma miles prohibentur. Et jam Romanus non approquinabant modo, sed direrarum etiam in pugnam naves. Itaque non ab hoste et prælio magis Pæni quam suomet ipsi tumultu turbati, et temptata verius pugna quam inita, in fugam averterunt classam: et cum adversi 45 amnis os lato agmini ac tam multis simul venientibus haud sane intrabile esset, in litus passim naves egerunt, atque alii vadis, alii sicco litore excepti, partim armati partim inermes, ad instructam per litus aciem suorum perfugere. Duæ tamen primo concursu captæ erant Punicæ naves, quattuor sup-50 pressæ.

XX.

Romani, quamquam terra hostium erat, ar-matamque aciem toto prætentam in litore cernebant, haud cunctanter insecuti trepidam hostium classem, naves omnes, quæ non aut perfregerant proras litori illisas aut carinas 5 fixerant vadis, religatas puppibus in altum extraxere; ad quinque et viginti naves e quadraginta cepere. Neque id pulcherrimum ejus victoriam fuit, sed quod una levi pugna toto ejus oræ mari potiti erant. Itaque ad Onusam 10 classæ proiecti, escensione ab navibus in terram facta, cum urbem vi cepissent captamque diri-puissent, Carthaginem inde petunt; atque om-nes agrum circa depopulati, postremo tecta quoque injuncta muro portisque incenderunt. 1 Inde jam praeda gravis ad Longunicam pervenit classis, ubi vis magna sparti ad rem nauticam congesta ab Hasdrubale. Quod satis in usum fuit sublato, ceterum omne incensum est. Nec continentis modo prae recta est oras, sed in Ebusum insulam transmissum. Ibi urbe, quae caput 20 insulae est, biduum nequidquam summo labore oppugnata, ubi in spem irritam frustra teri tempus animadversum est, ad populationem agri versi, direptis aliquot incensisque vicis, majore quam ex continenti praeda parta, cum in naves se recepissent, ex Balearibus insulis legati pacem petentes ad 25 Scipionem venerunt. Inde flexa retro classis, reditumque in ceteriora provinciae, quo omnium populorum, qui Iberum accolunt, multorum et ultimae Hispaniae legati concurrunt. Sed qui vere dicionis imperiiique Romani facti sint, obsidibus datis, populi amplius fuerunt centum viginti. Igitur 30 terrestribus quoque copiis satis fidens Romanus usque ad saltum Castulonensem est progressus. Hasdrubal in Lusitaniam ac proprius Oceanum concessit.

XXI.

Quietum inde fore videbatur reliquum aestatis tempus, fuissetque per Pae num hostem: sed, praterquam quod ipsorum Hispanorum iniqua aedique in novas res sunt ingenia, Mandonius Indebilisque, qui ante Ilergetum regulus fuerat, postquam Romani ab salto recessere ad maritimam oram, concitus popularibus, in agrum pacatum sociorum Romanorum ad populandum venerunt. Adversus eos tribunus militum cum expeditis auxiliiis a Scipi one missi levi certamine, ut tumultuarim manum, fudere omnes; occisis quibusdam captisque magna parte armis exuta. Hic tamen tumultus cedentem ad Oceanum Hasdrubalem cisis Iberum ad socios tutandos retraxit. Castra 15 Punica in agro Lergavonensium, castra Romana ad Novam Classem erant, cum fama repens alio avertit bellum. Celtiberi, qui principes regionis suae legatos miserant obсидisque dederant Romanis, nuntio misso a Scipione excit, arma capiunt provinciamque Carthaginiensium valido exer- 20 citu invadunt; tria oppida vi expugnant. Inde, cum ipso Hasdrubale duobus præliis egregie pugnant, ac quindecim milia hostium occiderunt, quattuor milia cum multis militari bus signis capiunt.

XXII.

Hoc statu rerum in Hispania, P. Scipio in provinciam venit, prorogato post consulatum imperio ab senatu, missus cum triginta longis navibus et octo milibus militum, magnoque commeatu adveicto. Ea classis ingens agmine 5 onerarianum procul visa, cum magna lætitia civium sociorumque portum Tarracoñis ex alto tenuit. Ibi milite exposto, prefectus Scipio fratri se conjungit; ac deinde communi animo consilioque gerebant bellum. Occupa- 10 tis igitur Carthaginiensibus Celtiberico bello, haud cunctanter Iberum transagrediantur; nec ullo viso hoste Saguntum pergunt ire, quod ibi obsides totius Hispaniæ traditos ab Hannibale fama erat modico in arce custo- 15 diri præsidio. Id unum pignus inclinatos ad Romanam societatem omnium Hispaniæ populi-orum animos morabatur, ne sanguine libe- rüm suorum culpa defectionis lucretur. Eo vinculo Hispaniam vir unus sollerti magis quam fidelis con- 20 silio exsolvit. Abelux erat Sagunti nobilis Hispamus, fidus ante Pœnis, tum, qualia plerumque sunt barbarorum ingenia, cum fortuna mutaverat fidem. Ceterum transfugam, sine magnæ rei prodizione venientem ad hostes nihil aliud quam unum vile atque infame corpus esse ratus, id agbat, ut quam 25 maximum emolumentum novis sociis esset. Circumspec-nimir, graves superbosque in rebus secundis expertos, fortuna et timor mitigasse videri poterat: Romanus primo adventu, incognitus ante, ab re clementi liberaliisque initium 65 fecerat: et Abelux, vir prudens, haud frustra videbatur so-cios mutasse. Itaque ingenti consensu defectionem omnes spectare; armaque extemplo mota forent, ni hiems, quae Romanos quoque et Carthaginienses concedere in tecta coegit, intervenisset.

XXIII.

Hae in Hispania quoque secunda aestate Punici belli gesta, cum in Italia paulum inter-valli cladibus Romanis solvers cunctatio Fabii fecisset; quae, ut Hannibalem non mediocri sollicitum cura habebat, tandem eum militiae 5 magistrum delegisse Romanos cernentem, qui bellum ratione, non fortuna, gereret, ita contempta erat inter cives armatos pariter toga-tosque: utique postquam, absente eo, temerit-tate magistri equitum laeto verius dixerim 10 quam prospero eventu pugnatum fuerat. Accesserant duae res ad augendam invidiam dictatoris; una fraude ac dolo Hannibalis, quod, cum a perfugis ei monstratus ager dictorinis esset, omnibus circa solo aequatis, ab uno eo ferrum ignemque et vim omnem hostium abstineri jus-sit, ut occulti alicujus pacti ea merces videri posset; altera ipsius facto, primo forsitan dubio, quia non expectata in eo senatus auctoritas est, ad extremum haud ambigue in maxi-mam laudem verso. In permutandis captivis, quod sic primo Punico bello factum erat, convenerat inter duces Romanum Poenumque, ut quae pars plus recipieret quam daret, argenti pondo bina et selibras in militem praestaret. Ducentos quadraginta septem cum plures Romanus quam Ponus recepisset, argentumque pro eis debitum, sepe jactata in senatu re, quoniam non consuluisse patres, tardius rogaretur, inviolatum ab hoste agrum, misso Romam Quinto filio, vendidit, fidemque publicam impendio privato exsolverat.
Hannibal pro Gereonii mœnibus, cujus urbis, captæ atque incensæ ab sè, in usum horreorum paucà reliquerat tectà, in stativis erat. Inde frumentatum duas exercitus partes mit-30 tebat; cum tertia ipse expedita in statione erat, simul castris præsidio et circumspectans necunde impetus in frumentatores fieret.

XXIV.

Romanus tunc exercitus in agro Larinati erat. Præerat Minucius magister equitum, profecto, sicut ante dictum est, ad urbem dictatore. Ceterum castra, quæ in monte alto ac tuto loco posita fuerant, jam in planum deferuntur; agitabanturque pro ingenio ducis consilia calidiora, ut impetus aut in frumentatores palatos aut in castra relictà cum levi præsidio fieret. Nec Hannibalem fefellit cum duce mutatam esse belli rationem, et ferocius quam consultius rem hostes ges-10 turos. Ipse aupro (quod minime quis crederet) cum hostis propius esset, tertiam partem militum frumentatum, duabus in castris retentis, dimisit; dein castra ipsa propius hostem movit, duo ferme a Gereonio milia in tumulum hosti conspectum, ut intentum sciret esse ad frumentatores, si qua 15 vis fieret, tutandos. Propior inde ei atque ipsis imminens Romanorum castris tumulus apparuit; ad quem capiendum si luce palam iretur, quia haud dubie hostis breviore via præventurus erat, nocte clam missi Numidæ ceperunt. Quos tenentes locum contempta paucitate, Romani postero 20 die cum dejecissent, ipsi eo transferunt castra. Tum utique exiguum spatii vallum a vallo aberat, et id ipsum tota prope compleverat Romana acies, simul et per aversa castra equitatus cum levi armatura emissus in frumentatores late cædem fugamque hostium palatum fecit. Nec acie certare Hannibal ausus, quia tanta paucitate vix castra, si oppugnarentur, tutari poterat. Jamque artibus Fabii (pars exercitus aberat) jam ferme sedendo et cunctando bellum gerebat, receperatque suos in priora castra, quæ pro Gereonii mœnibus erant. Justa quoque acie et collatis signis dimicatum quidam 30 auctores sunt. Primo concursu Pœnum usque ad castra fusa-sum, inde eruptione factura repente versusum terrorem in Ro-nanos, Numerii Decimii Samnitis deinde interventu prælìum restitutum. Hunc principem genere ac divitiis non Boviani modo, unde erat, sed toto Samnio, jussu dictatoris octo milia peditum mille equites adducentem in castra, ab tergo cum apparuisset Hannibali, speciem parti utrique præbuisse novi præsidii cum Q. Fabio ab Roma venientis. Hannibalem insidiarum quoque aliquid timentem recepisse suos, Romanum insecutum adjuvante Samnite duo castella eo die ex-pugnasse. Sex milia hostium caesa, quinque admodum Ro-norum. Tamen in tam pari prope clade famam egregiae victoriiæ cum vanioribus litteris magistri equitum Romam perlatam.

of Fabius and the master of the horse and equal. — While withdraws from Rome to the army.—C. Terentius Varro favors the passage of the bill.

De his rebus persæpe et in senatu et in contione actum est. Cum, læta civitate, dictator unus nihil nec famæ nec litteris cræderet; ut vera omnia essent, secunda se magis quam adversa timere diceret; tum M. 5 Metellus, tribunus plebis, id enim ferendum esse negat: Non præsentem solum dictatorem obstitisse rei bene gerendæ, sed absentem etiam gestæ obstare; et in ducono bello ac sedulo tempus terere, quo diutius 10 in magistratu sit, solusque et Romæ et in exercitu imperium habeat: quippe consunum alterum in acie cecidisse, alterum specie classis Punicæ persequeandæ procul ab Italia ablegaturn; duo praetores Sicilia atque Sar-15 dinia occupatos, quorum neutra hoc tempore provincia praetore egeat; M. Minucium magi-strum equitum, ne hostem videret, ne quid rei bellicæ gereret, prope in custodia habitum.
Itaque hercule non Samnium modo, quo jam?
tamquam trans Iberum agro Pœnis concessum sit, sed et Campanum Calenumque et Falernum agrum pervastatos esse, sedente Casilini dictatore et legionibus populi Romani agrum suum tutante. Exercitum cupientem pugnare et magistrum equitum clausos prope intra vallum retentos; 25 tamquam hostibus captivis arma adempta. Tandem, ut absesserit inde dictator, ut obsidione liberatos, extra vallum egressos fudisse ac fugasse hostes. Quas ob res, si antiquus animus plebi Romanæ esset, audaciter se laturum fuisset de abrogando Q. Fabii imperio: nunc modicum rogationem 30 promulgatum de æquando magistri equitum et dictatoris jure. Nec tamen ne ita quidem prius mittendum ad exercitum Q. Fabium, quam consulem in locum C. Flaminii suffecisset. Dictator contionibus se abstinuit in actione minime popularis. Ne in senatu quidem satis æquis auribus audiebat tunc, cum hostem verbis extolleret, bienniique clades per temeritatem atque inscientiam ducum acceptas referret; magistroque equitum, quod contra dictum suum pugnasset, rationem diceret reddendam esse. Si penes se summa imperii consiliique sit, prope diem effecturum, ut sciant homines, bono imperatore haud magni fortunam momenti esse, mentem rationemque dominari: et in tempore et sine ignominia servasse exercitum quam multa milia hostium occidisse majorem gloriam esse. Hujus generis orationibus frustra habitis et consule creato M. Atilio Regulo, ne præsens de jure imperii dimicaret, pridie quam rogationis ferendæ dies adesset, nocte ad exercitum abit. Luce orta, cum plebis concilium esset, magis tacita invidia dictatoris favorque magistri equitum animos versabat, quam satis audebant homines ad suadendum, quod vulgo placebat prodire; et, 50 vore superante, auctoritas tamen rogationi deereat. Unus inventus est suasor legis C. Terentii Varro, qui priore anno praetor fuerat, loco non humili solum sed etiam sordido ortus. Patrem lanium fuisset ferunt, ipsum institorem mercis, filioque hoc ipso in servilia ejus artis ministeria usum.
XXVI.

Is juvenis, ut primum ex eo genere quaestus pecunia a patre relictâ animos ad spem liberam lioris fortunae fecit, togaque et forum placuer, proclamando pro sordidis hominibus causisque adversus rem et famam bonorum, primum in notitiam populi, deinde ad honores pervenit: quaesturaque et duabus aedilitatibus, plebeia et curuli, postremo et praetura perfunc tus, jam ad consulatus spem cum attolleret animos, haud parum callide auram favoris populi ex dictoria invidia petit, scitique plebis unus gratiam tulit. Omnes eam rogationem quique Romae quique in exercitu erant, aequi atque iniqui, praeter ipsum dictorem, in contumeliam ejus latam acceperunt: ipse, qua gravitate animi criminales se ad multitudinem iniin cos tulerat, eadem et populi in se saevientem injuriam tulit, acceptisque in ipso itinere litteris senatus consulti de aquato imperio, satis fidens haudququam cum imperii jure artem imperandi aequatam, cumque invicto a civibus hostibusque animo ad exercitum redidit.

XXVII.

Minucius vero, cum jam ante vix tolerabilis fuisset secundis rebus ac favore vulgi, tum utique immodice immodestaque non Hannibale magis victo ab se quam Q. Fabio gloriar: illum in rebus asperis unicum ducem ac parem quaestitum Hannibali, majorem minori, dictatore magistro equitum, quod nulla memoria habeat annalium, jussu populi aequatam in eadem civitate, in qua magistri equitum virgas ac secures dictatoris tremere atque horrere soliti sint. Tantum suam felicitatem virtutemque enuitisse. Ergo secururum se fortudivide the army with Minucius. They have also separate camps.

nam suam, si dictator in cunctatione ac segni-tie deorum hominumque judicio damnata per-staret. Itaque quo die primum congressus est cum Q. Fabio, statuendum omnium prinum ait esse, quem ad modum imperio æquato utantur.
Se optimum ducere, aut diebus alternis, aut si majora inter-valla placerent, partitis temporibus alterius summum jus imperiumque esse, ut par hosti non consilio solum sed viribus etiam esset, si quam occasionem rei gerendae habuisset. Q. Fabio haudquaquam id placere: omnia enim fortunam habi-turam, quæcumque temperitas collegæ habuisset. Sibi communicatum cum alio, non ademptum imperium esse. Itaque se numquam volentem parte, qua posset, rerum consilio gerendarum cessurum; nec se tempora aut dies im-perii cum eo, exercitum divisurum, susque consiliis, quoniam omnia non liceret, quæ posset servaturum. Ita obtinuit, ut legiones, sicut consulibus mos esset, inter se divide-rent: prima et quarta Minucio, secunda et tertia Fabio 30 evenerunt. Item equites pari numero sociumque et Latini nominis auxilia diviserunt: castris se quoque separari magister equitum voluit.

XXVIII.

Duplex inde Hannibali gaudium fuit (neque enim quidquid eorum, quæ apud hostes agerentur, eum fallebat, et perfugis multa in-dicantibus, et per suos explorantem): nam et liberam Minucii temperitatem se suo modo captaturum, et sollertiae Fabii dimidium virium decessisse. Tumulus erat inter castra Minucii et Pœorum, quem qui occupasset, haud dubie iniquiorem erat hosti locum fac-turus. Eum non tam capere sine certami-10 ne volebat Hannibal, quamquam id operæ pretium erat, quam causam certaminis cum Minucio, quem semper occurrerum ad obsi-stendum satis sciebat, contrahere. Ager omnis medius erat prima specie inutilis insidiatorii, quia non modo silvestre 15 quidquam sed ne vepribus quidem vestitum habebat: re ipsa natus tegendis insidiis eo magis, quod in nuda valle nulla talis fraus timeri poterat. Et erant in anfractibus cææ rupes, ut quædam earum ducenos armatos possent capere. In has latebras, quot quemque locum apte insidere poterant, 20 quinque milia conduntur peditum equitumque. Necubi ta-men aut motus alicujus temere egressi aut fulgor armo-rum fraudem in valle tam aperta detegeret, missis paucis prima luce ad capiendum quem ante diximus tumulum, avertit oculos hostium. Primo statim conspectu contempta 25 paucitas, ac sibi quisque deposcere pellendos inde hostes ac locum capiendum. Dux ipse inter stolidissimos ferocissimosque ad arma vocat, et vanis animis et minis incre-pat hostem. Principio levem armaturam dimittit; deinde conferto agmine mittit equites; postremo, cum hostibus 30 quoque subsidia mitti videret, instructis legionibus procedit. Et Hannibal, laborantibus suis alia atque alia, crescente certamine, mittens auxilia peditum equitumque jam justam explererat aciem, ac totis utrimque viribus certatur. Prima levis armatura Romanorum, praecoccupatum inferiore loco 35 succedens tumulum, pulsa detrusaque terrem in succe-dentem intulit equitem, et ad signa legionum refugit. Peditum acies inter perculsos impavida sola erat, videbaturque, si justa ac si recta pugna esset, haudquaquam im-par futura: tantum animorum fecerat prospere ante paucos 40 dies res gesta. Sed exorti repente insidiatores eum tumul-tum terremque in latera utrimque ab tergoque incursantes fecerunt, ut nec animus ad pugnam neque ad fugam spes cuiquam superesset.

XXIX.

Tum Fabius, primo clamore paventium audito, dein conspecta procul turbata acie; "Ita est," inquit: "non celerius quam timui deprendit fortuna tementatem. Fabio aequatus imperio Hannibalem et virtute et fortuna superiorem videt. Sed aliud jurgandi succensendique tempus erit: nunc signa extra vallum proferte. Victoriam hosti extorteramus, confessionem erroris civibus." Jam magna ex parte caesis aliis, aliis circumspescitantibus fugam, Fabiana se acies repente velut caelo demissa ad auxilium ostendit. Itaque, priusquam ad conjectum teli veniret aut manum consereret, et suos a fuga effusa et ab nimiris feroci pugna hostes continuit. Qui solutis ordinibus vage dissipati erant, undique confugerunt ad integram aciem; qui plures simul terga dederant, conversi in hostem volentesque orbem, nunc sensim referre pedem nunc conglobati restare. Ac jam prope una acies facta erat victi atque integri exercitus, inferebantque signa in hostem, cum 20 Pœnus receptui cecinit, palam ferente Hannibale ab se Minucium, se ab Fabio victum.

Ita per variam fortunam diei majore parte exacta, cum in castra reditum esset, Minucius, convocatis militibus "Sæpe ego" inquit "audivi, milites, eum primum esse virum, qui 25 ipse consulat quid in rem sit, secundum eum qui bene momenti obediat: qui nec ipse consulere nec alteri parere sciatur, eum extremi ingenii esse. Nobis quoniam prima animi ingenii negata sors est, secundam ac medium teneamus, et, dum imperare discimus, parere prudenti in animum inducamus. Castra cum Fabio jungamus: ad praetorium ejus signa cum contulerimus, ubi ego eum patrem appellavero, quod beneficio ejus erga nos ac majestate ejus dignum est, vos, milites, eos, quorum vos modo arma, dexteræ, texerunt, patronos salutabitis, et, si nihil aliud, gratorum certe nobis 35 animaliorum gloriam dies hic dederit." XXX.

Signo dato, conclamatur inde, ut colligantur vasa. Prefecti et agrine incendentes ad dictatoris castra in admirationem et ipsum et omnes qui circa erant converterunt. Ut constituta sunt ante tribunal signa, progressus ante alios magister equitum, cum patrem Fabium appellasset, circumfusosque militum ejus totum agmen patronos consalutasset, "Parentibus" inquit "meis, dictator, quibus te modo nomine, quo fando possum, 10 æquavi, vitam tantum debeo, tibi cum meam salutem tum omnium horum. Itaque ple-bei scitum, quo oneratus sum magis quam honoratus, primus antiquo abrogoque; et, quod tibi mihique, quod exercitibusque his 15 tuis, servato ac conservatori, sit felix, sub imperium auspiciumque tuum redeo, et signa hæc legionesque restituo. Tu, quæso, placatus me magisterium equitum, hos ordines suos quamque tenere jubeas." Tum dextrae interjunctæ, mili-tesque, contione dimissa, ab notis ignotisque beneigne atque 20 hospitaliter invitati; læthusque dies ex admodum tristi paulo ante ac prope exsecrabilis factus. Romæ, ut est perlata fama rei gestæ, dein litteris non magis ipsorum imperato-rum quam vulgo militum ex utroque exercitu adfirmata, pro se quisque Maximum laudibus ad cælum ferre. Par gloria 25 apud Hannibalem hostesque Poenos erat; ac tum demum sentire cum Romanis atque in Italia bellum esse: nam bi-ennio ante adeo et duces Romanos et milites spreverant, ut vix cum eadem gente bellum esse crederent, cujus terribilem eam famam a patribus accepissent. Hannibalem quoque ex 30 acies redeuntem dixisse ferunt, tandem eam nubem, quæ si-dere in jugis montium solita sit, cum procella imbrem de-disse.
XXXI.

Dum hæc geruntur in Italia, Cn. Servilius Gemminus consul, cum classe centum viginti navium, circumvectus Sardiniae et Corsicæ oram, et obsidibus utrimque acceptis, in Africam transmisit; et priusquam in continentem escensionem faceret, Menige insula vastata, et ab incolentibus Cercinam, ne et ipsorum ureretur diripeturque ager, decem talentis argenti acceptis, ad litora Africæ accessit copiasque exposuit. Inde ad populandum agrum ducti 10 milites, navalesque socii juxta effusi, ac si insulis cultorum egentibus prædarentur. Itaque in insidias temere illati, cum a frequentibus palantes, et ignari ab locorum gnaris, circumvenirentur, cum multa caede ac foeda fuga re-15 tro ad naves compulsi sunt. Ad mille hominum, cum iis Sempronio Blæso quæstore amisso, classis, ab litoribus hostium plenis tre-pide soluta, in Siciliam cursum tenuit, tradi-taque Lilybæi T. Otacilio prætori, ut ab le-20 gato ejus P. Sura Romam reduceretur. Ipse, per Siciliam pedibus profectus, freto in Italianam trajecit, litteris Q. Fabii accitus et ipse et collega ejus M. Atilius, ut exercitus ab se exacto jam prope semestri imperio acciperent.

Omnium prope annales Fabium dictatum reversus Han-25 nibalem rem gessisse tradunt; Cælius etiam eum primum a populo creatum dictatum scribit: sed et Cælium et ceteros fugit uni consuli Cn. Servilio, qui tum procul in Gallia provincia aberat, jus fuisse dicendi dictatoris; quam moram quia exspectare territa jam clade civitas non poterat, eo de-30 cursum est, ut a populo crearetur qui pro dictatore esset; res inde gestas gloriamque insignem ducis et augentes titu-lum imaginis posteros, ut, qui pro dictatore, dictator crede retur facile obtinuisse.

XXXIII.

Per eodem dies speculator Carthaginien-sis, qui per biennium fefellerat, Romæ deprensus præcisisque manibus dimissus; et servi quinde et viginti in crucem acti, quod in campo Martio conjurassent: indici data libertas et æris gravis viginti milia. Legati et ad Philippum Macedonum regem missi ad de-postendum Demetrium Pharium, qui, bello victus, ad eum fugisset; et alii in Ligures ad expostulandum, quod Pœnum opibus auxiliis-10 que suis jussissent; simul ad visendum ex propinquo, quæ in Boiis atque Insurbibus geregrentur. Ad Pœnum quoque regem in Illyrius legati missi ad stipendium, cujus dies exierat, postendum, aut, si diem proferre vellet, obsides accipiendorum. Adeo, etsi bellum in-gens in cervicibus erat, nullius usquam terrarum rei cura Romanos, ne longinquæ quidem, effugiebat. In religionem etiam venit ædem Concordiæ, quam per seditionem militarem biennio ante L. Manlius prætor in Gallia vovisset, loca-tam ad id tempus non esse. Itaque duumviri ad eam rem 20 creati a M. Æmilio prætore urbis, C. Pupius et Kæso Quinetius Flaminius ædem in arce faciendam locaverunt.

Ab eodem prætore, ex senatus consulto, litteræ ad consules missæ, ut, si iis videretur, alter eorum ad consules crean-dos Romam veniret: se in eam diem, quam jussissent, comitia 25 edicturum. Ad hæc consilium rescriptum, sine detrimento rei publicæ abscedi non posse ab hoste: itaque per interre-gem comitia habenda esse potius quam consul alter a bello avocaretur. Patribus rectius visum est dictatorem a consule dici comitiorum habendorum causa: dictus L. Veturius 30 Philo M. Pomponium Mathonem magistrum equitum dixit.
Iis vitio creatis jussisque die quarto decimo se magistratu abdicare, res ad interregnum rediri.
XXXIV.

Consulibus prorogatum in annum imperium. Interreges prodedi sunt a patribus C. Claudius, Appii filius, Cento, inde P. Cornelius Asina. In ejus interregno comitia habita magno certamine patrum ac plebis. C. 5 Terentio Varroni, quem, sui generis hominem, plebi insectatione principum popularibusque artibus conciliatum, ab Q. Fabii opibus et dictatorio imperio concusso aliena invidia splendenti, vulgus et extrahere ad consulatum 10 nitebatur, patres summa ope obstabant, ne se insectando sibi aequari adsuercerent homines. Q. Bæbius Herennius tribunus plebis, cognatus C. Terentii, criminando non senatum modo, sed etiam augures, quod dictatorem 15 prohibuissent comitia perficere, per invidiam eorum favorem candidato suo conciliabat: ab hominibus nobilibus, per multos annos bellum quærentibus, Hannibalem in Italian adductum; ab eisdem, cum debellari possit, fraude bellum trahi. Cum quattuor legionibus universis 20 pugnari posse appariuisse eo, quod M. Minucius, absente Fabio, prospere pugnasset; duas legiones hosti ad cædem objectas, deinde ex ipsa cæde ereptas, ut pater patronusque appellaretur qui prius vincere prohibuisset Romanos quam vincit: consules deinde Fabianis artibus, cum debellare pos- 25 sent, bellum traxisse. Id fœdus inter omnes nobiles ictum; nec finem ante belli habituros quam consulem vere plebeium, id est hominem novum, fecissent. Nam plebeios nobiles jam eisdem initiatos esse sacris et contemnere plebem, ex quo contemni patribus desierint, cæpisse. Cui non id 30 apparere, id actum et quæsitum esse, ut interregnum iniretur, ut in patrum potestate comitia essent? Id consules ambos ad exercitum morando quæsisse; id poste, quia invitus iis dictator esset dictus comitiorum causa, expugnatum esse, ut vitiosus dictator per augures fieret. Habere igitur 35 interregnum eos; consulatum unum certe plebis Romanae esse: populum liberum habiturum ac daturum ei, qui mag-gis vere vincere quam diu imperare malit.

XXXV.

Cum his orationibus accensa plebs esset, tribus patriciis petentibus, P. Cornelio Me-renda, L. Manlio Vulsone, M. Æmilio Lepido, duobus nobilibus jam familiarum plebei, C.
Atilio Serrano et Q. Ælio Pæto, quorum alter 5 pontifex alter augur erat, C. Terentius consul unus creatur, ut in manu ejus essent comitia rogando collegæ. Tum experta nobilitas, parum fuisse virium in competitoribus ejus, L. Æmilium Paulum, qui cum M. Livio consul fuerat et damnatione collegæ et sua prope ambustus 10 evaserat, infestum plebei, diu ac multum recusantem ad petitionem compellit. Is proximo comitiali die, concedentibus omnibus, qui cum Varrone certaverant, par magis in adversandum quam collega datur consuli. Inde prætoria comitia habita: Creati M. Pomponius Matho et P. Furius 15 Philus. Philo Romæ juri dicundo urbana sors, Pomponio inter cives Romanos et peregrinos evenit. Additi duo prætores, M. Claudius Marcellus in Siciliam, L. Postumius Albinus in Galliam. Omnes absentes creati sunt; nec cuiquam eorum, præter Terentium consulem, mandatus honos 20 quem jam non antea gessisset, præteritis aliquot fortibus ac strenuis viris, quia in tali tempore nulli novus magistratus videbatur mandandus.

XXXVI.

Exercitus quoque multiplicati sunt: quantæ autem copiare peditum equitumque additæ sint, adeo et numero et generare copiarum variant auctores, ut vix quidquam satius certum adfirmare ausus sim. Decem milia novorum milito consult the Sibylline Books, on account of numerous alarming prophecies. — Ambassadors from Paestum bring golden paterae to Rome. — Receive the thanks of the Senate, but the gold is not accepted.

Illud haudquaquam discrepat, majore conatu atque impetu rem actam quam prioribus annis, quia spem, posse Vinci hostem, dictator præbuerat. — Ceterum priusquam signa ab urbe novae legiones moverent, decemvirí libros adire atque inspicere jussi propter territos vulgo homines novis prodigiis: nam et Romæ in Aventino et Ariciæ numtatum erat sub idem tempus lapidibus pluvisse; et multo cruore signa in Sabinis, Cædiis aquas fonte calido gelidas manasse. Id quidem etiam, quod sæpius acciderat, magis terrebat: et in via Fornicata, quæ ad Campum erat, aliquot homines de cælo tacti examinatique fuerant. Ea prodigia ex libris procurata. Legati a Pæsto pateras aureas Romam attulerunt. Lís sicut Neapolitanis gratiae actae, aurum non acceptum.

XXXVII.

Per eodem dies ab Hierone classis Ostia cum magnó commeatu accessit. Legati in senatum introducti nuntiarunt cædem C. Flaminii consulis exercitusque adlatam adeo ægere tulisse regem Hieronom, ut nulla sua propria regnique sui clade moveri magis poteerit. Itaque quamquam probe sciat magnitudinem populi Romani admirabiliorem profpe adversis rebus quam secundis esse, tamen se omnia, quibus a bonis fidélibusque sociis bella juvari soleant, misisse; quæ ne accipere abuant, magno opere se patres conscriptos orare. Jam omnium primum ominis causa Victoriam auream pondo ducentum ac viginti adferre sese: acciperent eam, tenerentque et 15 haberent propriam et perpetuam. Advexisse etiam trecenta milia modiūm tritici, ducenta hordei, ne commenasse dēssent; et quantum præterea opus esset, quo jussissent subvecturos. Milite atque equite scire nisi Romano 20 Latinique nominis non uti populum Romanum; levium armorum auxilia etiam externa vidisse in castris Romanis: itaque misisse mille sagittariorum ac funditorum, aptam manum adversus Baleares ac Mauros pugnaces 25 que alias missili telo gentes. Ad ea dona consilium quoque addebat, ut prætor, cui provincia Sicilia evenisset, classem in Africam trajiceret, ut et hostes in terra sua bel- lum haberent, minusque laxamenti daretur his ad auxilia Hannibali submittenda. Ab senatu ita resposāsum regi est, 30 virum bonum egregiumque socium Hieronem esse, atque uno tenore, ex quo in amicitiam populi Romani venerit, fidem coluisse, ac rem Romanam omni tempore ac loco munificē adjuvisse. Id perinde ac deberet gratum populo Romanō esse. Aurum et a civitatibus quibusdam adlatum, gratia 35 rei accepta, non accepisse populum Romanum: Victoriae omnenque accipere, sedemque ei se divae dare dicare Capitolium, templum Jovis Optimī Maximi. In ea arce urbī Ro- manae sacratam, volentem propitiamque, firmam ac stabilem fore populo Romano. Funditores sagittariique et frumen 40 tum traditum consulisbus. Quinqueremis ad * * navium class- sem, quae cum T. Otacilio præтворe in Sicilia erant, quinque et viginti additae, permissumque est, ut, si e re publica censeret esse, in Africam trajicerent.
XXXVIII.

Dilectu perfecto, consules paucos morati dies, dum socii ab nomine Latino venirent. Milites tum, quod numquam antea factum erat, jurejurando ab tribunis militum adacti, jussu consulum conventuros neque injussu abituros. Nam ad eam diem nihil praeter sacramentum fuerat; et ubi ad decuriam aut centuriam convenissent, sua voluntate ipsi inter sese decuriati equites centuriati pedites conjurabant, sese fugae atque formidinis ergo non abituros, neque ex ordine recessuros nisi teli sumendi aut petendi et aut hostis ferendi aut civis servandi causa. Id ex voluntario inter ipsos fœdere ad tribunos, ad legitimam jurisjurandi adactionem translatum.

Contiones, priusquam ab urbe signa moverentur, consulis Varronis multæ ac feroces fuere, denuntiantis, bellum arcessitum in Italiam ab nobilibus, mansurumque in visceribus rei publicæ, si plures Fabios imperatores haberet: se, quo die hostem vidisset, perfecturum. Collegæ ejus Pauli una, pridie quam ex urbe profiscisceretur, contio fuit, verior quam gratior populo, qua nihil inclementer in Varronem dictum, nisi id modo; mirari se, quomodo quis dux, priusquam aut suum aut hostium exercitum, locorum situm, naturam regionis nosset, jam nunc togatus in urbe sciret, quæ sibi agenda armato forent, et diem quoque prædicere posset, qua cum hoste signis collatis esset dimicaturus. Se, quœ consilia magis res dent hominibus, quam homines rebus, ea ante tempus immatura non praecipiturum: optare ut, quæ caute ac consulte gesta essent, satis prospere evenirent: temeritatem, praeterquam quod stulta sit, infelicem etiam ad id loco-30 rum fuisse. Id sua sponte apparebat, tuta celeribus consiliis præpositurum; et quo id constantius perseveraret, Q. Fabius Maximus sic eum profisciscentem adlocutus fertur.
XXXIX.

Si aut collegam, id quod mallem, tui similem, L. Aemili, haberes, aut tu collegae tui esses similis, supervacanea esset oratio mea: nam et duo boni consules, etiam me indicente, omnia e re publica fide vestra faceris; et mali nec mea verba auribus vestris nec consilia animis acciperitis. Nunc et collegam tuum et te talem virum intuenti mihi tecum omnis oratio est, quem video nequidquam et virum bonum et civem fore, si altera parte claudet res publica; malis consiliis idem ac bonis juris et potestatis erit. Erras enim, L. Paule, si tibi minus certaminis quem C. Terentio quam cum Hannibale futurum censes: nescio an infestior hic adversarius quam ille hostis maneat, et cum illo in acie tantum, cum hoc omnibus locis ac temporibus sis certaturus; et adversus Hannibalem legionesque ejus tuis equitibus ac peditibus pugnandum tibi sit, Varro dux tuis militibus te sit oppugnaturus. Omnis etiam tibi causa absit C. Flaminii memoria: tamen ille consul demum et in provincia et ad exercitum cœpit furere: hic priusquam pateret consulatum, deinde in petendo consulatu, nunc quoque consul, priusquam castra videat aut hostem, insanit. Et qui tantas jam nunc procellas, praelia atque acies jactando, inter togatos ciet, quid inter armatam juventutem censes facturum, et ubi extemplo res verba sequitur? Atque si hic, quod facturum se denuntiat, extemplo pugnaverit, aut ego rem militarem, bello hoc genuscum stem hunc ignoro; aut nobilior alius Trasummino locus nostri stris cladibus erit. Nec gloriandi tempus adversus unum est; et ego contemnendo potius quam appelendo gloriandum modum exesserrim; sed ita res se habet: una ratio bellgerendi adversus Hannibalem est, qua ego gessi; nec even tus modo hoc docet (stultorum iste magister est), sed cedem ratio, que fuit futuraque, donec res eadem manebunt, immutabilis est. In Italia bellum gerimus, in sede ac solo nostro; omnia circa plena civium ac sociorum sunt; armis viris equis commeatibus juvant juvabuntque (id jam fidei do-35 cumentum in adversis rebus nostris dererunt). Meliores, prudentiores, constantiores nos tempus diēisque facit: Hannnibal contra in aliena, in hostili est terra, inter omnia inimi-ca infestaque, procul ab domo, ab patria. Neque illi terra neque mari est pax, nullae eum urbes accipiant, nulla mœnia, 40 nihil usquam sui videt; in diem rapto vivit; partem vix tertiam exercitus ejus habet, quem Iberum amnem trajectit; plures fame quam ferro absumpsit, nec his paucis jam victum suppediatur. Dubitas ergo quin sedendo superaturi simus eum qui senescat in dies, non commeatus, non supple-45 mentum, non pecuniam habeat? Quam diu pro Geronii, castelli Apuliæ inopis, tamquam pro Carthaginis mœni-bus—! Sed ne adversus te quidem ego gloriabor. Cn. Servilius atque Atilius, proximi consules, vide quem ad modum eum ludificati sint. Hæc una salutis est via, L. Paule, quam 50 difficilem infestamque cives tibi magis quam hostes facient.
Idem enim tui quod hostium milites volent; idem Varro consul Romanus quod Hannibal Pœnus imperator cupiet.
Duobus ducibus unus resistas oportet. Resistes autem, ad-versus famam rumoresque hominum si satis firmus steteris; 55 si te neque collegæ vana gloria neque tua falsa infamia mo-verit. Veritatem laborare nimis sœpe aiunt, exstinguui numquam. Gloriam qui spreverit, veram habebit. Sine, timi-dum pro cauto, tardum pro considerato, imbellem pro perito belli vocent. Malo te sapiens hostis metuat, quam stulti ci-80 ves laudent. Omnia audentem contemnet Hannibal, nihil temere agentem metuet. Nec ego, ut nihil agatur, moneo, sed ut agentem te ratio ducat, non fortuna; tuæ potestatis semper tu tuaque omnia sint; armatus intentusque sis, neque occasioni tuæ desis, neque suam occasionem hosti des. 65 Omnia non properanti clara certaque erunt, festinatio im-provida est et cæca.”
XL.

Adversus ea oratio consulis hand sane læta fuit, magis fatentis ea, quæ diceret, vera quam facilia factu esse. Dictatoris magistrum equitum intolerabilem fuisse: quid consuli adversus collegam seditiosum ac temerarium virium atque auctoritatis fore? Se populare incendium priore consulatu semustum effugisse: optare, ut omnia propere evenirent; at, si quid adversi cadere, hostium se telis potius quam suffragiis iratum civium caput objecturum.—Ab hoc sermone prefectum Paulum tradunt, prosequentibus primoribus patrum: plebeium consulem sua plebes persecuta, turba conspectior, cum dignitate desessent.

Ut in castra venerunt, permixto novo exercitu ac vetere, castris bifarium factis, ut nova minora essent propius Hanne nibalem, in veteribus major pars et omne robur virium esset, consulum anni prioris M. Atilium, àetatem excusantem, Romam miserunt, Geminum Servilium in minoribus castris legioni Romanae et socium peditem equitumque duobus milibus praeficiunt. Hannibal quamquam parte dimidia auctas hostium copias cernebat, tamen adventu consulum mire gaudere. Non solum enim nihil ex raptis in diem commeatibus superabat, sed ne unde raperet quidem quidquam reliqui erat, omni undique frumento, postquam ager parum tutus erat, in urbes munitas convecto, ut vix decem dierum, quod compertum postea est, frumentum superesset, Hispanorumque ob inopiam transitio parata fuerit, si matu-ritas temporum exspectata foret.

XLI.

Ceterum temeritati consulis ac præprovero ingenio materiam etiam fortuna dedit, quod, in prohibendis praedatoribus, tumultuario prælio ac procursu magis militum quam ex præparato aut jussu imperatorum orto, haudquaquam par Pœnis dimicatio fuit. Ad mille et septingenti cæsi, non plus centum Romanorum sociorumque occisis. Ceterum victoribus effuse sequentibus metu insidiarum obstitit Paulus consul, cujus eo die (nam alternis imperitabant) imperium erat, Varrone indignante ac vociferante emissum hostem e manibus, debellarique, ni cessatum foret, putuisse. Hannibal id damnum haud ægerrime pati; quin potius credere velut inessem tam temeritatem ferocioris consulis ac novorum maxime militum esse. Et omnia ei hostium haud secus quam sua nota erant: dissimiles discordesque imperitare, duas prope partes tironum militum in exercitu esse. Itaque locum et tempus insidiis aptum se habere ratus, nocte proxima nihil præter arma ferentes secum educit milites, castra plena omnis fortunæ publicæ privataque relinquit; transque proximos montes læva pedites instructos condit, dextra equites, impedimenta per convallem, medium agmen, traducit, ut diripiendis velut desertis fuga dominorum castris occupatum impeditumque hostem opprimeret. Crebri 25 licti in castris ignes, ut fides fieret, dum ipse longius spatium fuga praeciperet, falsa imagine castrorum, sicut Fabium priore anno frustratus esset, tenere in locis consules voluisse.

Ubi illuxit, subductæ primo stationes, inde propius adeuntibus insolitu silentium admirationem fecit. Jam satis comperta solitudine in castris, concursus fit ad prætoria consulum nuntiantium fugam hostium adeo trepidam, ut tabernaculis stantibus castra reliquerint; quoque fuga obscurior esset, crebros etiam relictos ignes. Clamor inde ortus, ut signa proferri jubenter, ducerentque ad persequeundos hostes ac protinus castra diripienda. Et consul alter velut unus turbæ militaris erat;
Paulus etiam atque etiam dicere providendum præcavendumque esse. Postremo, cum aliter neque seditionem neque ducem seditionis sustinere posset, Marium Statilium praefectum cum turma Lucana exploratum mittit. Qui ubi adequitavit portis, subsistere extra munimenta ceteris jussis, 15 ipse cum duobus equitibus vallum intravit, speculatusque omnia cum cura, renuntiat insidias profecto esse: ignes in parte castrorum, qua vergant ad hostem, relictos; tabernacula aperta et omnia cara in promptu relictas; argentum quibusdam locis temere per vias velut objectum ad praedam 20 vidisse. Quæ ad deterредos a cupiditate animos nuntiata erant, ea accenderunt; et, clamore orto a militibus, ni signum detur, sine ducibus ituros, haudquaquam dux defuit: nam extemplo Varro signum dedit proficiscendi. Paulus, cum ei sua sponte cunctanti pulli quoque auspicio non ad 25 dixissent, nutriari jam efferenti porta signa collegæ jussit. Quod quamquam Varro ægre est passus, Flaminii tamen recens casus, Claudiique consulis primo Punico bello memorata navalis clades, religionem animo incussit. Di prope ipsi eo die magis distulere quam prohibuere imminetem 30 pestem Romanis. Nam forte ita evenit, ut, cum referri signa in castra jubenti consuli milites non parerent, servi duo, Formiani unus, alter Sidicini equitis, qui Servilio atque Atilio consulibus inter tabulatores excepti a Numidis fuerant, profugerent eo die ad dominos: deductique ad con-35 sules nuntiant omnem exercitu Hannibalis transit proximos montes sedere in insidiis. Horum opportunus adventus consules imperii potentes fecit, cum ambitio alterius suam primum apud eos prava indulgentia majestatem solvisset.

XLIII.

Hannibal, compelled by want of provisions and the consequent dissatisfaction of his soldiers, Hannibal, postquam motos magis inconsulte Romanos quam ad ultimum temere evecotos vidit, nequidquam, detecta fraude, in castra Redit. Ibi plures dies propter inopiam frumenti manere nequit; novaque consilia in dies non more particularly his Spanish mercenaries, marches into Apulia, and pitches his camp near Cannes. — The Romans pursue.
apud milites solum mixtos ex colluvione omnium gentium, sed etiam apud ducem ipsum oriebantur. Nam cum initio fremitus, deinde aperta vociferatio fuisset exposcentium stipendium debitum, querentiumque annonam primo, postremo famem, et mercennarios milites, maxime Hispani generis, de transitione cepisse consilium fama esset, ipse etiam interdum Hannibal de fuga in Galliam dicitur agitasse, ita ut, relicto peditatu omni, cum equitibus se proriperet. Cum haec consilia atque hic habitus animorum esset in castris, movere inde statuit in calidiora atque eo maturiora messibus Apuliæ loca, simul quod, quo longius ab hoste recessisset, transfuga impeditiora levibus ingeniiis essent. Prefectus est nocte, ignibus similiter factis, tabernaculisque paucis in speciem relictis, ut insidiarum par priore metus contineret Romanos. Sed per eundem Lucanum Statilium, omnibus ultra castra transque montes exploratis, cum relatum esset visum procul hostium agmen, tum de insequendo eo consilia agitari coepit. Cum utriusque consulis eadem quæ ante semper fuisset sententia, ceterum 25 Varroni fere omnes, Paulo nemo praeter Serviliam prioris anni consulem adsentiretur, majoris partis sententia ad nobiletandam clade Romana Cannas, urgento fato, prefecti sunt. Prope eum vicum Hannibal castra posuerat aversa a Volturno vento, qui campis torridis siccitate nubes pulveris ve-30 hit. Id cum ipsis castris per commodo fuit, tum salutare praecipue futurum erat cum aciem dirigere, ipsi aversi, terga tantum adflante vento, in occæatum pulvere effuso hostem pugnaturi.

XLIV.

Consules, satis exploratis itineribus, sequentes Pœnum, ut ventum ad Cannas est, et in conspectu Pœnum habebant, bina castra communium eodem ferme intervallo, quo ad Geronium, sicut ante copiis divisis. Aufidius amtibus ex sua cujusque opportunitate haud sine certamine dabant: ex minoribus tamen castris, quae posita trans Auffidum erant, liberius aquabrantur Romani, quia ripa ulterior nullum habebat hostium præsidium. Hannibal spem nactus locis natis ad equestrem pugnam, qua parte virium invictus erat, facturos copiam pugnandi consules, dirigit aciem laccetisque Numidarum procuracione hostes. Inde rursus sollicitari seditione militari ac discordia consulum Romana castra, cum Paulus Semproniiique et Flaminii temeritatem Varroni, Varro speciosum timidis ac segnibus ducibus exemplum Fabium objicerat; testareturque deos hominesque hic, nullam penes se culpam esse, quod Hannibal jam usu cepisset Italian; se constrictum a collega teneri; ferrum atque arma iratis et pugnare cupientibus adimi militibus: ille, si quid projectis ac proditis ad incon- saltam atque improvidam pugnam legionibus accideret, se, omnis culpa exsortem, omnis eventus participem fore dice- ret. Videret ut, quibus lingua tam prompta ac temeraria, æque in pugna vigerent manus.

dum altercationibus magis quam consiliis tempus teritur, Hannibal ex acie, quam ad multum diei tenuerat instructam, cum in castra ceteras recuperet copias, Numidas ad invadendos ex minoribus castris Romanorum aquatores trans flumen mittit. Quam inconditam turbam cum vixdum in ripam egressi clamore ac tumultu fugassent, in stationem quoque pro vallo locatam atque ipsas prope portas evecti sunt. Id vero insignium visum, ab tumultuario auxilio jam etiam castra Romana terreri; ut ea modo una causa, ne ex templo transiret flumen dirigerentque aciem, tenuerit Romanos, quod summa imperii eo die penes Paulum fucrit. 1 Itaque postero die 15 Varro, cui sors ejus diei imperii erat, nihil consulto collega, signum proposuit, instructasque copias flumen traduxit, sequente Paulo, quia magis non probare quem non adjuvare consilium poterat. Transgressi flumen eas 20 quoque, quas in castris minoribus habuerant, copias suis adjungunt, atque ita instruunt aciem: in dextro cornu (id erat flumini proprius) Romanos equites locant, deinde pedites: laevum cornu extremi equites sociorum, intra 25 pedites ad medium juncti legionibus Romanis tenuerunt: jaculatores cum ceteris levium armorum auxiliis prima acies facta: consules cornua tenuerunt, Terentius laevum, ÄEmilius dextrum; Gemino Servilio media pugna tuenda data.

XLVI.

Hannibal luce prima, Balcaribus levique alia armatura præmissa, transgressus flumen, ut quoque traduxerat, ita in acie locabat: Gallos Hispanosque equites prope ripam laevum in cornu adversus Romanum equatum; dextrum cornu Numidis equitibus datum; media acie peditibus firmata, ita ut Afrorum utraque cornua essent, interponerentur his mediis Galli atque Hispani. Afros Romanam magna ex parte crederes aciem; ita armati erant, armis 10 et ad Trebiam ceterum magna ex parte ad Trasumennum captis. Gallis Hispanisque scuta ejusdem formæ fere erant, dispares ac dissimiles gladii, Gallis prælongi ac sine mucronibus, Hispani, punctim magis quam caesim adsueto petere hostem, brevitate habiles 15 et cum mucronibus. Sane et alius habitus gentium harum cum magnitudine corporum tum specie terribilis erat: Galli super umbilicis erant nudi; Hispani linteis praetextis purpura tunicis candore miro fulgentibus constiterant.

XLVII. Clamore sublato, procurum ab auxiliis, et pugna levibus primum armis commissa; dein-de equitum Gallorum Hispanorumque lœvum cornu cum dextro Romano concurrît, minime equestris more pugnæ: frontibus enim adversis concurrendum erat, quia, nullo circa ad evagandum relictō spatio, hinc amnis, hinc peditem acies claudébant in directum utrimque nitentes. Stantibus ac confertis postremo turba equis, vir virum amplexus detræhebat equo. 5 Pedestre magna jam ex parte certamen factum erat: acrius tamen quam diuitis pugnatum est; pulsique Romani equites terga vertunt. Sub equestris finem certaminis coorta est peditem pugna. Primo et viribus et animis pa-10 rumper constabant ordines Gallis Hispanisque: tandem Romani, diu ac sæpe conisi, æqua fronte acieque densa impulere hostium cuneum nimis tenuem, eoque parum validum, a cetera prominentem acie: impulsis deinde ac trepide referentibus pedem insistère; ac tenore uno per præ- 20 ceps pavore fugientium agmen in medium primum aciem illati, postremo, nullo resistente, ad subsidia Afrorum pervenerunt, qui utrimque reductis alis constiterant, media, qua Galli Hispanique steterant, aliquantum prominentè acie. Qui cuneus ut pulsus æquavit frontem primum, dein cedendo 25 etiam sinum in medio dedit, Afri circa jam cornua fecerant, irruentibusque incaute in medium Romanis circumdedere alas; mox cornua extendingo clausere et ab tergo hostes. Hinc Romani defuncti nequidquam praelio uno, omissis Gallis Hispanisque, quorum terga ceciderant, et adversus 30 Afros integram pugnam ineunt, non tantum in eo iniquam quod inclusi adversus circumfusos, sed etiam quod fessi cum recentibus ac vegetis pugnabant.

Furius Bibaculus, et viginti unus tribuni militum, con-45 sulares quidam prætoriisque et ædilicii (inter eos Cn. Servili-um Geminum et M. Minucium numerant, qui magister equi- tum priore anno aliquot annis ante consul fuerat), octoginta præterea aut senatores aut qui eos magistratus gossissent, unde in senatum legi deborent, cum sua voluntate milites in 50 legionibus facti essent. Capta eo prælio tria milia peditum et equites mille et quingenti dicuntur.

Hæc est pugna Cannensis, Alliensti eladi nobilitate par, ceterum ut illis, quæ post pugnam accidere, levior, quia ab hoste est cessatum, sic strage exercitus gravior foediorque. Fuga namque ad Alliam sicut urbebem prodidit, ita 5 exercitum servavit: ad Cannas fugientem consulum vix quinquaginta secuti sunt, alterius morientis prope totus exercitus fuit.

Binis in castris, cum multitudo semiermis sine ducibus esset, nuntium, qui in majoribus 10 erant, mittunt, dum prœlio, deinde ex lætitia epulis fatigatos quies nocturna hostes premeret, ut ad se transirent: uno agmine Canusium abituros esse. Eam sententiam alii totam asperrari: cur enim illos, qui se acessant, ipsos 15 non venire, cum æque conjungi possent? Quia videlicet plena hostium omnia in medio essent, et aliorum quam sua corpora tanto periculo mallent objicere. Aliiis non tam sententia displicere quam animus deesse. P. Sempronius Tuditanus tri-20 bunus militum "Capi ergo mavultis" inquit "ab avarissimo et crudelissimo hoste, aestimarique capita vestra et exquiri pretia ab interrogantibus, Romanus civis sis an Latinus socius, ut ex tua contumelia et miseria alteri honos quaeratur? Non tu, si quidem L. Æmilius consulis, qui se bene 25 mori quam turbiter vivere maluit, et tot fortissimorum viro-rum, qui circa eum cumulati jacent, cives estis. Sed ante-quam opprimit lux majoraque hostium agmina obsepiunt iter, per hos, qui inordinati atque incompoti obstrepunt portis, erumpamus. Ferro atque audacia via fit quamvis 30 per confertos hostes. Cuneo quidem hoc laxum atque solutum agmen, ut si nihil obstet, disjicias. Itaque ite me-cum, qui et vosmet ipsos et rem publicam salvam vultis.”

Jacebant tot Romanorum milia, pedites passim equitesque, ut quem cuique fors aut pugna junxerat aut fuga. Adsurgentes quidam ex strage media cruciente, quos stricta matutino frigore excitaverant vulnera, ab hoste oppressi sunt. Quodam et jacentes vivos succisis feminibus poplitibusque inve- nerunt, nudantes cervicem jugulumque, et reliquum sanguinem jubentes haurire. Inventi quidam sunt mersis in effossam terram capitibus, quos sibi ipsos fecisse foveas obruentesque ora superjecta humo interclusisse spiritum apparebat. Spoliis ad multum diei lectis, Hannibal ad minora ducit castra oppugnanda, et omnium primum, brachio objecto, flumine eos excludit. Ceterum ab omnibus labore, vigiliis, vulneribus etiam fessis maturior ipsius spe deditio est facta. Pacti, ut arma atque equos traderent, in capita Romana trecenis nummis quadrigatis, in sociis ducentis, in servos centenis, et ut, eo pretio persoluto, cum singulis abirent vestimentis, in castra hostes acceperunt; traditi que in custodiæ omnès sunt, seorsum cives sociique. Dum iber tempus teritur, interea cum ex majoribus castris, quibus satis virium et animi fuit, ad quattuor milia hominum et ducenti equites, alii agmine, alii palati passim per agros, quod haud minus tutum erat, Canusium perfugissent, castra ipsa ab sauciis timidisque cadae condicione qua altera tra-dita hosti. Praedae ingens parta est; et praeter equos viros-que et si quid argenti (quod plurimum in phaleris equorum erat; nam ad vescendum facto perexiguo, utique militantes, utebantur) omnis cetera praeda diripienda data est. Tum sepeliendi causa conferri in unum corpora suorum jussit.
Ad octo milia fuisse dicuntur fortissimorum virorum. Con-sulem quoque Romanum conquisitum sepultumque quidam auctores sunt.

LV.

P. Furius Philus et M. Pomponius pres-tores senatum in curiam Hostiliam vocavere-tunt, ut de urbis custodia consulerent: neque enim dubitabant deletis exercitibus hostem ad oppugnandam Romam, quod unum opus belli 5 restaret, venturum. Cum in malis, sicuti ingentibus, ita ignotis, ne consilium quidem satis expedirent, obstreperetque clamor lamentantium mulierum, et, nondum palam facto, vivi mortuque et per omnes pæne domos pro-miscue complorarentur, tum Q. Fabius Maximus censuit 10 equites expeditos et Appia et Latina via mittendos, qui ob-vios percutianto (aliquos prefecto ex fuga passim dissipato-to fore) referant, que fortuna consulum atque exercituum sit, et, si quid dii immortales, miseri imperii, reliquum Ro-mani nominis fecerint, ubi eæ copiæ sint; quo se Hannibal 15 post prælium contulerit; quid paret, quid agat acturusque sit. Hæc exploranda nocscendaque per impigros juvenes esse. Illud per patres ipsos agendum, quoniam magistratuum parum sit, ut tumultum ac trepidationem in urbe tollant, matronas publico arceant, continerique intra suum 20 quamque limen cogant; comploratus familiarum coercerant; silentium per urbem faciant; nuntios rerum omnium ad praetores deducendos curent; sua quique fortuna domi auctorem exspectent; custodesque praeterea ad portas ponant, qui prohibeant quemquam egredi urbem, cogantque 25 homines nullam nisi urbe ac mœnibus salvis salutem sperare. Ubi conticuerit recte tumultus, tum in curiam patres revocandos consulendumque de urbis custodia esse.

Opinion of Fabius approved of unanimously.
—Despatch received from the consul Varro.— Annual sacred rites of Ceres intermitted in consequence of the public mourning.—Letter received from Sicily, from the propietor Oscanlius, stating that the territories of Hiero were being devastated by a Carthaginian fleet, and that another was lying at the Ægates ready to attack Lilybæum.
—The propietor asks for a fleet to oppose the enemy.

Cum in hanc sententiam pedibus omnes issent, summotaque foro per magistratus turba, patres diversi ad sedandos tumultus discessissent, tum demum litteræ a C. Terentio consule adlatæ sunt: L. Æmilium consulem exercitumque caesium, sese Canusii esse, reliquias tantæ cladis velut ex naufragio colligentem. Ad decem milia militum ferme esse incompessorum inordinatorumque. Pœnem sedere ad Cannas, in captivorum pretiis praæ 10 daque alia nec victoria animo nec magni ducis more nundinantem. Tum privatæ quoque per domos clades vulgatæ sunt; adeoque totam urbem opplevit luctus, ut sacrum anniversarium Ceres intermissum sit, quia nec lugenæ 15 tibus id facere est fas, nec ualla in illa tempes-tate matrona egressa luctus fuerat. Itaque ne ob eandem causam alia quoque sacra publica aut privata desererentur, senatus consultediebus triginta luctus est finitus. Ceterum cum, 20 sedato urbis tumultu, revocati in curiam patres essent, aliae insuper ex Sicilia litteræ adlatæ sunt ab T. Otacilio propietore, regnum Hieronis classe Punica vastari; cui cum opem imploranti ferre vellet, nunfiam sibi esse aliam classem ad Ægates insulas stare, paratam 25 instructamque, ut, ubi se versum ad tuendam Syracusanam oram Pæni sensissent, Lilybæum extemplo provinciamque quibus trucidandis et ferrum et vires hostem defecerunt. 25 Sunt etiam de nostris quidam, qui ne in acie quidem refu-gerunt, sed, præsidio castris relictī, cum castra traderentur, in potestatem hostium venerunt. Haud equidem ullius civis et commilitonis fortunae aut condicioni invideo, nec premen-do alium me extulisse velim—: ne illi quidem (nisi perni-30 citatis pedum et cursus aliquod præmium est), qui plerique inermes ex acie fugientes non prius quam Venussiæ aut Ca-nusii constiterunt, se nobis merito prætulerint, gloriatique sint in se plus quam in nobismet præsidii rei publicæ esse.

Sed illis ut bonis ac fortibus militibus utemini, et nobis 35 etiam promptioribus pro patria, quod beneficioc vestro redempti atque in patriam restituti fuerimus. Dilectum ex omni ætate et fortuna habetis; octo milia servorum audio armari: non minor numerus noster est, nec majore pretio redimi possumus quam ii emuntur—: nam si conferam nos 40 cum illis, injuriam nomini Romano faciam. Illud etiam in tali consilio animadvertendum vobis censeam, patres conscripti (si jam duriores esse velitis, quod nullo nostro merito faci-atis), cui nos hosti relicturi sitis. Pyrrho videlicet, qui vos hospitalum numero captivos habuit, an barbaro ac Pæno, qui 45 utrum avarior an crudelior sit, vix existimari potest. Si vi-deatis catenas, squalorem, deformitatem civium vestrorum, non minus profecto vos ea species moveat, quam si ex altera parte cernatis stratas Cannensibus campis legiones vestras.
Intueri potestis sollicitudinem et lacrimas in vestibulo curiæ 50 stantium cognatorum nostrorum, exspectantiumque responsum vestrum. Cum ii pro nobis proque iis qui absunt ita suspensi ac solliciti sint, quem censeitis animum ipsorum esse, quorum in discrimine vita libertasque est? Sed si, me diups fidius, ipse in nos mitis Hannibal contra naturam suam 55 esse velit, nihil tamen nobis vita opus esse censeamus, cum indigni ut redimeremur a vobis visi simus. Rediere Ro-mam quondam remissi a Pyrrho sine pretio capti; sed re-diere cum legatis, primoribus civitatis, ad redimendos sese missis. Redeam ego in patriam trecentis nummis non 60 æstimatus civis? Suum quisque animum habet, patres conscripti. Scio in discrimine esse vitam corpusque meum:
magis me famæ periculum movet, ne a vobis damnati ac repulsi abeamus: neque enim vos pretio pepercisse homines credent."

LX.

Ubi is finem fecit, extemplo ab ea turba, quæ in comitio erat, clamor flebilis est sublime, manusque ad curiam tendebant orantes, ut sibi liberos, fratres, cognatos redderent. Feminas quoque metus ac necessitas in foro turbae virorum immiscerat. Senatus, summotis arbitris, consuliceptus. Ibi cum sententiis variaretur, et alii redimendos de publico, alii nullam publice impensam faciendam, nec prohibendos ex privato redimi; si quibus argentum in præsensia deesset, dandum ex ærario pecuniam mutuam, prædibusque ac prædiis cavendum populo censerent; tum T. Manlius Torquatus, priscæ ac nimis dure, ut plerisque videatur, severitatis, interrogatus sententiam, ita locutus fertur: "Si tantummodo postulassent legati pro iis, qui in hostium potestate sunt, ut redimeren..., 15 tur, sine ullius insectatione eorum brevi sententiam peregisse: quid enim aliud quam admonendi essetis, ut morem traditum a patribus necessario ad rem militarem exemplo servaretis? Nunc autem, cum prope gloriati sint, quod se hostibus dediderint, præferrique non captis modo in acie ab hostibus, sed etiam iis, qui Venusiam Canusiumque pervenerunt, atque ipsi C. Terentio consuli, æquum censuerint, nihil vos eorum, patres conscripti, quæ illic acta sunt, ignorare patiar. Atque utinam hæc, quæ apud vos acturus sum, Canusii apud ipsum exercitum agerem, optimum testem ignavæ cujusque et virtutis; aut unus hic saltem adesset P. Sempronius, quem si isti ducem securi essent, milites hodie in castris Romanis non captivi in hostium potestate essent. Et cum, fessis pugnando hostibus, tum victoria lætis et ipsis plerisque regressis in castra sua, noctem ad erumpentum liberam habuissent, et septem milia armatorum hominum erumpere etiam per confertos hostes possent, neque per se ipsi id facere conati sunt neque alium sequi volvererunt. Nocte prope tota P. Sempronius Tuditanus non destitit monere, adhortari eos, dum paucitas hostium circa ca-stra, dum quies ac silentium esset, dum nox inceptum tegere posset, se ducem sequentur: ante lucem pervenire in tota loca, in sociorum urbes posse. Sicut avorum memoria P.
Decius tribunus militum in Samnio; sicut, nobis adolescentibus, priore Punico bello, Calpurnius Flamma trecentis voluntariis, cum ad tumulum eos capiendum, situm inter me-dios duceret hostes, dixit 'Moriamur, milites, et morte nostra eripiamus ex obsidione circumventas legiones:' si hoc P.
Sempronius diceret, nec viros quidem nec Romanos vos du-ceret, si nemo tantae virtutis exstitisset comes. Viam non ad gloriam magis, quam ad salutem, ferentem demonstrat; reduces in patriam, ad parentes, ad conjuges ac liberis facit.
Ut servemini, deest vobis animus? quid, si moriendum pro patria esset, faceretis? Quinquaginta milia civium sociorumque circa vos eo ipso die caesa jacent. Si tot exempla virtutis non movent, nihil umquam movebit; si tanta clades vilem vitam non fecit, nulla faciet. Et liberi atque incolumes desiderate patriam: immo desiderate, dum patria est, dum cives ejus estis. Sero nunc desideratis, deminuti capite, abalienati jure civium, servi Carthaginiensium facti. Pretio redituri estis eo, unde ignavia ac nequitia abistis? P. Sempronium, civem vestrum, non audistis, arma capere ac sequi se jubement; Hannibalem post paulo audistis, castra prodi et arma tradi jubement. Quam ego ignaviam istorum accu-suso, cum scelus possim accusare! Non modo enim sequi 60 recusarunt bene momentem, sed obsistere ac retinere conati sunt, ni strictis gladiis viri fortissimi inertes summovissent.
Prius, inquam, P. Sempronio per civium agmen quam per hostium fuit erumpendum. Hos cives patria desideret, quorum si ceteri similisfuisseent, neminem hodie ex iis qui ad 61 Cannas pugnaverunt civem haberet? Ex milibus septem armatorum sexcenti exstiterunt qui erumpere auderent, qui in patriam liberi atque armati redirent: neque his sexcentis milia hostium obstitere. Quam tutum iter duarum prope legionum agmini futurum censetis fuisse? Haberetis hodie 70 viginti milia armatorum Canusii, fortia, fidelia, patres conscripti. Nunc autem quem ad modum hi boni fidelesque (nam fortis ne ipsi quidem dixerint) cives esse possunt?
Nisi quis credere potest fuisse, ut erumpentibus, quin erumperent, obsistere conati sunt; aut non invidere eos cum in-75 columitati tum gloriæ illorum per virtutem partæ, cum sibi timorem ignaviamque servitutis ignominiosæ causam esse sciant. Maluerunt in tentoriis latentes simul lucem atque hostem exspectare, cum silentio noctis erumpendi occasio esset. Ad erumpendum e castris defuit animus, ad tutanda 80 fortiter castra animum habuerunt; dies noctesque aliquot obessi vallum armis, se ipsi tutati vallo sunt; tandem ultima ausi passique, cum omnia subsidia vitae abessent, adfectis-que fame viribus, arma jam sustinere nequirent, necessitatibus magis humanis quam armis victi sunt—: orto sole ab 85 hostibus ad vallum accessum; ante secundam horam, NULLAM fortunam certaminis experti, tradiderunt arma ac se ipsos.
Hæc vobis ipsorum per biduum militia fuit. Cum in acie stare ac pugnare decuerat, tum in castra refugerunt; cum pro vallo pugnandum erat, castra tradiderunt, neque in acie 90 neque in castris utiles. Vos redimam? Cum erumpere ca-stris oportet, cunctamini ac manetis; cum manere, castra tutari armis necessæ est, et castra et arma et vos ipsos tradittis hosti. Ego non magis istos redimendos, patres conscripti, censeo, quam illos dedendos Hannibali, qui per medios hos-95 tes e castris eruperunt ac per summam virtutem se patris restituerunt."

LXI.

Postquam Manlius dixit, quamquam patrum quoque plerosque captivi cognatione attingebant, praeter exemplum civitatis minime in captivos jam inde antiquitus indulgentis, pecuniæ quoque summa homines movit, qua nec 5 serarium exhaurire (magna jam summa ergogata in servos ad militiam emendos armandosque), nec Hannibalem maxime hujusce rei, ut fama erat, egentem locupletari volebant. Cum tri-ste responsum, non redimi captivos, redditum 10 esset, novusque super veterem luctus tot jactura civium adjectus esset, cum magnis fletibus questibusque legatos ad portam prosecuti sunt. Unus ex iis domum abiiit, quod fallaci reditu in castra jurejurando se exsovisset. Quod 15 ubi innotuit relatumque ad senatum est, omnes censuerunt comprehendendum, et, custodi-bus publice datis, deducendum ad Hannibalem esse.

Est et alia de captivis fama: decem primos 20 venisse; de eis cum dubitatum in senatu esset, admitterentur in urbem necne, ita admissos esse, ne tamen iis senatus daretur. Morantibus deinde longius omnium spe, alios tres insuper legatos venisse, L. Scribonium et C. Calpurnium et L. Manlium. Tum demum 25 ab cognato Scribonii tribuno plebis de redimendis captivis relatum esse, nec censuisse redimendos senatum; et novos legatos tres ad Hannibalem revertisse, decem veteres reman-sisse, quod, per causam recognoscendi nomina captivorum ad Hannibalem ex itinere regressi, religione sese excovissent. 30 De iis dedendis magna contentione actum in senatu esse; victosque paucis sententiis qui dedendos censuerint. Ce-terum proximis censoribus adeo omnibus notis ignominiisque confectos esse, ut quidam eorum mortem sibi ipsi extemplo consciverint, ceteri non foro solum omni deinde vita, 35 sed prope luce ac publico, caruerint. Mirari magis, adeo discrepare inter auctores, quam quid veri sit discernere queas.

Quanto autem major ea clades superioribus cladibus fuerit, vel ea res indicio est, quod fides sociorum, quæ ad 40 eum diem firma steterat, tum labare cepit, nulla profecto alia de re quam quod desperaverant de imperio. Defecere autem ad Pænos hi populi, Atellani, Calatini, Hirpini, Apulorum pars, Samnites præter Pentros, Bruttii omnes, Lucani: præter hos Uxentini et Græcorum omnis ferme ora, Tarentini, Metapontini, Crotonienses Locrique, et Cisalpini omnes Galli. Nec tamen eæ clades defectionesque sociorum moverunt, ut pacis umquam mentio apud Romanos fieret, neque ante consulis Romam adventum, nec postquam is rediit renovavitque memoriam acceptæ cladis. Quo in tempore ipso adeo magno animo civitas fuit, ut consuli ex tanta clade, cujus ipse causa maxima fuisset, redeunti et obviam itum frequenter ab omnibus ordinibus sit, et gratiæ actæ, quod de re publica non desperasset; qui si Carthaginiensium duc-tor fuisset, nihil recusandum supplicii foret.
NOTES.

INTRODUCTION TO BOOKS I. AND II.

The first two books, coming down to the year 480 B.C., give the early mythical history of Rome. Livy seems to take as his leading authority the poet Ennius, who as a poet might be expected to take liberties with the traditions. Niebuhr represented the songs anciently sung at feasts as the origin of all that is picturesque and poetical in this early history, but this view is supported by no evidence.

Seeley gives as the result of his examination the following summary, as a meagre outline, but one in every way probable, of the earliest condition of Rome:

"We see a number of 'gentes' or clans living apparently on local districts or 'pagi' side by side. They bear for the most part the names afterwards conspicuous in Roman history as the names of the great patrician houses.

"They are divided into three great tribes. They regard themselves as connected both with the Latins and with the Sabines.

"Where several sacred places are near together—the Ara Maxima of Hercules, the sacred place of Faunus Lupercus on the Palatine, the temple of Quirinus on the Quirinal—a town springs up. To this the clans resort for festivals, markets, and for common deliberation.

"The clans are an exclusive body, and are in possession of various priesthoods and religious privileges. Though we are told of a great Sabine clan—the Claudian—being admitted among them, they do not as a rule admit strangers into their body.

"They have a king, chosen from their own body, who rules for life.

"He summons round him a council of chiefs or elders, called 'senatus.' This body, whatever deference may be paid to it, has no function beyond that of advising.

"He commands the army, presides in the Senate, and performs certain sacrifices.

"He has the power of appointing two law-officers called 'quaestors.'

"There is a general assembly of the clans called 'comitia curiata.' At this, among other things, family questions, such as adoptions from one clan into another, are decided.

"The community has a religious ritual of an extremely complicated yet inexpensive kind, to which it is much devoted.

"It has religious rites proper to the family and also to the gens; it has also several private religious guilds, which exist to perform certain rites at intervals; sometimes these guilds are connected with particular clans.

"It has priests connected with particular temples, and some highly venerated priests, but no organized priesthood; a priest is not necessary to a sacrifice.

"It has three guilds of persons skilled in theology—the pontiffs, the augurs, and the fetiales.

"The king seems to have the supreme religious as well as civil power.

"The army consists principally of cavalry, which is chosen in equal numbers from the three tribes.

"In this primitive constitution a great reform takes place.

"In consequence of a great population having grown up outside the clans, an army is formed from the whole community, each citizen being ranked according to his property, and required to provide himself with corresponding arms. This army consists mainly of infantry arrayed in phalanx.

"The army so constituted is regarded as a national assembly, and when the will of the nation is to be expressed, a single vote is given to each century of the army.

"In order to make the property-register, a new local classification is required. Four local city tribes are established.

"At some unknown time, but possibly at the same time, the outside population is admitted into the clans, into the three tribes, and into the comitia curiata. But the original clans continue to regard themselves as being the only true clans.

"A national temple of unprecedented magnificence is built on the Capitoline hill.

"A foreign sacred book is acquired, which introduces a Greek element into the religion of the country.

"Finally, a revolution takes place, and the king for life is superseded by two magistrates holding power only for a year."

The early annals of the Republic, given in bk. ii., are as little adapted as those of the kings to afford a firm historical footing.
The most important point is the rise of the plebeians and the growth of the Tribunician power. The aristocratic revolution which expelled the Tarquin family left the royal power in the hands of two magistrates, originally called Praetors, who were annually elected by the comitia centuriata. These Praetors had the power of filling vacancies in the Senate, and of calling it together.

The Senate seems at first to have had the power of nominating to the comitia centuriata the persons to be elected Praetors. In the comitia centuriata the voting was by centuries, and wealth had most influence; in the comitia curiata the voting was by curia. To these two assemblies all the people, patricians and plebeians alike, belonged.
The plebeians obtained by the Valerian law the right of appeal ad populum, to the whole people, from the sentence of magistrates.

After the secession to the Mons Sacer, two plebeian magistrates were elected by the comitia centuriata, to be protectors of the plebeians, and their persons were declared sacred and inviolable.

At first this power was used to prevent oppression by creditors, but C. Mænius extended his protection to plebeians who refused to serve in the army.

A law is passed to divide a certain portion of the public domain. The execution of this law is demanded by the plebeians, and resisted by the patricians.

Genucius, a Tribunus Plebis, impeaches the Consuls, and is murdered.

Pubiliius, in his first Tribuneship, proposes that the Tribuni Plebis be chosen by the comitia tributa, where the voters were plebeian, and the voting by polls; in his second Tribuneship he demands further that Ædiles be chosen in the comitia tributa, and that this assembly be competent to consider questions concerning the whole nation.

On the passing of these laws the number of Tribunes is raised to five.

It is generally assumed that the two Prætors or Consuls were from the first both patricians. Dionysius, however, gives as the names of the two first Tribunes of the Plebs, L. Junius Brutus and C. Sicinius, both of whom were Consuls, and the proposer of the first agrarian law was Sp. Cassius the Consul. In all historic time, the Junian, Sicinian, and Cassian gentes were plebeian. It is, therefore, not improbable that the true state of affairs was as follows: On the expulsion of the Tarquins the Plebs had power enough to effect the election of one Consul; after the conquest of Rome by the Etruscans, by which Rome lost all her land on the right bank of the Tiber, and her tribes were reduced by a third, the plebeians, who are always regarded as a rural population, fell into great distress and fled to the city, where their needs drove them to become debtors to the patricians—hence encroachments on their rights by the latter; after the death of the plebeian champion, Sp. Cassius, the Consuls were elected by the patricians and their clients, and therefore none but patricians became Consuls: this usurpation was for some time acquiesced in by the plebeians after they had secured the election of their Tribunes in the comitia tributa under the Publilian laws.
NOTES.

PREFACE.

1. Facturusne opera pretium sim. "Whether I be likely to obtain the recompense of my labor," i.e., whether I be about to do a thing worth my while. The recompense which the writer has in view is the applause of his contemporaries and of posterity. Livy, as Quintilian (ix., 4, 74) remarks, begins his history with the commencement of a hexameter (Factūrusne óperae pretium sim)—. This, of course, fixes the present reading, as Quintilian wrote only a century, or thereabouts, after Livy. The Roman critic, however, alludes at the same time to an emendation which had been made in the text, namely, Facturus in opera pretium, as it appears, according to Drakenborch, in almost all the MSS. [Tacitus also commences his Annals with a hexameter: Urbem | Romam | principi | reges habuer | e; and Sallust begins the narrative of the Jugurthine war with Bellum | scriptur | us sum | quod populus | manus; and in various other passages of Livy hexameters, or clauses of hexameters, are found. The historians, borrowing largely from the vocabulary of the poets, and imitating their freer syntax, seem not to have been averse to a poetical cadence.]

2-4. Perscripsimus. Observe the force of the compound here, as referring to a full and continuous history of the Roman people.—Si sciam. "If I knew." The present subjunctive is often employed when a condition that is still possible is assumed, while it is at the same time intimated that it will not actually occur. In such a case we often use the imperfect in English (Madvig, L. G., § 347, b).—Ausim. "Would I venture." The old form ausim, a remnant of the obsolete perfect ausi, was retained by the language in its more refined state only in doubtful assertions and in a potential sense (Madvig, § 115, f).—Rem. "A practice." The reference is to the practice of writing historical works. This, as Livy says, had become in his time an old and hackneyed one, and yet new writers were continually coming forward in the hope of surpassing their predecessors.—In rebus. "In the detail of facts."

6-10, Ecunque erit. "However this shall be," i.e., whether I shall gain applause or not by my historical labors.—Memoriae principiis terrarum populi. "For the remembrance of a people that ruled the world."—Prō virili parte. "To the best of my powers."—Nonmini officiis meto. "Shall prove a hinderance unto my name," i.e., unto my becoming known.

11, 12. Res. "The subject," i.e., a continuous history of the Roman people from the very foundation of the city.—Ut quae repetatur.
"Since it is to be traced back." Ut quae is more emphatic than the simple quae would have been; and the subjunctive of course is employed, since the relative implies the reason of what precedes.—Supra septingentesimum annum. The common date for the foundation of Rome is 753 B.C. This is Varro’s computation, and is followed by most authors. The first book of Livy’s history must have been written between 29 and 25 B.C., and the composition of the whole work have been spread over seventeen years, or probably a still longer period.—Ut jam magnitudine, etc. "As by this time to totter under its own magnitude."

13–16. Legentium. The present participle, especially in the genitive plural, is sometimes used in place of a substantive where no ambiguity can result (Madvig, § 425).—Proximaque originibus. "And the events immediately succeeding such origin."—Ad hac nova. "To these modern times." He means the events of the recent civil wars, which would possess, of course, a stronger interest for the Romans of the Augustan age.—Prævstantis populi viris, etc. "The strength of an over-mighty people has been working out its own ruin." Jampridem gives conscient the force of a perfect.

16–21. Contra. He means with feelings the very opposite of theirs. —Tantisper certe. "So long at least."—Tota mente. "With my whole attention."—Omnis expers curæ. "Free from every care," i.e., free not only from all fear of giving offence by expressing his opinions too freely, but also from the sorrow which, as a patriot, he could not but feel in recording the civil wars of his countrymen.— Scribentis. Participle again employed as a noun.—Flectere. "To warp."—Sollicitum. "Full of disquiet."

21, 22. Ante conditam condendum urbem. "Before the city was founded or was about to be founded." The expression ante conditam urbem, when considered by itself, would embrace of course the whole series of events connected with the destinies of Rome which had preceded the founding of the city; but when taken in connection with the limiting clause, condendum urbem, it refers more to the more remote ones, such as the destruction of Troy, the wanderings of Æneas, the founding of Lavinium and Alba, the line of the Silvii, Evander, Cacus, Hercules, etc.; whereas condendum urbem relates to the events more immediately preceding the founding of Rome, that is, to the legends of Mars, Rea, the birth of the twins, Faustulus, Numitor, Amulius, the Lupercalia, the six and twelve vultures, etc. There is no need therefore of making condendam here have the force of a present participle passive, and of translating "before the city was founded or was founding," although many commentators are in favor of this. —Poeticis magis decora fabulis, etc. "More suited for the fictions of poetry than for the genuine records of history,” i. e., more worthy to embellish poetic fictions than to appear amid accurate historical records.

23-29. Ea nec adfirmare, etc. In reporting the traditions of the early ages of Rome, Livy seems less desirous of ascertaining the truth than of arraying the popular story in the most attractive garb. He never conceived the project of drawing up a critical history of Rome.

—Venia. "Indulgence."—Consecrare origines suas. "To impart a sacred character to their origin."—Ea bellì gloria, etc. Observe that ea has here the force of talis.—Ut cum suum conditorisque, etc. "That when they represent Mars, above all others, as their own parent and that of their founder."—Gentes humanæ. "The nations of the world."

30-35. Sed haec et his similia, etc. "But in whatever way these and matters like these shall be attended to or judged of, I shall not, for my part, deem of much importance," i. e., whether these early legends shall be attended to diligently or carelessly, or shall be judged of as true or false.—Mihi. "I beg of him." Literally, "for me." This is what grammarians term the ethic dative, and is here employed to indicate earnestness on the part of the writer.—Quae vita, qui mores fuerint. "What was the mode of life, what were the manners (of the people)," i. e., in the earlier and better ages of Rome.—Artibus. "Practices," i. e., line of conduct.

35-39. Labente. "Declining."—Velut desidentes primo. "At first slightly giving way, as it were." A metaphor borrowed from a building which at first gives way or yields a little, then sinks more and more, until at last it falls headlong. Observe that desidentes is from desiderâre, not from desiderâre.—Quibus nec vitia, etc. He means that, although men feel the painful consequences of their vices, they nevertheless shrink from applying any suitable remedies.

40-42. In cognitione rerum. "In the study of history." Observe that illud in the beginning of the sentence is in the predicate.—Omnis te exempli documenta, etc. "That you behold instances of every kind of conduct placed before the view on a conspicuous monument," i. e., put on open record.—Inde. We would naturally expect here either unde or ut inde; but inde is employed with intentional abruptness, in order to render what follows more prominent.

45-50. Sanctor. "More observant of good morals."—Nec in quam civitatem. "Nor a state into which." Attraction, in imitation of the Greek idiom, for nec ulla civitas in quam.—Adeo. "So much so that."—Abundantes. "Overflowing."—Desiderium per luxum, etc.
“The eager desire of ruining themselves, and of destroying everything else by debauchery and licentiousness.” Although well aware of the inevitable and immediate consequences of their conduct, they nevertheless pursued their pleasures with so much eagerness as to appear actually desirous of bringing about, as it were, their own ruin.

52-56. Ab initio certe, etc. “From the commencement, at least, of so arduous a task about to be undertaken (by me).” Observe that ordiendae is here to be taken passively, and in a future, not in a present sense. Compare note on condendam, line 21.—Præcationibus deorum deorum deorumque. “Prayers to the gods and goddesses.” Objective genitives.—Orsis tanti operis. “To the beginnings of so laborious a work.” Orsis is the dative of orsa, -orum, a substantive derived from the participle orsus.—Successus prosperos. “A favorable issue.”

BOOK I.

CHAPTER I.

1-5. Satis constat. “It is sufficiently established.” Livy does not mean that we are to regard what he states as an historical fact, but merely as something well grounded in popular belief.—Savium esse. “That cruelty was practised.”—Duobus. “For two.” Dative of advantage. The more usual construction of abstinere is the ablative with a or ab.—Jure. “On account of the tie.”—Omne jus belli abstinuisse. “Had refrained from exercising all privilege of war;” more literally, “Had kept off all right of war.”

6-11. Casibus. “Vicissitudes of fortune.”—Enetūm. For Enetorum. The Eneti (‘Everoi), less correctly Heneti (‘Everoi), are mentioned as existing in Paphlagonia in the time of Homer (II. ii., 852). They dwelt along the coast of the Euxine. It is not improbable that it was the resemblance of their name to that of the Italian Veneti that gave rise to the strange story of Antenor having migrated to Venetia after the fall of Troy, and having there founded the city of Patavium (Virg., Æn., i., 242; Serv. ad loc.)—Pyliamene. Pyliamenes was slain by Menelaus (II., v., 578).—Euganeisque, etc. The Euganei play but an unimportant part in historical times, but appear at an earlier period to have been more powerful and widely spread. The notion of their Greek descent, referred to by Pliny (iii., 20, 24), was evidently a mere etymological fancy, based upon the supposed derivation of their name from ἐγενεῖς, “the well-born.”

13-18. Et in quem, etc. For et locus in quem.—Pagusque Trojano inde nomen est. The dative, by attraction, for the [more usual] nominative, which latter occurs farther on, in line 18, "Troja et huic loco nomen est."—Ab simili clade. "By reason of similar misfortune." Observe here the employment of ab to denote a circumstance as the cause of a thing. (Zumpt, § 305.)—Ad majora rerum initia. Antenor merely founded Patavium, but Æneas in reality the Roman state.—Primo in Macedonian venisse. Ænea (Aúea), a town of Chalcidice in Macedonia, was said to have been founded by Æneas.—Inde in Siciliam, etc. The tradition current among the Greeks ascribed the foundation of Segesta, in this island, to a band of Trojan settlers, fugitives from the destruction of their city; and this tradition was readily welcomed by the Romans, who in consequence claimed a kindred origin with the Segestans.—Ab Sicilia, etc. The prepositions ab and ad are here intended to mark respectively the beginning and the end of the course.—Tenuisse. "Held on his way." Supply cursum.

19–23. Ut quibus ab immenso, etc. "As being those unto whom, after their almost boundless wanderings, nothing remained," etc. This is mentioned to show why they plundered the country.—Aborriginesque. The term Aborigines is employed by all the ancient writers to designate the earliest inhabitants of Latium, before they assumed the appellation of Latini. There can be no doubt that the obvious derivation of this name (ab origine) is the true one, and that it could never have been a national title really borne by any people, but was a mere abstract appellation invented in later times to designate the primitive and original inhabitants of the country.—Ex urbe. Laurentum, the ancient capital of Latium, and the residence of king Latinus.

23–27. Duplex inde fama est. "From this point there is a twofold tradition." The first of these approximates to that which Virgil gives, the second to that mentioned by Dionysius of Halicarnassus (i., 57, 64). Livy, however, softens down the more marvellous features of both. Compare Virg., Æn., iii., 389; vii., 112.—Ad finitatem. "An alliance by marriage."—Inter primores. "Among the foremost ranks." Compare chap. xii.: "Ipse ad primores Romulus provolat;" and also Curt., iv., 6: "Dimicare inter primores." Some incorrectly render, "attended by the chief men of his court."

28–35. Unde aut quo casu, etc. "Whence (having come), or by what casualty having departed from their home."—Postquam audierit. "After he heard (as is said)." Observe the employment of the subjunctive to indicate the statement or words of others.—Condendaæque urbis locum. "And a site for a city to be founded (by them)."—Et nobilitatem admiratam, etc. "That he, struck with admiration both at the noble character of the nation and of the hero, and also at their spirit," etc.—Fidem sanxisse. "Confirmed the assurance."

35–37. Inde fælus iustum. "That thereupon a league was struck." The expression, icere fælus, "to strike a league," is derived from striking or slaying the victim sacrificed on the occasion.—In hospitio. "On a footing of hospitality."—Apud penates deos. The penates were believed to be the creators and dispensers of all the well-being and gifts of fortune enjoyed not only by a family, but by an entire community.

39–42. Utrique adfirmat. "Fully confirms."—Stabili certaque sede. "By a fixed and permanent settlement."—Lavinium. The founding of Lavinium by Æneas and the Trojans is of course a mere fable. It would seem more than probable, however, that this city was at one time the metropolis or centre of the Latin state. Its site is identified with the modern Pratica. Lavinium appears to be only another form for Latinum, just as Latinus and Lavinus are only two forms of the same name.—Ascanium. Apposition, instead of Ascanio, by attraction, as in line 11.

CHAPTER II.

2–7. Turnus. Son of Daunus and Venilia. Dionysius calls him Τυρρηνος, the Tyrrhenian, as the representative of this race. The Latin name also would seem to be shortened from Turrinus.—Rutulorum. The Rutuli were settled at a very early period in a part of Latium adjoining the sea-coast, their capital city being Ardea. They were a small and unimportant people. They are supposed by some to have been connected with the Etruscans, and to have been a relic of the period when that people had extended their dominion throughout Latium and Campania.—Prælatum sibi advenam. "That the newcomer had been preferred to himself."—Ducem Latinum amisere. According to Cato, Latinus fell in battle with Æneas; according to another account, in a war with Mezentius.

8–15. Diffisi rebus. "Having distrusted their own resources."—Mezentium. The true form of the name probably is Medentius, which will then be connected with the Oscan Meddix. Mezentius was a mythic king of the Tyrrhensians or Etruscans, at Cære or Agylla.—Cære. The ablative, or rather locative case. Compare Preneste, Nepete, etc. [Seeley regards η as a dative after imperitans, since, if it were an ablative, we ought to have in opulent.]. Cære was an ancient and powerful city of Southern Etruria, a few miles from the coast of the Tyrrhenian Sea, and about 27 miles distant from Rome. The Greeks called it Agylla, which was its Pelasgian name, the place being of Pelasgian origin. It received the appellation of Cære (probably Cisra) from the Tyrrenhians when they conquered it. The modern village of Cervetri lies just without the line of the ancient walls.—Imperitans. This frequentative form is often employed to indicate long-continued sway.—Jam inde ab initio. "From the very first." Jam inde generally means "ever since," as Jam inde ab Aristotele. "Ever since the time of Aristotle."—Nimio plus. "More by far."—Socia. Taken proleptically, the alliance being the result of the union.

17–24. Sub eodem jure. "Under the same rule."—Latinos utramque gentem appellavit. This, of course, is erroneous. The Latini were not so called either in the way here mentioned, nor from a monarch of the name of Latinus. The connection which has been generally recognized between Latinus and Lavinium, as also between Latinus and Lavinius, seems to point to the existence of an old form, Latvius. (Donaldson, Varronianus, p. 6.) In like manner, Latium is not derived from lateo, but means the land of the Latini.—His animis populorum. "Upon this state of feeling on the part of the two communities."—Ut jam non terras solum, etc. The Etrurians had at an early period extended their dominion over the greater part of Italy, from the Alps and the plains of Lombardy, on the one hand, to Vesuvius and the Gulf of Surrentum on the other. Contemporary with this great extension of the Etruscan power by land was the period of their maritime and naval supremacy. The Tyrrenhians, as the Greeks called them, were also a bold and hardy race of navigators; they are repeatedly mentioned as fitting out great fleets for naval warfare; and they exercised an almost undisputed supremacy over the sea which derived from them the name of the Tyrrenhian.—Fretum Siculum. Now the Strait of Messina.

26–29. Secundum inde praedium Latinis. "Thereupon (ensued) a successful battle for the Latins." Crevier maintains that secundum here means "the second," and that ultimum is opposed to it. But the truth is, this was really the first battle for the Trojans and Aborigines, now incorporated, according to Livy, under the common name of Latini.—Situs est. "He lies interred." The idea which sito carries with it, when thus employed, is that of repose or rest. Dionysius says that the body of Æneas was not found after the battle, and it was believed that it had been carried up to heaven, or that he had perished in the river Numicius. (Dion. Hal., i., 64.) A Heroom therefore (ἡρῶον), according to the same authority, was erected to his memory.

Quaecunque eum dicis, etc. "By whatever appellation it is right and pious for him to be called." Æneas, being now deified, could not be called by his human name; while in speaking of his being buried, it would be improper to name him by his divine title. The parenthesis here refers to the doubt existing in the mind of the historian. The popular name is given immediately after.—Super Numiciun flumen. “On the bank of the river Numicius.” The Numicius, or Numicus, now Rio Torto, was a small river of Latium, between Lavinium and Ardea.

Jovem indigetem appellant. “They call him Jupiter Indiges.”

The term indiges (plur. indiges) was properly applied to deified heroes, who thus became what may be termed “native deities,” and protectors and guardians of the land. The indiges deis were analogous therefore to the daimones ἵππωριοι of the Greeks. Hartung connects them in some degree with the penates (Rel. der Römer., i., 81–93). The expression Jupiter Indiges, therefore, would be somewhat analogous to “Father and native god.” Dionysius (l. c.) calls Æneas a Σιώς χθόνος.

CHAPTER III.

2–5. Tamen. “Nevertheless.” Tamen often thus refers to an etsi omitted in a previous member of the sentence.—Ad puberem etatem.

“Until full age.”—Tantisper. “For so long a time,” i. e., during the period of his minority.—Indoles. “Ability.”—Stetit. “Stood firm,” i. e., was preserved to him.

6–10. Haud ambigam. “I will not enter into any dissension.”

Many editions give haud nihil ambigam, assigning to ambigo here the meaning of dubito, and translating, “I will not assert as a thing beyond doubt,” or “I have some doubts.” But the manuscripts all omit nihil, and with very good reason, since Livy employs ambigo here, not in the sense of “to doubt,” but in that of “to discuss” or “to dispute.”—Hicine fuerit Ascanius, etc. From this it would seem that some traditions distinguished between an earlier and a later Ascanius, the one a son of Creusa, and the other of Lavinia.—Obesseque inde paterna fugae. Homer knows nothing of Ascanius. Later poets make him either to have fled with his father, or else to have founded a new kingdom in Asia Minor.—Quem Iulun eundem. “Whom, at the same time Iulus,” i. e., whom, called also Iulus. On the force of idem, here consult Zumpt, § 127.

11–16. Ubicumque. He means, whether at Lavinium or in Asia. So quacunque matre, whether of Creusa or Lavinia.—Certe constat.

“It is at least certain.”—Ut tum res erant. “As things then were,” i. e., considering those times. It was a flourishing and populous city, considering the barbarous condition of those places at that time. He does not mean that it was in a more flourishing condition than afterwards.—Albano monte. The Alban Mount, now Monte Cavo, was the highest and central summit of a remarkable group of mountains in Latium, which form one of the most important physical features of that country.—In dorso. “Along a ridge.” This ridge ran out from the foot of Mons Albanus, and extended along the eastern shore of the Lacus Albanus to its north-eastern extremity, nearly opposite the modern village of Marino.—Inter Lavinium, etc. “Between the founding of Lavinium and the leading forth of the colony to Alba Longa nearly thirty years intervened.” A substantive is sometimes used with the perfect participle in such a way that we have to think not so much of the thing itself in a certain state, as of the action performed on the subject considered in itself substantively. (Madvig, § 426.)

19–22. Morte Aeneas. “On the death of Aeneas.” Some words, which do not in themselves denote time, but an event, are used in the ablative without a preposition, in order to intimate the time when a thing takes place. (Madvig, § 276, 2.)—Ausi sint. The sequence of tenses here would strictly require auderent; but ausi sint is purposely employed, from the idea of continuance which it carries with it, to indicate that hostilities were not attempted against the Latins during any portion of the time alluded to. [Kühnast explains this use of the subjunctive perfect as marking that a past occurrence is looked at from the point of view of the present.]

23–27. Albula. It was a tradition generally received among the Romans that the Tiber had been originally called Albula, and that it changed its name in consequence of Tiberinus, one of the fabulous kings of Alba, having been drowned in its waters. Mannert, however, considers Albula the Latin, and Tiberis the Etruscan name of the stream.—Silvius deinde regnat. There can be no doubt, as Niebuhr remarks (vol. i., p. 205), that the series of Alban kings, as given here by Livy, and differently elsewhere by other writers, is a clumsy forgery of a later period; but it may probably be admitted as historical that a Silvian house or gens was the reigning family at Alba.—Coloniae aliquot. According to some eighteen, according to others thirty in number.—Prisci Latini appelletati. “Called ancient Latins.” Appellati is by synizesis for appellatae. Some regard Prisci not as an attributive adjective, but as the name of a people (compare Os-ci, Vols-ci, etc.), connected synecdotically with Latini, like patres conscripti.—Cognomen. Put for nomen, since all these kings belonged to the gens Silvia.

30–40. Celebre ad posteros. “Celebrated down to posterity,” i. e., down to the latest ages.—Per manus. “By immediate succession.” Compare the English expression, “from hand to hand.”—Cognomen colli fecit. A second instance of cognomen for nomen.—Qui stirpis maximus erat. Observe the employment of maximus, although only two are meant.—Rece Silvii. The true form is Rea, not Rhea. Niebuhr remarks that Rhea is a corruption introduced by the editors, apparently from thinking of the goddess Rhea; whereas Rea seems to have signified nothing more than the culprit. He also calls attention to the remark of Perizonius, that when the mother of Romulus is represented as the daughter of Aneas, she is always called Ilia, and that Rea is never prefixed to the latter name (Hist. Rome, vol. i., p. 211).—Cum Vestalem eam legisset. The king, as priest, makes the selection.

CHAPTER IV.

1–6. Debebatur satis. "Was a debt all along due to the fates." Observe the force of the imperfect, as referring to the long train of antecedent events connected with the founding of the city. This founding was due to them; it was a debt that should be paid to them, and therefore an event which no human power could divert.—Secundum deorum opes. "Next to the power of the gods."—Seu ita rata, etc. "Whether she really thought so, or because a god was (in her eyes) a more creditable cause (to allege) for her indiscretion."—Incerte stirpis. "Of her illegitimate offspring." A euphemism. Compare Ulpian: "Qui mater quidem (certa) patre autem incerto nati sunt, spuri uspellenitur."

10–12. Forte quadam divinitus. "By some chance, which heaven seemed actually to direct." Gronovius compares this form of expression with the Greek τις τινι τῷ χρύ. —Effusus lenibus stagnis. "Having overflowed in stagnant pools." Observe that Tiberis effusus, etc., forms in fact the subject and ground to poterat and dabat.—Nec adiri usquam ad justi, etc. "Could neither be approached anywhere, as far as the regular current of the river," i. e., the regular bed of the stream.—Posse quamvis languida, etc. "Could be drowned in water however still."

14, 15. Ficus Ruminalis. "The Ruminal fig-tree." So called, according to Festus (p. 270), because beneath this tree the she-wolf afforded her dug to Romulus and Remus, the dug (mamma) being called in early Latin rumis orurma. (Compare Donaldson, Varron., p. 61.) This wild fig-tree stood on a part of the Palatine hill called Germalus, facing the Capitoline mount, and near the Lupercal. It was still to be seen in Livy's time, as appears from the words nunc est.—Romularem vocatum: ferunt. The annalists related that its earlier name was Romularis, i. e., "the Romulean fig-tree," but this was merely an attempt on their part to explain the meaning of the word.
NOTES.

21-26. Faustulo fuisset nomen, etc. Consult note on Pago Trojano, chap. i.— Larentia. Her full name was Acca Larentia. The appellation Larentia would seem to connect this mythic female with the worship of the Lares.— Vulgato corpore. "From the prostitution of her person." — Lupam. From lupα in this sense comes lupanar. — In stabulis. "At the homestead." By stabula are here meant, not the stalls of the cattle, but the rude abodes of the rustics themselves. Compare Cic., Sest., v., 12: " Pastorum stabula."— Ad pecora. "With the cattle in the field." Venando. Here tamen is omitted. The meaning is that, although they were not neglectful of their duties as shepherds and herdsmen, yet they were especially devoted to hunting.

28-30. Subsistere. "Withstood." Historical infinitive.— Rapta. "The spoil."— Serā ac jocos celebrare. "They carried on their graver pursuits as well as those of a sportive character." Celebrare, when referred to actions, means to do a thing often, and generally in company with many others.

CHAPTER V.

1-3. Lupercal hoc. "The Lupercal of the present day." Observe the force of the pronoun.— Fuisse ludicrum. "Was celebrated." The Lupercal, or Lupercalia, was one of the most ancient Roman festivals, and celebrated every year in honor of Lupercus, the god of fertility. All the ceremonies with which it was held, and all we know of its history, show that it was originally a shepherd festival. It was held every year, on the 15th of February, in the Lupercal, where Romulus and Remus were said to have been nurtured by the she-wolf. The place contained an altar and a grove sacred to the god Lupercus.— Pallanteo. Pallanteum was one of the most ancient towns of Arcadia, in the district Mænalia, and west of Tegea.— Palatium montem appellatum. This etymology is of no value. The names Palati- and Palatinus appear to be connected in some way with Pales, the Roman divinity of flocks and shepherds.

4-7. Ex eo genere Arcadum. "Of that race of Arcadians," i. e., who had inhabited Pallanteum.— Tenuerit loca. "Held these places (as is said)." The subjunctive marks the tradition.— Lycæum Panæ. Not far from Pallanteum lay Mount Lycaeus, on which Pan was born, and where he had a temple. His attributes as the god of forests and of shepherds, as also the affinity between λύκος and lupus, caused him eventually to become identified with the old Italian deity Lupercus. Now Lupercus was not only the protector of the flocks against wolves, but also the promoter of fertility among sheep, whence he was called Irisus, or Ἐφιάλτης. The same appellation was given therefore to the Lycean Pan.

10–15. Notum. Known to their neighbors. Compare chap. ix., line 20.—Ob iram praedae amissae. "Through anger on account of the booty lost by them."—Ultro accusantes. "Voluntarily turning accusers." The robbers, who themselves deserved to be punished, came forward with bold effrontery to accuse their prisoner.—Crimini maxime dabant. Supply iis.—Numeror is agros. Numitor, though deprived of the crown, was allowed to retain possession of his private estates.—Inde. "That from these lands."—Sic. "Upon this charge."

17–20. Jam inde ab initio. "All along from the very first."—Apud se. "With him," i.e., in his family. The pronoun se is employed here, since the logical subject lies in the term Faustulo.—Eos sustulisset. "He had taken them up," i.e., for the purpose of rearing them. The verb tollo is used specially in the case of a father, who raises from the ground a child whom he wishes to rear.—Immaturam. "Not yet ripe."

22–26. Numerator tetigerat animum. "Had struck the mind of Numitor." Literally, "had struck his mind unto Numitor."—Comparando et etatem, etc. "On comparing both their age (with what he knew it would have been) and their spirit itself any thing but servile (with what he would have expected from his grandchildren if alive)."—Eodem pervenit. "He came to the same conclusion (as before)," i.e., to the same conclusion which he had formed from a comparison of their age and spirit.—Ut haud procul esset, etc. [Like mihiine ab-fuit quin, the expression is impersonal.] "So that he was not far from (openly) acknowledging Remus."

29, 30. Sed aliis alio itinere, etc. "But the shepherds being ordered to come to the palace at a fixed time, some by one route, others by another."—Ad regem impetum facit. "He makes an attack upon the king." Ad here properly denotes that he makes his way to the king through the midst of those who happened to be around him or in his palace at the time, and then attacks him.

CHAPTER VI.

2–12. Dictitans. "Exclaiming again and again." Observe the force of the frequentative.—Avocasset. He called them away into the citadel, lest they might proceed to the palace and lend aid to the king.—\textit{Ut cogniti essent. }"How they had become known."—\textit{Con-tione.} More correct than \textit{concione.} Observe that \textit{contio} is by contraction for \textit{conventio}.—\textit{Agnis ingressi. }"Having entered with a band of followers."—\textit{Ratum effecit. }"Ratified."

14–17. \textit{Albana re. }"The Alban state."—\textit{Et supererat multitudo}, etc.
"And in fact there was an overflowing number of Albans," etc.
Livy follows the common account. But the truth is, Rome was not a colony of Alba in the strict sense of the term; nor do we find any evidence of those mutual relations which might be expected to subsist between a parent city and its offspring. In fact, no mention of Alba occurs in Roman history from the foundation of Rome until the reign of Tullus Hostilius.—\textit{Qui facerent.} The subjunctive here assigns the reason.

19–25. \textit{Intervenit. }"Intruded itself."—\textit{Avsum malum. }"An evil from which their grandfather had been a sufferer."—\textit{Elatis verecundia.} "Respect for age," i. e., the respect due to seniority.—\textit{Quorum tutela. }"Under whose protection." The genitive here is more elegant than the ordinary in \textit{tutela}.—\textit{Legerent.} For \textit{eligerent}.—\textit{Imperrio regeret. }"Should rule it with sovereign sway."—\textit{Ad inaugurandum templo capiunt. }"They choose as places of observation for taking the omens." \textit{Templum}, in its primary notion, signifies a portion which is cut off; and then it refers to an imaginary space in the heavens, marked off by an augur with his wand, in order to circumscribe a certain boundary within which he took his observations on the flight of birds.—\textit{Palatium.} A substantive; its corresponding adjective is \textit{Palatinus}. So \textit{Aventinum} is here also a substantive.

\textbf{CHAPTER VII.}

1–5. \textit{Prior Remo.} The dative often occurs thus with \textit{venio} to indicate one who receives any thing.—\textit{Duplex numerus.} The number 12 was held peculiarly sacred among the Etrurians. It here points to the duration of Rome during 12 \textit{secula}.—\textit{Sua multitudo. }"His own numerous party."—\textit{Tempore illi præcepto,} etc. "The partisans of the former claimed the sovereignty (for Remus) on the ground of priority of time; but those of the latter on the ground of the (greater) number of birds."

6–14. \textit{Cum altercatione,} etc. "Having met in altercation, from the contest of angry feelings they are turned to bloodshed."—\textit{Vulgator.
"More commonly received." This is the popular legend.—\textit{Sic dedeinde.} Supply eveniat ei.—\textit{Conditoris nomine appellata.} Livy follows the common but erroneous account. The name Romulus comes from Roma, not the latter from it. As for the appellation Roma itself, it would appear to be of Pelasgic, that is, Grecian origin (ὅμηρος = "strength"), and to contain an allusion to the martial prowess of the founders. Rome was founded, according to Cato's calculation, on the 11th day before the Calends of May (i.e., the 21st of April), the festival of Pales, in the first year of the 7th Olympiad, B.C. 751; but according to Varro in the third year of the 6th Olympiad, or B.C. 753. Varro's date is the one generally adopted.

15, 16. Palatium. The Palatine mount was the central one of the group, and the first built upon. Its summit formed an irregular quadrangle, and hence the name of Roma Quadrata sometimes given to the early city.—Muniit. There seems to be no good authority for Niebuhr's assumption (vol. i., p. 287), that the original city of Romulus was defended merely by the sides of the hill being escarpéd.—Diis aliis. Observe that aliis has here the force of ceteris.—Græco. Supply rite. With uncovered head (Heyne, ad Virg. Æn., 8, 268).—Hercules. Hercules probably here takes the place of Deus Fidius, i.e., of Jupiter himself, or else of the Sabine Semo Sancus.

17–20. Geryone. Geryon, son of Chrysaor and Calirrhoe, a fabulous king of Hesperia, described as a being with three heads, and possessing magnificent oxen in the island of Erytheia. He performs a prominent part in the myth of Hercules.—Nando. The ablative of the gerund often indicates the manner or way.—Pabulo lato. "Luxuriant pasturage."

23–26. Nomine Cacus. The allegorical nature of the fable here related is sufficiently indicated by the names of the parties. Evander, who receives Hercules on his return from the overthrow of Geryon, is the Good Man (ἐβαρέρος = ἄνδρος and ἄνηρ), while Cacus, his opponent, is the Bad Man (Κακός). Some antagonism of early religious sects probably lies at the basis of the narrative.—Avertere. "To drive off." More freely, "to purloin."—Si agendo armentum, etc. "If he had in (the ordinary mode of) driving forced the herd into his cave."—Deductura erant. "Were likely to lead." The imperfect indicative employed in a hypothetical sentence for the pluperfect subjunctive, deduxissent (Zumpt, § 519).—Aversos boves, eximium quenque, etc. "He dragged by the tails into the cave the oxen with their fronts turned away (in a direction opposite to it), each one (namely, of the number) conspicuous for beauty," i.e., he dragged the most beautiful of them, one by one, into the cave. Aversos here is employed in a different sense from avertere in a former clause.

28–35. Excitus. "Aroused." Excitus would have been "called out" (Zumpt, § 180).—Ex loco infesto, etc. "He begins to drive onward his herd from the unfriendly spot." Infestus is from infero, like gestus from gero.—Ad desiderium relictarum. "From missing those left behind." More literally, "from a longing after," etc.—Convertit Herculem. "Caused Hercules to stop and turn round."

36–41. Fidem. "The friendly aid." Compare Ter., Adelph., iii., 4, 48: "Illuc fide mune vosstram implorat."—Morte occubuit. The accusative is much more frequent with this verb (Zumpt, § 387).—Auctoritate magis quam imperio. "By weight of character more than by any actual exercise of power."—Venerabilis vir miraculo litterarum. "A man held in veneration for the wonderful introduction of written characters." Evander is said to have brought into Italy the art of writing; but according to another legend this was taught him by Hercules (Plut., Quest. Rom. 56).—Carmentae. Carmenta was originally called Nicostrate, and received the name Carmenta from her prophetic powers. She was the mother of Evander by Mercury. She had a temple at the foot of the Capitoline hill, and altars near the Porta Carmentalis.

43–46. Trepidantium. "Moving in confusion and alarm."—Facinus facinorisque. The repetition of a substantive under a different form is of rare occurrence in Cicero, who prefers using the pronoun; but it is frequently met with in the poets and in Livy.—Habitum formamque, etc. "The person and mien of the hero, much larger and more majestic than the human." Aliquantum in cases like the present is more commonly employed in the ablative.—Rogitatis. "Eagerly asks." Force of the frequentative.

49–52. Cecinit. "Foretold." The responses of oracles were usually in verse.—Opulentissima. "The most powerful."—Maximam vocet, etc. "Shall call Maxima, and shall honor with thy own rites." The allusion is to the ara Maxima of Hercules, with which was connected an ancient and celebrated temple or chapel in the Forum Boarium.—Dextra Hercules data. Observe that the agent is here thrown in between the substantive and the passive participle, an arrangement very frequent in Livy. The object of it is to remove ambiguity, and to remedy the defect in the Latin language arising from the want of a past participle of active signification (Hunter, ad loc.).—Impeteturumque sita. He means the fates which Carmenta said ordained that he should be worshipped.—Ara condita ac dicata. It does not appear very clearly from the context whether the altar was to be built and consecrated by Evander, or by Hercules himself. The latter is the more probable opinion (compare Liv., ix., 34; Virg., Æn., viii., 270; Ov., Fast., i., 581), though some authorities ascribe the building of the altar to Evander.
52–58. Ibi. Equivalent here to in ea, scil. ara.—Ad ministerium, etc. "To the services and the banquet," i.e., the services at the altar, and the sacrificial banquet that followed.—Hisque exta appone- rentur, etc. The exta were the more important inward parts of the victim, such as the heart, liver, lungs, etc. These, after having been taken out, were first examined by the haruspices for the purposes of divination. Then those portions of them that were intended for the gods were strewed with barley-meal and incense, and moistened with wine, and were burned upon the altar. The remainder of the exta was eaten by the priests and their attendants; and the whole affair concluded with a general feast on the rest of the victim.—Pinarium genus. "The Pinarian family." Genus in the sense of gens.

60, 61. Eduiti. "Carefully instructed."—Donec tradito, etc. The Potitii and Pinarii continued to discharge the duties of their priesthood until the censorship of Appius Claudius (B.C. 312), who it is said induced the Potitii, by the offer of 50,000 pounds of copper, to instruct public slaves in the performance of the sacred rites; whereat the god was so angry that the whole gens, containing twelve families and thirty grown-up men, perished within a year, or, according to other accounts, within thirty days, and Appius himself became blind. (Liv., ix., 39; Festus, p. 237, ed. Müller; Val. Max., i., 1, 17.) Niebuhr remarks that if there be any truth in the tale respecting the destruction of the Potitiae gens, they may have perished in the great plague which raged fifteen or twenty years later, since such legends are not scrupulous with respect to chronology. The same writer further observes that it is probable that the worship of Hercules, as attended to by the Potitii and Pinarii, was a form of religion peculiar to these gentes, and had nothing to do with the religion of the Roman state; and that, as Appius Claudius wished to make these sacra privata part of the sacra publica, he induced the Potitii to instruct public slaves in the rites, since no foreign god could have a flamen (Hist. of Rome, vol. iii., p. 309).

63, 64. Peregrina. So called because not derived from Alba.—Sua fata. "His own destinies." His own deification, like that of Hercules, was decreed by the fates.

CHAPTER VIII.

1–7. Rite perpetratris. "Having been duly performed." Romulus united in himself the functions of king and priest.—Legibus. "Fixed rules," i.e., for the regulation of both public and private life.—Jura. "A code of laws."—Ita. "In this way."—Venerabilia. "An object of reverence."—Cetero habitu. "In the rest of his general exterior."—Lictoribus. The lictor was a public officer attached to the service of certain Roman magistrates, whom he preceded whenever they went abroad. He carried the fasces with the axe in the centre on his left shoulder, and a rod (virga) in his right hand.

9–13. Me hand pœnitet, etc. "I am quite willing to be of the opinion of those." The verb pœnitet is not unfrequently employed to express merely a feeling of dissatisfaction or unwillingness.—Apparitores hoc genus. "Attendants of this class." Hoc genus is the accusative of nearer definition. The term apparitores was the general name for the public servants of the magistrates at Rome, including lictors, accensi, viatores, etc. The common text has et apparitores et hoc genus, "both the attendants in general, and this particular class of them." This reading, however, cannot be correct, since we have no proof that the apparitores all came from Etruria, and since the reference here is a special one to number. It is far better therefore to remove the et before hoc, and to place it before numerum. [As to the derivation of all these things from Etruria, modern critics see reason to reduce the Etruscan influence at Rome to a minimum: it can be shown that many institutions which the Romans regarded as derived from Etruria were common to all the Italians (Seeley).]

Sella curulis. The sella curulis, or "curule seat," was a species of stool with bent legs, made to open and shut like our camp-stools, for the convenience of being transported with its owner wherever he went. Originally it was used at Rome exclusively by the kings; but it was subsequently allowed as a privilege to the consuls, prœtori, curule ædiles, etc.—Toga praetexta. A toga ornamented with a broad border of purple, worn by the chief magistrates.—Et ita habuisse Etruscos. "And that the Etruscans had this number." Literally, "So had them."—Ex duodecim populis, etc. Etruria was a confederacy of twelve cities, each of which was a sovereign and independent state.

15–21. Alia atque alia appetendo loca. "By taking in various places one after the other with its fortifications." More literally, "Now one, now another."—Munitrent. They included a wider space within the line of walls than the population of the city seemed at the time to require, but they did this with a view to future accessions of inhabitants.—Vana. "Useless."—Vetere consilio, etc. "In accordance with the old policy of the founders of cities." Participle again for a noun.—Locum qui nunc septus, etc. "He opens as an asylum the place which is now enclosed to those who go down (from the Capitol) between the two groves." That is, the enclosed space compels those who come down from the Capitol to make a circuit around it. Becker (Haud., p. 387) assumes that the Asylum occupied the whole depression between the two summits of the Capitoline hill, and that this space, which by modern topographers has been called Intermontium, was named "inter duos lucos." But his authorities do not bear him out. Consult the remarks of Dyer in Smith's Dict. Geogr., vol. ii., p. 770 seqq.

22–24. Eo, ex finitimis, etc. As the Asylum was only a small enclosure, the meaning of the legend must be that those who fled to this place underwent expiation in a temple or chapel within its precincts, and were then assigned habitations in other quarters of the city.—Sine discrimine, etc. Zumpt thinks that the whole story of the Asylum probably arose from the fact that Rome was looked upon as the home of all unfortunates, since there the peculiar regulation was in force that slaves, when set free by Roman masters, became Roman citizens by that very act.—Primum roboris. "The first accession of strength."

25. Cum jam virium, etc. "When now he was well satisfied with his strength, he thereupon prepares to add counsel to strength." This is certainly better than to translate, as some do, "he prepares a council for the regulation of that strength." As regards the force of paniteret here, consult note on line 9 of the present chapter.

26–28. Centum creat senatores, etc. The explanations which Livy gives for this number of the early Senate are both incorrect. The number of senators in the ancient republics always bore a distinct relation to the number of tribes of which the nation was composed. Hence in the earliest times, when Rome consisted of only one tribe, its Senate consisted of one hundred members; and when the Sabine tribe or the Tities became united with the Latin tribe, or the Ramnes, the number of senators was increased to two hundred. This number was again augmented by one hundred when the third tribe, or the Luceres, became incorporated with the Roman state.

Patricii. The word patricius is a derivative from pater, and patricii therefore properly signifies those who belonged to the patres. It is a mistake in Livy and other ancient writers to suppose that the patricii were only the offspring of the patres in the sense of senators, and necessarily connected with them by blood. Patres and Patricii were originally convertible terms (Niebuhr, Hist. of Rome, vol. i., p. 386). In considering who the Patricians were, we have to distinguish three periods in the history of Rome. The first extends from the foundation of the city down to the establishment of the Plebeians as a second order. During this period the patricians comprised the whole body of Romans who enjoyed the full franchise; they were the populus Romanus, and there were no other real citizens besides them. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. ii., p. 224, 225, note 507.) The other parts of the Roman population, namely, clients and slaves, did not belong to the populus Romanus, or sovereign people, and were notburghers or patricians.
The senators were a select body of the populii or patricians, which acted as their representative. The second period above alluded to extends from the close of the first down to the time of Constantine. During this period the patricians were a real aristocracy of birth, and as such formed a distinct class of Roman citizens, opposed to the plebeians, and afterwards to the new plebeian aristocracy of the nobles. The third period extends from Constantine down to the Middle Ages, during which the patricians were no longer an aristocracy of birth, but were persons who merely enjoyed a title, first granted by the emperors, and afterwards by the popes also.

CHAPTER IX.

1–6. Jam. "Already." The particle indicates the rapid growth of the city.—Sed penuria mulierum, etc. "But through the scarcity of women, its greatness was likely to last during one age of man merely," i. e., during the then existing generation merely.—Spes prolis, etc. This, of course, must be understood in a qualified sense, as there must have been some women in the city. Indeed, since among the communities to whom delegates were sent no mention is made of the Latins, the Romans must have had already the connubium, or right of intermarriage with these last.—Circa. "Around among."

9–15. Satis scire. Supply se.—Praeinde ne gravarentur, etc. "Wherefore they should feel no reluctance, as men with their fellowmen, to mingle blood and race."—Molem. "Source of trouble." Hence molestus and molestia.—Ac. "And so."—Id enim demum compar connubium fere. "For that such an alliance only would be a suitable one," i. e., for vagabond slaves and outlaws.

20, 21. Consualia. So called, according to Festus, Ovid, and others, in honor of Consus, the god of secret deliberations, but according to Livy, in the present passage, celebrated in honor of Neptunus Equestris. Plutarch, however, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, and the Pseudo-Asconius say that Neptunus Equestris and Consus were only different names for the same deity. These games took place every year on the 21st of August, and consisted of horse and chariot races.—Quantoque apparatu, etc. "And they join in preparing their celebration with as much pomp as they were then acquainted with, or were able to employ."

23–25. Mortales. "Persons." This term includes persons of all ranks, age, and sex.—Ceninenses. Cænina was a very ancient city of Latium, said to have been originally inhabited by the Siculi, and to have been wrested from them by the Aborigines. Nibby supposes it to have occupied a hill ten miles from Rome, on the banks of the Magugliano.—Crustumini. The inhabitants of Crustumum, an ancient city of Latium, on the borders of the Sabine country, between Fidenæ and Eretum. Its precise site has not been determined.—Antennates. Antennae, a very ancient city of Latium, only three miles from Rome, just below the confluence of the Anio with the Tiber.—Jam. "Moreover."

29–37. Deditaque eo, etc. "And their minds together with their eyes were intent upon it." Literally, "were given up to it." Observe the force of eo, as referring back to spectaculum. The adverb takes the place of the pronoun ei.—Discurrit. "Run in different directions."—A globo Thalassii cujusdam. "By a body of men belonging to one Thalassius."—Inde nuptiam hanc vocem factam. "That from this circumstance the term became a nuptial one," i.e., was ever after used in the ceremony of marriage. Many ancient writers mention a very popular song, called Talassius or Talassio, which was sung at weddings, but whether it was sung during the nuptial repast at the abode of the bridegroom, or during the procession, when the bride was being conducted to his house, is not quite clear, though we may infer from the story respecting the origin of the song as here given that it was sung while the procession was advancing towards the husband’s residence. As regards the term Talassius itself, we may reject without any hesitation the legend in the text, and connect it with the Æolic rālūc, "a marriageable maiden."

41–44. Per fas ac fidem decepti. "Having been deceived by the pretense of religion and good faith." More literally, "through religion and good faith."—Venissent. The subjunctive as referring to the language of the parents themselves, "they had come as they said or complained." (Zumpt, § 545.)—Spes de se melior. "Any better expectations concerning themselves." Melior refers back to decepti. They expected a treatment corresponding to the act of violence and faithlessness which had just been committed. —Patrum superbia. "Through the pride of their (the maidens’) fathers."—Illas tamen in matrimonio, etc. "That they, however, would be in the enjoyment of the (legal) married state, in the participation of all (their husbands’) fortunes, as well as of citizenship." With matrimonio we must here mentally supply justo, in accordance with the technical language of the Roman law. "The term societatis again contains a reference to the legal form of expression, Roman cives, as applied to Roman females of full rights.

46–52. Mollirent modo iras, etc. "They should only assuage their angry feelings, and surrender their affections to those," etc.—Dedisset. Consult note on venissent, line 42.—Eoque usuras. "And that they will find them on this account."—Swam-vicem. "In his own relation," i. e., as a husband. The ablative is also used in this same sense.—Explicat desiderium. "He will appease their regret for," i. e., will leave no room to regret.—Cupiditate atque amore. "On the plea of passion and love."

According to Niebuhr (H. R., vol. i., p. 289 seqq.), on what was called in early times the Agonian hill, the Sabines seem to have established a town, of which the Capitoline may be considered to have been the citadel, separated from the town Roma on the Palatine by a swamp. The name of this town he thinks was Quirium, and of its inhabitants Quirites; and the later name of the Quirinal was derived from that of the town. Roma and Quirium were then two distinct towns. The poetic story of the rape of the Sabines, and the consequent war, may represent that at one time there was no right of intermarriage between the two cities, and that the one which had been before in subjection (Niebuhr conjectures Roma to have been the subject city) raised itself, by arms, to an equality of civil rights, and even to a preponderance.

CHAPTER X.

2-13. Tum maxima. "Then especially," i. e., then more than ever.—Concitabant. "Strove to arouse." Observe the force of the imperfect.—Nec domi tantum, etc. "Nor did they confine the expression of their indignant feelings to their own homes merely."—Legationes eo conveniabant. "Embassies kept flocking thither." Tatius was then reigning at Cures, according to the legend.—Ad quos ejus injuriae pars pertinebat. "To whom an especial share of that wrong appertained." Præcipua, or some such word must be understood, or perhaps has been dropped from the text.—Se movent. "Bestir themselves."—Nomen Cæninum. "The people of Cænina." The term nomen here is less correctly employed to denote the inhabitants of a single city, than in the case of the Latins, where it serves (nomen Latinum) as an appellation for a whole confederacy.

17-23. Regem. Acron, whose Greek name is a proof, as Niebuhr remarks, how late Pelasgian recollections were retained in the legends.—Spoiliat. First instance of the spolia opima.—Cum factis vir magnificus, etc. "A man both illustrious for his exploits, and also in no less degree fond of showing off those exploits."—Fabricato ad id, etc. "On a frame skillfully constructed for that purpose."—Pastoribus sacr. "Sacred unto the shepherds," i. e., held sacred by them.—Designavit. "He marked out."

24-29. Feretri. Various etymologies are given for this name.
Livy would appear to derive it from fero. Others deduce it from feretrum, the frame on which the spoils were carried. And others again from ferire, "to strike." This last is the worst.—Quas modo animo metatus sum. "Which I have just marked out in thought," i.e., in intention.—Sedem. "A repository."—Opinis spolii. Those which the commander-in-chief of a Roman army stripped in a field of battle from the leader of the foe.—Quod primum omnium, etc. The temple of Jupiter Feretrius stood on the north-east summit of the Capitoline mount. In the time of Dionysius the foundations alone remained, and he gives the dimensions at 10 feet by 5. It appears, however, to have been subsequently restored by Augustus.

30–33. Vcem. "The declaration."—Nec multitudine compotum, etc. "And that the glory of his offering should not be made common by the great number of those that shared it."—Bina postea, etc. Observe the employment of the distributive with spolia opima on account of the peculiarly plural force of the expression. (Zumpt, § 119.) The two instances of offering up the spolia opima, besides that of Romulus, were in the case of Aulus Cornelius Cossus, who slew and despoiled Lars Tolumnius, king of the Veientes; and of M. Claudius Marcellus, who bore away the same spoils from Viridomarus, king of the Gæsatæ. These were the only three instances of the kind that occurred in Roman history. The honors of the spolia opima were voted, it is true, to Julius Cæsar, during his fifth consulship (B.C. 44, the year of his death), but it was not even pretended that he had any legitimate claim to this distinction.

CHAPTER XI.

2–7. Per occasionem ac solitudinem. "Through the opportunity thus afforded, as well as the unguarded state (of the frontiers)," i.e., the opportunity afforded by; e.c.—Romana legio. The Roman army appears first as a legion, and according to Dionysius (ii., 16) of 3000 men.—Raptum. "By hurried marches."—Ovantem. "Exulting." The term here has no reference to what was subsequently called the ovatio, or minor triumph.—Hersilia conjux. Hersilia was the only married woman carried off by the Romans in the rape of the Sabine females. Her name is probably a later and a Greek addition to the original story of Romulus. As Romulus after death became Quirinus, so those writers who made Hersilia his wife raised her to the dignity of a goddess, Hora or Horta, in either case, probably, with reference to boundaries of time (ὥρα) or space (ὥρας).

13–15. Utroque coloniae missæ. The colony sent to Crustumerium appears to have been purely fabulous. Compare note on chap.
yielded to the Romans as far back as the annals or traditions of the city extend, and the practice was continued during the republic and under the empire. Colonies were intended to keep in check a conquered people, and also to repress hostile incursions.—Nomina darent. Roman citizens who were willing to go out as members of a colony gave in their names at Rome.

18–26. Ab Sabinis. "On the part of the Sabines."—Bellum. Livy, following the old tradition, makes mention merely of the fighting which took place at Rome. Other writers, however, make it to have been a war of many years. (Dion. Hal., ii., 52.)—Romanae arci. The whole of the Capitoline hill appears to be here meant in the sense of the Roman citadel. In a special sense, however, the term arx is applied to one of the summits of the Capitoline.—Prodendae exempli. "Of establishing a precedent."—Ne quid usquam, etc. "That nothing should ever be capable of being relied on by a traitor." Fidum is here to be taken in the sense of certum or tutum. Some, much less correctly, translate, "that no faith should ever be kept with a traitor."

26–31. Additur fabula, etc. "It is added to the legend." Some propose to read fabula, but this is quite unnecessary.—Aureas armillas, etc. Niebuhr remarks that the traces of popular poetry are here so evident that no one who has eyes can mistake them. The Roman poet conceived that the poor Sabines were covered with gold! [Another account, by a certain poet Simylius, makes Tarpeia surrender the citadel to the Gauls, who always delighted in gold ornaments.]—Gemmatorumque magna specie anulas. "And gem-set rings of great beauty."—Pepigisse quod. "Had bargained for what."—Eo. "That hence."—De recto. "Expressly." A more correct form of expression than directo, which appears in most editions.

CHAPTER XII.

1–10. Tamen. "Be that as it may." Tamen here expresses whatever opinion may be formed as to the truth of the tradition respecting Tarpeia, and the motives by which she was actuated.—Quod inter Palatinum, etc. This was afterwards the Roman Forum as far as the Velabrum.—In adversum subire. "Charged up the hill (to meet them)." With adversum supply olivum or collum. The Sabines did not commence their descent sooner than the Romans commenced their ascent.—Hostius. A better manuscript reading than Hostus. He was the grandfather of Tullus Hostilius, and had come to Rome from Medullia. Hence his prænomen formed from the Latin hostis, in the sense of peregrinus, "a foreigner." According to other authorities, however, Romulus was aided on this occasion by Cæles Vibenna, an Etrurian Lucumo, after whom the Cælian hill was subsequently called. (Dionys., ii, 36; Varro, L. L., v., 46, ed. Müller; Festus, s. v. Cælius Mons.)—Ad prima signa. "In the front ranks."

12-19. Veterem portam Palatii. This corresponded to what was afterwards the Porta Mugionis, on the northern side of the Palatine hill. — Actus. "Borne along." — Scelere emptam. "Purchased by treachery," i. e., from Tarpeia. — Superata media valle. "The intervening valley having been crossed." — Deme terrem Romani, etc. The chiasmus and the alliteration here serve to impart solemnity to the address. — Tibi Stator Jovi. "To thee as Jupiter the Stayer." Stator is derived from statum, the supine of sisto, "to stay or check."

— Tempulm voveo. The temple of Jupiter Stator was near the Porta Mugionis, in the vicinity of the Summa Sacra Via, and the palace of Tarquinius Priscus. It was not built by Romulus, but the intended site was consecrated by him. — Tua presenti ope. "By thy visible aid."

21-32. Hinc. "From this spot." — Ad primores. "To the front ranks." — Princps. In the sense of primus. — Toto foro. That is, from the foot of the Capitoline hill as far as the Porta Mugionis. — Longe alius . . . alius. "That it is a far different thing . . . a different thing." The second alius takes the place of the adverb quam. — Eo pellii facilius fuit. Because the horse, if once put to flight, would hurry him off, even against his will. — Alia Romana acies. Observe that alia is here for reliqua.

34-38. Equo trepidante. "His horse taking fright." Compare note on chap. vii., line 43. — Averterat Sabinos. "Had turned away (from the fight) the attention of the Sabines," i. e., had attracted their attention. — Adventibus ac vocantibus. "Making signs and calling to him," i. e., encouraging him by signs and cheers. — Favere multorum. "From the interest shown for him by many." — Res Romana. "The Roman side."

CHAPTER XIII.

1-8. Quarum ex injuria. "From the wrong done to whom." Objective genitive. — Mutilbrī pavore. "Their feminine timidity." — Ex transverso impetui facto. "Having made a rush across," i. e., from the side and between the two armies. Compare the Greek ἐκ πλαγίου. — Dirimere. "Strove to separate." Historical infinitive for dirimebant. The second dirimere means, "strove to assuage." — *Hinc . . ."
NOTES.

_hinc._ For the more usual _hinc...inde_, in order to show the close proximity of the contending parties.—_Parricidio._ The term _parricidium_ means properly the murder of a parent. It came in the course of time, however, to denote the murder of near relations, as in the present case. Thus, the _Lex Pompeia de Parricidiis_ extended the crime to the killing (_dolo malo)_ of a brother, sister, uncle, aunt, and many other relations enumerated by Marcianus (Dig. 49, tit. 9, s. 1).—_Partus suos, nepotum illi_, etc. The progeny of the combatants would consist of grandchildren in the case of the Sabines; of children in the case of the Romans. Observe that _progeniem nepotum_ is used here naturally for _nepotes_, as _progeniem_ is the general term to express the relationship both Sabines and Romans bore to _partus suos_, which were _nepotes_ to the Sabines "illi," and _liberì_ to the Romans, "hi."

9–20. _Si adfinitatis inter vos, etc._ When strong emotion is to be expressed, the _oratio obliqua_ sometimes changes suddenly to the _recta_ without the addition of _inquit._—_Vidue aut orbe._ Widows, if our Roman husbands are slain; orphans, if our Sabine fathers fall.—_Ad biedus faciendum_, etc. The kings, it will be observed, come forward on either side to make the treaty, without consulting either Senate or people.—_Geminata urbe._ That is, according to Niebuhr’s view, the Sabine town on the Quirinal, being added to or incorporated with the city of Romulus on the Palatine.—_Quirites a Curibus appellati._ Niebuhr, as we have before seen (notes on chap. ix., sub fin.), derives the term _Quirites_ from _Quirium_, the name of the Sabine city on what was afterwards the Quirinal hill. He regards the derivation of _Quirites_ from _Cures_, which Livy here gives, as a very awkward one; and that from _quiris_, "a spear," as clearly erroneous. Henceforward the united name of the two communities was not, as we might be led to infer from the language of Livy, _Quirites_ merely, but _Populus Romanus Quirites_, with _et_ to be supplied; or _Populus Romanus Quiritium_; or _Populus Romanus Quiritesque._—_In vado._ "In shoal water," i. e., in a fordable part of the morass.—_Curtium lacum._ This lake or morass was drained in the time of Tarquinius Priscus, when the cloaca were constructed.

21–23. _Repente._ "Following suddenly."—_Curias._ Livy says nothing of the division into tribes. These were three in number, the _Raines, Titties_, and _Luceres_. The _Raines_ were the Latins, or immediate subjects of Romulus, or, in other words, the Romans; the _Titties_ were the Sabine followers of Tarius; and the _Luceres_ were probably Etrurians. Each of these tribes was subdivided into ten curiae, making the whole number thirty. The division into _curiae_ was of great political importance in the earliest times of Rome, for the _curia_ alone contained those that were real citizens, and their assembly alone was the legitimate representative of the whole people, from whom all other powers emanated.

27. Centuriae tres equitum. These centuries were named after the three original tribes of whom Livy, as already remarked, says nothing. The appellations of Rammenses and Titenses are adjectives derived respectively from Rammes and Tities. The third century of equites ought in strictness to have been called Lucerenses, this being the adjective formed from Luceres. The derivation of this last-mentioned term is quite uncertain. We may be very sure, however, that it does not come, as some suppose, from locus, "the grove or asylum." The root, probably, is to be found in the Etrurian word Lucumo, and they were, in all likelihood, the followers of the Lucumo Celes Vibenna who, according to one account, joined Romulus with a powerful force against the Sabines.

CHAPTER XIV.

1–8. Post aliquot annos. The old legend said nothing of Tatius after his union with Romulus, except mentioning the manner of his death. Compare Cic., De Repub., ii., 7; Dionys., ii., 86.—Jure gentium agerent. "Commenced proceedings according to the law of nations." Agrae is a legal term, and means to set about obtaining redress for an injury by an appeal to the law.—Plus poterant. "Had more weight." —Lavinii. The Roman rites appear to have passed over to the Sabines also, since the king of the latter is here represented as offering a sacrifice at Lavinium, which was always, down to a late period of their history, regarded by the Romans as a kind of sacred metropolis. —Ob infidam societatem regni. "On account of the insincere nature of partnership in sovereign power." This is meant as a general remark, and does not contradict what was stated at the close of the last chapter. Every such partnership in authority contains the latent seeds of insincerity and faithlessness.

10–15. Ut tamen expiarentur, etc. The Penates of Lavinium were outraged by the crime, and therefore expiation was made by appropriate offerings and ceremonies, among the number of which last would be ranked a new alliance, the old one having been violated.—Fidenates. Fidenae was an important city of Latium, on the left bank of the Tiber, and on the Via Salaria, five miles from Rome. Hence, on account of this close proximity, the language of the text, "in ipsis prope portis." The site of Fidenae is supposed to correspond to the modern Castel Giubileo.—Occurrat bellum facere. "Anticipate (the Romans) by making war." Occurrere means here "to be beforehand with," "to get the start of," and is equivalent to the Greek ἐπιτίθεσθαι. As regards the war itself mentioned in the text, the account of Livy and of Dionysius is obviously fabulous. Consult Smith's Dict. Geog., vol. i., p. 899.

18–22. Arcebaut. "Was a barrier." Served as a barrier to the Romans against them.—Ex agris in urbem. The country people fled for refuge to the city, their only stronghold.—Excitus. "Aroused." Consult note on chap. vii., line 28.—Mille passuum. "A mile." Literally, "a thousand paces." The passus consisted of five Roman feet. It was not the single step (gradus), but the double step; or, more exactly, it was not the distance from heel to heel, when the feet were at their utmost ordinary extension, but the distance from the point which the heel leaves to that in which it is set down. The Roman mile only differs from the English by less than one tenth.

23–25. Locis circa, densa ob sita, etc. "To lie in ambuscade in the places round about, which were dark on account of the thick brushwood that grew there." The reading of the manuscripts is locis circa densa obsita virgulta obscuris, a strange piece of Latinity, which we may be very sure never came from the pen of Livy, and which is said to mean, "in places hidden by thick bushes which were planted around." But the Latins say loca obsita virgulis, never obsita virgulta locis. We have adopted, therefore, the very ingenious and simple emendation of one of the early commentators, as quoted by Drakenborch.—Id quod querebat. Referring to hostem excivit.

27–31. Fugae quoque, quae simulanda erat, etc. "The same mode of fighting on the part of the cavalry likewise made the cause of the flight which was to be counterfeited less surprising," i. e., than it would have been had they been infantry; since cavalry would naturally make a more desultory attack than infantry, as having horses with which to advance and retreat when they pleased.—Trepidante. "Moving about in an uncertain manner," i. e., "appearing at one moment to be advancing to attack, at another to be retreating."—Plenis portis. "From the crowded gates."—Impulsa. "Having been driven back."

33–41. Transversam invadunt, etc. "Attack the enemy's army in flank."—In presidio. "On guard."—Equites erant. We have given here the reading of the later manuscripts; the earlier ones have equis abierant.—Multaque effusius. "And in much greater confusion."—Simulantes. The object of secuti erant.—Amine uno. "In one body." Romulus is said to have occupied the city with a garrison or colony of 300 men; a number exaggerated by Plutarch to the absurd amount of 2500 colonists, of whom he represents 2000 as shortly after cut off by the Etrurians! As usually happens in the early history of Rome, all traces of this Romulean colony subsequently disappear. The colony is as fabulous as the war itself, although mentioned by Livy in chap. xxvii. of the present book.

CHAPTER XV.

1–11. Belli Fidenatis contagione, etc. "The minds of the Veientes were excited by the contagious influence of the Fidenatian war, both by reason of the tie of consanguinity," etc.—Num Fidenates quoque Etrusi fuerunt. This is not true. Fidenæ was a Latin, not an Etrurian city. Livy, indeed, informs us elsewhere (i., 27) that the people of Fidenæ had only learned the Latin language from their intercourse with the Roman colonists, but this statement of the historian rests on no authority whatsoever.—Infesta essent. "Should be turned against." Festus, as before remarked, is from fero. Compare note on chap. vii., line 32.—Justi bellii. "Of a regular war."—Veios. Veii was one of the oldest and most powerful cities of Etruria, situate on the river Cremera, about twelve miles from Rome.—Dimicationis ultimæ. "On a final conflict," i. e., final and decisive.

14–21. De tectis maenibusque. "For their dwellings and walls." Observe that tectis here precedes maenibus, as involving a deeper feeling of interest. Some give de here the meaning of "from," but then the natural order would be maenibus tectisque.—Nulla arte. "By no stratagem." As in the case of the Fidenates.—Situ ipso. The city stood on a high hill, difficult of ascent.—Ulciscendi. The gerund, as being a verbal form standing next to the noun, is often joined in apposition with a substantive.—Agri parte multatis. They were compelled to surrender that part of their territory in the neighborhood of Rome called Septem Pagii, probably from its containing seven villages; to give up the salt-works which they possessed at the mouth of the Tiber; and to provide 50 hostages as a security for the due execution of the treaty. The district of Septem Pagii thus acquired probably comprehended the Vatican and Janiculan hills, and became the seat of the fifth Roman tribe, the Romilia or Romulia.—In centum annos. The Etrurians were accustomed to make, not a regular peace, but an armistice or truce for a series of years. In the present case the truce appears to have lasted about 60 or 70 years, when war again broke out between the Veientes and the Romans in the reign of Tullus Hostilius.

22–26. Ferme. "Principally."—Absonum fuit. "Was not in consonance with."—Credite. "Believed to have been his," i. e., attributed to him.—Animus. "His spirit."—Non condenda urbis consilium, etc. "Not his project of a city to be founded by him, nor of one to be strengthened by war and peace." It is much simpler, and more natural, to give condenda and firmandæ here their ordinary future meaning, than to regard them, as some do, in the light of present participles, "of founding a city," "of strengthening it." Compare note on Preface, line 21, "conditam condendane."—Ab illo enim pro-fecto. "For, undoubtedly, through the strength imparted by him." All the manuscripts give profecto, which is undoubtedly the true reading. Some editors, however, prefer the conjectural emendation profectu. If this latter be adopted, the meaning will be, "through the strength derived from this outset."

27-31. Multitudini. Identical with the plebs of later days.—Celer-res. Livy is wrong in making the Celeres to have been merely a bodyguard of the king. There can be little doubt that they were not simply the king's body-guard, but were the same as the equites, or horsemen, a fact which is expressly stated by some writers. (Plin., H.N., xxxiii., 2, 9, § 35.) The etymology of Celeres is variously given. Some derive the term from their leader Celer, who was said to have slain Remus; but most writers connected it with the Greek κηλης, "a courser," in reference to the quickness of their service.

CHAPTER XVI.

1-4. His immortalibus editis operibus. "These achievements worthy of immortality having been performed." Crevier's emendation of mortalibus is quite unnecessary.—In campo ad Capre paldem. "In the plain near the she-goat's pool." This plain was afterwards the Campus Martius. Compare ii., 5. The precise location of the Capre palud is not known. It probably lay somewhere under the Quirinal.—Cum magno fragore tontribusque. "With a mighty roar and thunderings."

8-13. Etsi satis credebat patribus. "Although they gave sufficient credence to the fathers," i.e., to the assertion made by them.—Icto. "Struck." From the verb ico, ĕrē.—Deum deo natum, etc. "They all with one accord bid Romulus hail as a god, sprung from a god," etc. The exclamation would be, Salve Deus, Deo nate! etc.—Volens propitius. "Willingly and propitiously." A form of words usual in prayer. The conjunction is sometimes expressed, but more commonly que is omitted, and we have an asyndeton.

14-17. Fuisse credo, etc. A report arising probably at a later period, in the party strife between the patricians and plebeians, through hatred towards the former.—Manavit enim, etc. Dionysius, Valerius Maximus, Plutarch, and others, give this account of the death of Romulus; and to this tradition Tarquiniius Superbus also alludes (chap. xlix.) when he says that Romulus was never buried. But the forgers of this tale forget that Romulus is nowhere represented in the ancient legend as a tyrant, but as a mild and merciful monarch, whose rule became still more gentle after the death of Tatius, whom it branded as a tyrant.—Pavor praesens. "The awe felt at the time." This, of course, would lead to the superstitious belief that he had been carried up to heaven. Pavor here has nothing whatever to do with any fear of the fathers, as some erroneously suppose.

18–20. Consilio. "By the contrivance."—Proculus Julius. Livy speaks of this individual here as having been a man of authority and influence. Plutarch also (Vit. Rom. 28) describes him as a man of the highest rank, and of exemplary character. Cicero, on the other hand, calls him homo agrestis (De Repub., ii., 10), and speaks sneeringly of him, comparing the legend of his interview with the deified Romulus with the Attic fable of Orithyia carried off by Boreas (De Leg., i.; 1).—Gravis, ut traditur, etc. "A weighty authority, as is said, for any fact, however important."

24–31. Ut contra intueri, etc. "That it might be allowed me (without harm) to look upon him face to face." The ancients had a belief that it was not safe for a mortal to look a deity full in the face, and therefore it was usual to cast the eyes to the ground in supplications.—Mirum quantum, etc. "It is wonderful how much credit was given to that man on his announcing these things." The earliest manuscripts have fides, which many editors adopt, making it an archaistic form for the genitive of the fifth declension. (Compare Schneider, L. G., vol. iii., p. 355.) We have preferred, however, to follow Drakenborch, who gives fidei from some manuscripts, the ordinary form of the case. Duker remarks that quantum fides may be justified by taking quantum for in quantum, and regarding fides as a nominative, but this would be harsh and unusual.—Facta fide immortalitatis. "On his immortality being vouched for."

CHAPTER XVII.

1–6. Regni. For de regno.—Necdum ad singulos pervenerat, etc. The manuscripts have a singulis, and pervenerant factiones. But we have adopted, in place of the former, the excellent emendation of Grævius, ad singulos, and have changed the latter in accordance with some of the best editions. The subject of pervenerat will be the combined idea implied in certamen regni and cupido; and we may translate as follows: "Nor as yet had (this feeling of rivalry) come upon them individually." It was not a struggle between individual competitors for the throne, but one of factions or parties in the state, as explained immediately after.—Inter ordines. "Between the different classes,” i.e., races.—In societate aqua, etc. “They might lose possession of the sovereign power, in a case where it was to be shared equally.”

8–11. Romani veteres. The Ramnes.—Peregrinum. As not belonging to their stem or race.—Regnari. “That there should be a king.”—Experta. Taken in a passive sense, though coming from a deponent verb. (Madvig, § 163.)

12–16. Circa. Taking the place of a relative clause, quae circa erant sitae.—Vis aliqua externa. “Some foreign power.”—Rem inter se consociant. “Share the government among themselves.”—Centum patres. Dionysius says that the Senate at this time consisted of two hundred, as one hundred had been added by Tatius to the old Senate of one hundred. He therefore makes the fathers, on the death of Romulus, to have been divided into twenty decuries. Niebuhr says, however, that in Livy’s statement there is a reference to the superiority of the Ramnes, or, in other words, that the 100 Ramnes shared the power among themselves to the exclusion of the 100 Sabines.—Singulisque in singulas, etc. “And persons having been appointed who were to have the chief authority, one for each decuria.”

17–21. Decem imperitabant. We would expect deni here, but decem is used on account of unus, for which singuli could not well be employed.—Quinum dierum spatio, etc. “The power of each was terminated after a space of five days.” Each member of every decuria enjoyed in succession the regal power and its badges for the space of five days. If no king was appointed at the expiration of fifty days, the rotation began anew.—Annuumque intervalium, etc. “And the interval between a kingly government lasted a year.”—Quod nunc quoque, etc. “A term which holds good even now.” Interreges were appointed under the republic for holding the comitia for the election of consuls, when the consuls through civil commotions, or other causes, had been unable to do so in their year of office. Each held the office for only five days, as under the kings. The last interreges of whom mention is made in Roman history were in B.C. 53 and 52, in the latter of which years an interrex held the comitia in which Pompey was appointed sole consul. In Livy’s time, therefore, the office had ceased, though the name itself still remained familiar.

23–28. Ultra passuri. “Likely any longer to endure.”—Ita gratiam inuent, etc. “They gain popularity by yielding to the people the chief authority, in such a way (however) that they did not surrender more power than they kept back.” The true reading here is detinerent, as given in most manuscripts. There is no need whatever of changing it to retinerent, as some editors do.—Regem jussisset. Consult note on chap. xxi., line 4.—Id sic ratum esset, etc. "It should be valid on this express condition, if the fathers, namely, should give it their sanction." Observe here the force of sic. The term auctor (which contains the same element as aug-ae) signifies, properly, one who enlarges, confirms, or gives to a thing its completeness and efficient form. The numerous technical significations of the word are all derivable from this general notion. The expression "patres auctores flunt" means that the determinations of the populus in the comitia centuriata were confirmed by the patricians in the comitia curiata. (Smith, Dict. Ant., s. v. Auctor.) [Patres auctores. Seeley, quoting Cic., De Dom. 14, and Livy, vi., 41, concludes that the lex curiata was distinct from the auctoritas patrum. The proceedings of the comitia curiata were ratified in early times by the Senate, in later times by the patrician part of the Senate, to whom, for some religious reasons, certain privileges had been left.]

29, 30. Usurpatur, idem jus, vi adempta. "The same (constitutional) form of authority is observed, its efficacy (however) having been taken away." In the fifth century of the city the change began. By one of the laws of the plebeian dictator, Q. Publius Philo, it was enacted (Liv. viii., 12) that in the case of laws to be enacted at the comitia centuriata, the fathers should give their assent before the vote of the comitia centuriata was taken. By a lex Mania, of uncertain date (Cic., Brut., c. 14), the same change was made as to elections which the Publilia lex had made as to the enacting of laws. This will serve to explain the language of Livy in the text.—In incertum eventum, etc. "The fathers give their sanction with respect to the uncertain issue of the comitia," i. e., to the decision of the comitia, before it has been made, and while it is still uncertain what that decision will be. [Contio. A contio was summoned by a magistrate preparatory to the comitia: in the latter voting took place; in the former there was nothing but speaking.]

32–36. Quod bonum, saustum, etc. "A thing which (I pray) may be good, auspicious, and fortunate." The usual formula before entering on any business, and marked by the tautology in which such forms are usually couched.—Dignum qui numeretur. "One worthy to be counted." The relative has here the force of ut.—Vesti beneficio. "Outdone in generosity." Sciscere, jubertenque. Another legal formula. Sciscere is the technical term to denote a decree of the plebs, and jubere one by the populus. [Regarding Niebuhr's theory of a distinction between the populus and plebs as traceable in Livy, Madvig writes, "The opinion that populus means patricians as distinguished from the plebs, is based on no arguments, and needs no refutation."
CHAPTER XVIII.

1, 2. Numa Pompilius. It would be idle to inquire into the historical reality of Numa. Whether such a person ever existed or not, we can not look upon the second king of Rome as a real historical personage. His name represents the rule of law and order, and to him are ascribed all those ecclesiastical institutions which formed the basis of the ceremonial religion of the Romans. Some modern writers fancifully connect his name with the word νόμος, "law."—Curibus Sabiniis. "At the Sabine Cures." Cures, an ancient city of the Sabines, was situated about three miles from the left bank of the Tiber, and twenty-four miles from Rome. In ancient inscriptions of imperial date it is uniformly termed "Cures Sabini," an epithet probably indicating the claim set up by its people to be the metropolis of the Sabines.—Consulissimus. "Most skilled." Literally, "most consulted about." Hence the expression for a lawyer, juris consultus.

6–9. Samium Pythagoram. Pythagoras was a native of the island of Samos, lying off the coast of Ionia, and his birth year was probably B.C. 608, which is the date adopted by Bentley. According to the best authorities, he flourished in the times of Polycrates and Tarquiniius Superbus (B.C. 540–510).—Centum amplius post annos. "More than a hundred years after."—Circa Metapontum, etc. "In and around Metapontum," etc. The cities here mentioned were all in Magna Graecia. Metapontum was on the Tarentine gulf, and on the eastern coast of Lucania. Heraclea was in Lucania, on the river Siris. Crotona lay on the Asarbus, in the country of the Bruttii.—Crotona. Greek form of the accusative. Some editions give the more usual form Crotonam.—Juvenum aemulantium, etc. "To have held schools of young men, emulously adopting his tenets." Compare Cic., Pro Murex., c. 29: "Zeno cujus inventorum aemuli Stoici nominatur;" and Tacit., Hist., iii. 81: "Studia philosophiae et placita studio- rum aemulatus."

10–14. Qua fama in Sabinos, etc. "By what fame reaching to the Sabines, or by what intercourse of language could he have aroused any one to a desire of becoming acquainted (with his doctrines)." We have given qua fama, as making a simpler and more natural construction than que fama, although the latter is adopted by Drakenborch.—Unus per tot gentes pervenisset. "Could a single individual have made his way through so many nations."—Suopte igitur ingenio, etc. "I rather think, therefore, that through his own innate qualities his mind had been brought under the control of virtues, and that he had been trained not so much by foreign branches of knowledge, as by the rigid and austerne discipline of the ancient Sabines." We Have connected magis in construction with opinor; some, however, prefer joining it with suopte . . . fuisse.

18–26. Opes. "The balance of power."—Ad unum. "To a man." —Accitus. "When sent for." More literally, "When called unto them." From accio, not from accicio, which would give accitus, and in a different sense.—Augurato urbe condenda, etc. "When the city was about to be founded, had obtained the kingdom by augury."—Honoris ergo. "For the sake of honor." Ergo (originally ἐργὸ) is used in antiquated style, with the genitive, with the force of causa, and is put after its case. (Madvig, § 172, Obs. 5.)—Arcem. The position of the Arx has given rise to great controversy among antiquarians. Becker places it on the north-eastern summit of the Capitoline hill, but it is more correct to make it to have stood on the south-western summit. Consult on this subject the remarks of Dyer, in Smith's Dict. Geog., vol. ii., p. 767.—In lapide. This stone was in a part of the Arx called Auguraculum, so denounced because it had been consecrated once for all for the purpose of taking auguries.—Ad meridiem. That is, in the direction in which the gods were supposed to look forth from their abode in the north. [Versus. This seems to be a participle. Weissenborn compares xxxvi., 15, 7; in septentrionem versa Epiros; and xxxi., 51, 3.]

26–29. Ad laevam ejus. "On his left." As Numa sat facing the south, the augur being on his left hand would face the east, the lucky quarter.—Capite velato. The augur on all such occasions wore a veil, the reason of which custom may be seen in Virgil, Æn., iii., 405. This covering of the visage, however, was of course not so thick as completely to obstruct the view. Some editors, mistaking the meaning of the passage, remove the comma after ejus, and place it before the pronoun, thus connecting ejus with capite velato, and making the words refer to Numa. Compare chapter xxxvi., "Statua Atti, capite velato."—Prospectu in urbem, etc. "Having taken a view in the direction of the city and country." That is, he looked over the Forum towards the Cælian hill, and over the Roman territory lying beyond this.

29–31. Regiones ab oriente, etc. The heavens, according to the Roman ritual, were divided into four regions, by two lines intersecting one another in a point over the augur's head, one called the limes decimamus, the more important one, from east to west; and the other, termed cardo, from north to south. The latter of these, as being of less importance, Livy has omitted to mention.—Dextras ad meridiem partes, etc. "He declared the parts towards the south to be to the right," i.e., because he stood looking towards the east.—Laevas. The left is the lucky side because nearer the north, the abode of the gods.
31–38. Signum contra, etc. "He (next) mentally fixed upon some conspicuous object, directly in front, whither his eyes carried his view farthest," i.e., at the utmost extent of view. In order to draw upon the earth a line corresponding to the decimanus already drawn in the heavens, the augur selects some object, a tree, for instance, on the edge of the horizon in the east, and thus full in front, from which to draw his imaginary earth-line to the point where he is standing.—Uti tu signa, etc. "I pray that thou wilt make manifest unto us sure signs within these bounds which I have marked." With uti supply precor, already implied in precatus. The augur prays for signs, such as lightning, or the cry or flight of birds (which were all certa in their nature), to be vouchsafed unto him in the direction of the eastern heavens, and between the two lines in the heavens and on the earth.—Peregrit. "He stated in express words."—De templo descendit. "Descended from the place of augury." In the language of the Roman ritual, templum meant a place set apart and hallowed by the augurs for taking the auguries. Thus Varro (L. L., vi., 81, ed. Bip.) remarks: "Templum locus, augurii aut auspicii causa, quibusdam conceptis verbis finitus." The same term was also applied to the quarter in the heavens within which the observations were to be made, as it was marked out and separated from the rest by the staff of the augur.

CHAPTER XIX.

1–4. Regno Ita potitus. Livy, in the previous chapter, merely speaks of the decree of the Senate in Numa's favor, but says nothing of his having been chosen by the people in the comitia curiata, nor of the lex de imperio, which Numa caused to be passed, in his own case, at a subsequent meeting of the same comitia. Compare the language of Cicero (De Repub., ii., 13): "Qui (Numa), ut huc venit, quanquam populus curiatis eum comitiis regem esse jusserat, tamen ipse de suo imperio curiatiem legem tuit."—Eam. The pronoun is emphatic here, and equivalent to eandem.—Quippe offerari, etc. "Since (he was aware) that their minds were rendered ferocious by warfare." Observe the elliptical employment of quippe, to indicate what was passing in the mind of Numa.

6. Janum ad infinitum Argiletum fecit. "He constructed the (passage called) Janus, at the lowest part of the Argiletum." This passage (commonly, but erroneously, called a temple) had two entrances, and was usually called Janus Geminus, Janus Bifrons, or Portae belli; and stood ad infinitum Argiletum, that is, close by the Forum, on its north-eastern side between the Quirinal and Capitoline. In a niche in this passage stood a statue of Janus. It is probable that the Janus Geminus originally was not an ordinary gate of the city, but, like later porta triumphalis, used only on certain occasions, namely, armies marching out against an enemy, and returning from their campaign, passed through it. Hence it was open in war, indicating symbolically that the god too had gone out to assist the Roman warriors, and shut in time of peace, that the god, the safeguard of the city, might not escape. The "Janus" here referred to, however, must not be confounded with the temple of Janus built by C. Duilius in the time of the first Punic war, which was restored by Augustus and dedicated by Tiberius.

10–12. Clausus fuit. "Has it been shut." This refers properly to the later temple, not to the original passage mentioned in the previous note.—T. Manlio consul. He triumphed over the Sardinians in B.C. 235, and is said to have reduced the whole island to subjection; but this statement must be understood with considerable limitation, since the consuls of the two succeeding years were still able to earn the distinction of a triumph "de Sardinis" (Fast. Capit.).—Iterum, quod nostrae ætati, etc. But, according to Casaubon (ad Sueton. Aug. 22), Augustus closed the temple of Janus twice after the battle of Actium and the overthrow of Antony, namely, after the reduction of the Cantabri, in B.C. 19, by Agrippa, and a third time about the period of our Saviour's birth. This last, however, is rather doubtful. But still, Lipsius (Elect., i., 22) would infer, from the present passage, that the first part of Livy's work was published before the conquest of the Cantabri.

17–21. Luxviarient. " Might run riot."—Continuerat. "Had held in check."—Rem ad multitudinem, etc. "An instrument most effectual with an untutored mob, and one uncivilized as in those times," i. e., as was to be expected in those times.—Sine aliquo commento miraculis. "Without some fiction of a miracle."

24–29. Atque omnium primum, etc. "And, first of all, he marks out the year into twelve months, which (year), since the moon does not fill up the number of thirty days in each month, and some days are wanting to make up the complete year, which is brought round by the sun's revolution, he so arranged by inserting intercalary months that every nineteenth year, the space of all the intermediate years being then filled up, the days coincided with the same position of the sun from which they had set out." The year of Romulus is said to have consisted of ten months, and to have comprised only 304 days; a period differing so widely from the real length of the sun's course that the months would rapidly revolve through all the seasons of the year. Numa therefore increased the year to 12 months, by adding January and February, making it contain 354 days, and as twelve lunations amount to 354 days, 8h., 48m., and 36s., this so-called year of Numa would be a tolerably correct lunar year. And this year again he so regulated by the insertion of intercalary months, that at the end of every nineteenth year it again coincided with the same point in the sun's course from which it had started. Some editors of Livy, in support of a theory, have taken the liberty of altering his text by the insertion of the words quarto et before vicesimo, forgetting too that the words quarto et vicesimo anno signify, not every twenty-fourth year, which their theory requires, but every twenty-third year, according to that peculiar view of the Romans which led them to count both the extremes in defining the interval from one point to another. Accordingly, it is not doing violence to words, but giving the strict and necessary meaning to them, when in translating the present passage of Livy we render vicesimo anno by every nineteenth year. And, moreover, 19 years constitute a most convenient cycle for the conjunction of a lunar and solar year. (Key, in Smith's Dict. Ant., p. 228.)

30, 31. Idem nefastos dies, etc. The dies nefasti were days on which neither courts of justice nor comitia were allowed to be held, and which were dedicated to other purposes. The dies fasti were the days on which the prae tor was allowed to administer justice in the public courts. On some of these, moreover, comitia could be held, but not on all. And again, the dies intercisi were days on which the praetor might hold his courts, but not at all hours, so that sometimes one half of such a day was fastus, while the other half was nefastus.—Quia aliquando nihil cum populo, etc. "Because it was likely to prove advantageous that at times no business should be transacted with the people."

CHAPTER XX.

3-12. Dialem flaminem. "The flamen of Jupiter." Flamen was the name for any Roman priest who was devoted to the service of one particular god, and who received a distinguishing epithet from the deity to whom he ministered. The most dignified were those attached to Jupiter, Mars, and Quirinus, called respectively the flamen Dialis, flamen Martialis, and flamen Quirinalis. The number was eventually increased to fifteen. The name, according to Varro and Festus, was derived from the band of white wool (filum, filamen, flamen) which they wore without the official apex, or cap, when the heat was oppressive.—Sacra regia vicis. "The sacred rites belonging to the regal office."—Flaminem Jovi, etc. "He appointed a residential priest as flamen to Jupiter."—Virgines Vestae. Numa chose four, two from the Titienses, and two from the Rameses. Two more were subsequently added from the Luceres by either Tarquinius Priscus or Servius Tullius. This number of six, according to the best authorities, remained from that time unaltered.—Et genti conditoris, etc.
"And not foreign to the family of the founder (of Rome)." Rea Silvia, the mother of Romulus, was a Vestal.—Adsiduae templi antistes. Their chief office was to watch, by turns, day and night, the everlasting fire that blazed upon the altar of Vesta. [Stipendium de publico. The Vestals were endowed with part of the ager publicus.]

14–18. Salios. The name is commonly derived from salio, and hence means properly the Leapers or Jumpers. The Salii were chosen from the patricians even in the latest times, and formed an ecclesiastical corporation. Tullus Hostilius established another collegium of Salii in fulfilment of a vow which he made in a war with the Sabines. Compare chapter xxvii.—Martì Gradivo. "For Mars Gradivus," i. e., the striding or marching, and derived from gradior. Soldiers, when they marched out, sometimes halted near his temple, which stood outside the Porta Capena, on the Appian Way.—Tunicæ pictæ. "Of an embroidered tunic." This was bound with a brazen belt, or, as Livy terms it, aneum pectori tegunen, "a brazen covering for the breast."—Ancilia. These were the sacred shields, of an oval form, but with the two sides receding inwards with an even curvature, so as to make them broader at the ends than in the middle. According to the legend, one ancile fell from heaven in the reign of Numa, when the Roman people labored under a pestilence. And as upon the preservation of this shield depended the fate of Rome, Numa caused eleven others of the same size and form to be made, that if ever any attempt was made to carry away the true one, the plunderer might find it difficult to distinguish this from the rest.—Ac per urben ire. This took place on the first of March, the festival of Mars, and also for several successive days. At the conclusion of the celebration the Salii were accustomed to partake of a splendid entertainment in the temple of Mars.—Carmina. These songs or hymns were called Asamenta, Assamenta, or Axamenta, and in later times were scarcely understood by the priests themselves.—Cum tripudiis, etc. In the dance they struck the shields with rods, so as to keep time with their voices and with the movements of the feet.

18–22. Pontificem. "As chief pontiff." The Pontifex Maximus is meant here; for there were four pontifices at first created, whose number was afterwards increased.—Numan Marcium. He had accompanied Numa from the Sabine country to Rome. It is said that he aspired to the kingly office on the death of Numa, and that he starved himself to death on the election of Tullus Hostilius. His son, also called Numa Marcius, married the daughter of Numa Pompilius, and became the father of Ancus Marcus, the fourth king of Rome. He was made Profectus urbis by Tullus Hostilius. Most editors of Livy confound the son with the father, making the latter to have been Numa's son-in-law.—Eique sacra omnia, etc. "And consigned to him a full system of sacred rites, written out and distinctly specified." These were said to have been extracted from the 24 books on the Jus sacrorum composed by Numa himself. We have given exsignata here the meaning assigned to it by Weissenborn. Most editors make it refer to sealing, which is far inferior. We have elsewhere only exsignaverò in Plantus (Trin., iii., 2, 29), and hence the doubt as to the true force of the term.—Erogaretur. "Was to be obtained."

23-30. Scitis. "To the decisions."—Ut esset, quo, etc. "That there might be some quarter to which the people could come to ask for advice."—Peregrinos. The admission of foreign deities and rights depended entirely on the college of pontiffs.—Justa funebria. "Funeral rites." The funeral solemnities justly due to the dead.—Ut idem pontifex edoceret. Supply jus sit, as implied in what precedes. —Visu. "Appearance."—Susci perentur atque curarentur. "Should be regarded as such, and be expiated." Susciperè is properly "to take up," and hence, "to acknowledge," "to regard as," etc.—Ad ea elicienda. "For eliciting these (prodigies)."—Jovi Elicio. The origin of the name as well as the notion of Jupiter Elicius is referred to the Etruscans, who by certain prayers and sacrifices called forth (eliciebant or evocabant) lightning, or invited Jupiter to send lightning. The object of calling down lightning was, according to Livy's explanation, to elicit prodigies ex mentibus divinis; and when the god appeared, or sent his lightning in anger, it was an unfortunate sign to the person who had invited it. Consult on this subject, and on the knowledge which the ancients, and especially the Etrurians, possessed of electrical phenomena, the remarks of Salverte [Philosophy of Magic, vol. ii., chap. viii. (ed. of Harper & Bros., New York, 1847)].

—Quae suscipienda essent. "As to what prodigies were to be attended to," i. e., what things were to be regarded in the light of prodigies.

CHAPTER XXI.

1-6. Ad hæc consultanda, etc. "To deliberating upon and taking proper care of these things." These new religious ordinances would cause the people not only to deliberate among themselves respecting their scope and spirit, as well as their due performance, but to apply also for advice to the sacerdotal authority.—Et deorum adsidua insidens cura. "And a continual reverence for the gods being seated therein," i. e., in their minds. Observe that deorum is the objective genitive.—Ut fides ac jusjurandum, etc. "That good faith and the obligation of an oath governed the state, the fear of the laws and of punishments being a secondary consideration." Livy means that their dread of laws and punishment was inferior, in its influence on their conduct, to their regard for good faith and the obligation of an oath. Muretus, however, disliking the manuscript reading, which is the one we have followed, conjectures proxime legum ac punctum metum, "like the fear of laws and punishments;" and several editors, Zumpt among the number, have inadvertently adopted it. [Seeley translates, "A fear scarcely less effective than that inspired by laws;" taking the phrase as equivalent to metu proximo metum legum. Madvig conjectures pro obnoxio.]

8–16. Cum ipsi se homines, etc. "Since the people were moulding themselves after the moral principles of the king as the only (true) model," etc. Observe the employment here of cum with the subjunctive formarent, as indicating the cause or reason of what is stated in the succeeding clause.—Ad sollicitandum omnium pacem. "For the purpose of disturbing the general peace."—In eam verecundiam. "To that feeling of respect (for them)."—Ex opaco specu. "Issuing from a dark recess." The spot referred to in the text, where Numa was believed to have had his interviews with Egeria, was near the city, at the Porta Capena, in the valley now called Caparella, and where the sacred shield had fallen from heaven. There was also another spot sacred to Egeria near Aricia.—Camenis. The Camenae, of whom Egeria was one, were Roman divinities, whose name is connected with carmen (an oracle or prophecy), whence we also find the forms Casmenae, Carmenæ, and Carmentis. The Camenæ were accordingly prophetic nymphs, and they belonged to the religion of ancient Italy, although later traditions represent them as having been introduced into Italy from Arcadia. The Roman poets, however, even as early as the time of Livius Andronicus, apply the name of Camene to the Muses.

18–22. Soli Fidei. "To Faith alone," i.e., separately, or in her sole honor. The epithet soli, however, is an extremely awkward one here, and has probably arisen from some corruption of the text. Dionysius (ii., 75) makes mention of a temple of Public Faith built by Numa on the Capitoline (ιερὰς Πίστεως δημοσίας), and the same deity must here be meant.—Sacrarium. The idea of a temple is already implied in sollemne.—Bigis, curru arcuato. "In a two-horse chariot, with an arched roof." Compare Weissenborn; "bogenformig gewölbt." Over the chariot a covering was also thrown. The whole was symbolical of the secrecy connected with good faith.—Tutandam. "Ought to be protected."—Quæ. Not quos. (Zumpt, § 372.)—Argeos. "Argei." Varro calls them the chapels of the Argei, and says they were twenty-seven in number, distributed in the different districts of the city. We know but little of the particular uses to which they were applied, and that little is unimportant. They would appear to have had something to do with the old rites of the Pelasgi, with whom the name of Argos was connected.
24-28. _Tutela._ "His maintenance."—_Septem et triginta regnavit annos._ The duration of the reigns of the Roman kings is of course purely fabulous, and was the work of the Roman pontiffs. Their table was adopted by Polybius for his Roman chronology, and Polybius is the authority followed by Cicero in fixing the years of the kings. This the latter says expressly in _De Repub._ ii., 14.—_Tres et quadraginta._ In this number Dionysius agrees with Livy. Cicero, however, makes it thirty-nine years (l. c.).—_Temperata et belli, etc._ "Well organized by the regulations of both war and peace."

CHAPTER XXII.

1-8. _Res._ "The administration of affairs."—_Clara pugna._ Compare the account given in chap. xii.—_Jussit._ This does not mean that the people at the comitia ordered the interrex who presided to create Tullus king, but that he was actually made king by the _jussus populi._ Hence, in cases like the present, _jubere_ can be regarded as equivalent to _creavit,_ and there is no need of supplying _esse._—_Patres auctores facti._ "The fathers gave it their sanction." Consult note on chap. xvii., 28.—_Senescere._ "Was beginning to lose its vigor."

11-16. _Imperitabat._ In the succeeding chapter he is called _Albanus rex._—_Ad res repetendas._ "To demand restitution."—_Ne quid prius quam mandata agerent._ "Not to attend to anything before their instructions," i. e., to attend to their instructions first of all.—_Pie._ "On just grounds," i. e., without thereby incurring the anger of the gods for having violated any treaty.—_Socordius._ "More remissly."—_Excepti hospicio, etc._ "Being kindly and hospitably entertained by Tullus, they courteously partake day after day of the king's table." Observe here the force of _celebrant,_ as indicating frequent repetition, and consult on this head, Klotz, _Handw. L. S.,_ s. v., p. 819.—_Comiter._ They allowed courtesy to get the better of duty, and, while partaking of the king's hospitality day after day, waited for the monarch to allow them an audience.

17-26. _Et res repetiverant priores._ "Had both been the first to demand restitution."—_In tricesimum diem._ "Against the thirtieth day."—_Purgando terunt tempus._ "Waste some time in apologizing."—_Imperio._ "By their orders."—_In eum omnes expectant, etc._ "On it may fall all the calamities of this same war."
CHAPTER XXIII.

1-10. Hæc nuntiunt dōnum. "Carry these tidings home."—Trojanam utranque prolem. "Both being Trojan offspring," i. e., of Trojan descent. Observe that prolem is in apposition with natos.—Minus miserabiles. "Less deplorable."—Confusi sunt. "Were merged."

13-16. Fossa Cluili. Niebuhr makes this to have been near Settebassi, between the fourth and fifth milestone, from the Porta Capena, on the road to Frascati. He thinks the name of the ditch was unquestionably derived from an Alban prince. Weissenborn, on the other hand, makes the ditch to have been an outlet of the Alban lake, and he connects the name with cluere, and κλαζειν, i. e., purgare.—Abolevit. "Has become forgotten." Taken intransitively.—Albani. Not the army, but the Senate of Alba.—Mettium. Mettius was an old Italian name in use among both the Sabines and the Latins. It is doubtful, however, whether Mettius or Metius is the better orthography, as we sometimes find one, and sometimes the other in the best manuscripts.

17-24. Ab ipso capite orsum. "Having begun with the very head," i. e., by cutting off the king.—Expediturum pœnas. "Will exact atonement." Here taken transitively. We had the same verb in an intransitive sense at the close of the previous chapter.—Bellum impium. He calls it an impious war, as they had violated religion by refusing to make just restitution.—Ab stativis. "From his standing camp." Supply castris.—Dicit quam proxime potest. "He leads his forces as near as possible." Gronovius would prefer, on conjecture, qua, for quam, and the meaning then will be, "by the nearest possible road." But the manuscript reading is to be preferred.—Et se adlaturum. "That he will adduce such matters."—Ad rem Romanam. "To the interest of Rome."

26-29. Tametsi vana adferebantur. "Although useless propositions were (as he well knew) sought to be brought forward." The imperfect here is employed to express the firm conviction of Tullus that matters of no value whatever were sought to be communicated. There is no need therefore of the very plausible conjecture of Faber, namely, vana adserri rebatur.—In aciem. "Into line of battle."—Structi. The less usual form for instructi.—Infinit. "Begins." Supply loqui. An antiquated and poetical form, used either alone, as in the present case, or with the infinitive supplied. Zumpt regards it as a grammatical irregularity, fio being properly used as the passive of facio. Madvig, on the other hand, connects it with fari.

29-34. Injuriæ et non redditas res, etc. The construction is et ege videor audisse regem nostrum Cluiliun (præ se ferre) injurias et non reditas res... nec dubito te ferre eadem præ te, Tulle. “I both think that I (once) heard our king Cluilius assert,” etc. Literally, “I both seem (to myself) to have (once) heard,” etc.—Neque recte an perperam interpretor, etc. “Nor do I undertake to say whether it be right or wrong (that it should be so); let that consideration rest with him who has commenced the war,” i. e., Tullus.

36–47. Illud te monitum velim, etc. “Of this, Tullus, I would wish you to be warned; how powerful the Etrurian state is about us, and especially about you, the nearer you are to the Tuscans, the better you know the fact.” The manuscripts read Vulscis, but Tuscis, which is a conjectural reading, is far superior, since the Volsci only became formidable to the Romans at a later period. Besides, the interchange of Etruscus and Tuscus occurs also elsewhere. Compare book ii., chap. vii. and ix., etc. Some read quo propiores vos, “the nearer yourself and your people are.”—Spectaculo fore. “Will be a spectacle (unto them).”—Si nos di amant. The same in effect as saying, “nisi nos di irati deminent.”—In dubiam imperii, etc. “We are going to play the uncertain game of empire or slavery.” Observe that qui has here rather a disjunctive force in our idiom.—Indole animi. “From the natural bent of his mind.”—Ratio initur. “A plan is adopted.”—Materiam. “The means of its accomplishment.”

CHAPTeR XXIV.

1–6. Trigemini fratres. “Three brothers born at one birth.” Dionysius (iii., 14) says that their mothers were sisters. Every one, remarks Nebuhr, will perceive that we have here types of the two nations regarded as sisters, and of the three tribes in each of them (H. R., vol. i., p. 348).—Nobilior. “More celebrated.”—Nominum error. “An uncertainty as to the names.”—Auctores utroque trahunt. “Authors give both accounts,” i. e., one one, and another another. Literally, “pull both ways.” The doubt in this case probably arose from the circumstance that in Rome itself, near the “sororium tigillum,” stood an altar of Janus Curiatus.

9–14. Agunt. “Make arrangements.”—Reges. Mettius was merely dictator, but as Tullus was a king, Livy naturally entitles both reges. —Tibi, unde victoria fuerit. “On that side from which victory shall have come.” The ordinary phraseology would have given ubi instead of unde.—Convenit. “Are each agreed upon.” Observe the force of the singular.—Cujusque populi. “Of whichever people.” Quique is here used for quicunque. So quandoque for quandocunque.—Cum bona pace. “With sincere peace,” i. e., without any farther dispute.
15, 16. Tum. "On this occasion."—Fetialis. "A Fetial." The Fetiales were a college of Roman priests, who acted as the guardians of the public faith. It was their province, where any dispute arose with a foreign state, to demand satisfaction, to determine the circumstances under which hostilities might be commenced, to perform the various religious rites attendant on the solemn declaration of war, and to preside at the formal ratification of peace. Their services were considered absolutely essential in concluding a treaty. The etymology of the name is uncertain; the less correct orthography is ficialis.

17, 18. Cum patre patrato. "With the pater patratus." Usually, four of the college of fetiales were deputed to act when a treaty was to be ratified, and these again elected one of their number to be their representative. This individual was styled pater patratus, that is, the "father" charged with the duty of "completing" (patrare) the business. A fillet of white wool was bound around his head, together with a wreath of sacred herbs (sagmina) gathered from within the enclosure of the Capitoline hill. We have here mention made of a similar official on the part of the Albans.—Sagmina. "Vervain." We have here given the customary translation of the term. Strictly speaking, however, it ought to be rendered "sacred herbs," the vervain being merely one of the number. So again verbene, which were the same as sagmina, properly means sacred boughs, that is, of laurel, olive, myrtle, etc.

19-28. Puram tollito. "Take up a pure plant." Supply herbam.—Graminis herbam puram. "A pure grass-herb."—Vasa, comitesque mesos? "Do you, my implements and attendants?" i. e., do you include these also in my sacred commission and privileges?—Sine fraude mea. "Without any detriment to myself." Fraus is here used in its strictly legal sense of injury produced by deception of any kind.—Pater patratus ad jusjurandum, etc. "The pater patratus is created for perfecting the oath." Compare note on line 17.—Longo effata carmine. "Uttered in a long set form." Carmen often occurs in the sense of a formula in religion or law, since these were anciently written in verse.—Non operæ est. "It is not worth while." We may supply pretium, though no ellipsis is in reality necessary.

30, 31. Populus Albanus. The nominative for the vocative, for the purpose of emphasis, in imitation of the Greek. This, however, is properly a poetic usage. (Zumpt, § 492, note.)—Ut illa palam, etc. "As those conditions have been recited publicly, first and last, from those tablets or from wax, without any deception, and as they have been here this day understood in their most obvious sense, from those conditions the Roman people will not be the first to swerve."—Tabulis cerave. That is, "from those tablets, whether plain or covered with wax." Before copper or bronze was used for the purpose, laws and treaties were either carved on wood or written on waxed tablets. The treaty between Rome and Gabii was marked on a wooden shield, preserved in the temple of Jupiter Fidius, in the former city. (Dionys., iv., 58.)—Dolo malo. This is not a pleonasm. The term dolus originally meant "a device," and hence in the earlier and especially juridical language, when connected with malus, it became a common expression for "deception," "guile," or "fraud." On the other hand, the ancients also employed dolus bonus in an opposite sense. Compare Cic., De Off., iii., 14, ed. Anthon.

33–37. Defexit. Old form for defecerit.—Publico consilio, etc. "Fraudulently, by public concert."—Tum illo die, Jupiter. The true lection here is uncertain. Sigonius and others give on conjecture, tum tu, ille Diespiter. We have preferred retaining the common reading with Drakenborch.—Magis potes pollesque. "Thou art more able and powerful." Possum refers here to ability to act; polleō to the possession of abundant means for acting. Compare Doederlein, Synonym., a. v. posse; Habicht, p. 387.—Saxo silice. "With a flintstone." Silice has here the force of an adjective.

CHAPTER XXV.

5–10. Ferores et suopte ingenio, etc. ["Courageous both from their own natural disposition, and because they were animated by the cries of their exhorting countrymen." ]—Quippe imperium agebatur. "For supremacy was at stake." More literally, "was the point in litigation."—Itaque ergo. "And thus then." Itaque (et ita) preserves the connection; and ergo is brought in to strengthen itaque.—Minime gratum spectaculum. This was far from being a show calculated to amuse, such as a combat of gladiators, or the like.

12–18. Velut acies. "Like armies in battle array."—Terni juvenes. "The three youths on each side." Observe the force of the distributive numeral.—Futuraque ea deinde, etc. "And the fortune of their country, destined to be such as they themselves should have made it." Ea with the force of talis.—Ut primo statim. There was no prollusio, as in gladiatorial conflicts, but an earnest combat commenced immediately.—Horror ingens. "A deep shudder."—Torpellat. "Were each suspended."

19–28. Agitatioque anceps, etc. "And the rapid movement on both sides of weapons and arms," i.e., of arms offensive and defensive. On the force of anceps here, compare Klotz, vol. ii., p. 390.—
Corruerunt. "Fell together."—Spes tota. "Hope entirely."—Exanimæs vice unius. "Breathless (with solicitude) at the situation of the one (alone left)."—Ut universis solus, etc. "As (on the one hand) by no means a match alone for all at once, so (on the other) full of bold confidence against them singly."—Ita ratus secuturos.
"Thinking that they will follow at such a speed."

29–37. Aliquantum spatii. "A considerable distance."—Jam pete-bat. "Was already seeking."—Tum clamore, qualis, etc. "Then with a loud cry, such as is wont to be that of those who applaud on account of unexpected success." More literally, "from something unexpected." The idea of an exhibition of gladiatorial skill, in some amphitheatre, is still kept up.—Alter. "The other of the two still left." Observe the force of alter.—Qui nec procul aberat. "Who also was not far distant."—Et alterum Curiatum conficit. "He despatches the second Curiatus also." As a numeral alter is equivalent to secundus.

40–44. Feroxem dabant. "Were rendering confident."—Victusque.
"And already conquered in spirit." His courage failed him when he saw his brothers slain.—Nec illud prælium fuit. "And in fact what followed was not a conflict."—Manibus. "To the shades of my brothers." Manes was a general name by which the Romans designated the souls of the departed. The appeasing of the Manes superseded the earlier custom of avenging bloodshed by blood.—Causæ belli. "To the cause of this conflict." Belli in the sense of pugnae.
He means the object which both the Romans and Albans had in view in instituting this combat, namely, to ascertain which people should rule the other.

45–52. Male sustinenti arma. "Unto him with difficulty sustaining the weight of his armor."—Ovantes ac gratulantes. "In triumph and with congratulations."—Prope metum. "Close upon fear," i. e., almost despaired of.—Dicionis alienæ facti. "Were become the subjects of a foreign sway." The genitive of property, possession, etc.
(Zumpt, § 448.)—Duo Romana uno loco. The two Roman champions fell in one place, super alium alius, and consequently were buried together.—Distantia locis, etc. "Differing in their positions (from each other) according as they had also severally fought." The Curiattii fell in different places, as Horatius contrived to separate them, to avoid their joint attack.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The verb implies their going off in different directions.—Juventutem.
The term juventus here means, not the younger men merely, but the whole Alban army engaged in the campaign.—Princed. "Foremost." As in triumph.—Trigemina. "Of the three brothers."—Portam Capenam. So called because the Appian Way passed through it, leading to Capua.—Paludamento. "The military cloak." The paludamentum was a military cloak, worn not only by a Roman general when commanding an army, but also by his principal officers and personal attendants, in contradistinction to the sagum of the common soldiers. Livy's employment of the term here is therefore correct enough.

11-14. Movet. "Moves with wrath." Supply ira.—Cum immaturo amore. "With thy ill-timed love." Immaturo has here the force of intempestivo.—Quaecumque Romana, etc. "Whatsoever Roman woman shall lament a foe." Some of the early editions have Quae-cumque Romanum lugebit hostem, but Romanum hostem in this sense is hardly, if at all, good Latin.—Facto obstabat. "Was a counterbalance to the deed," i. e., outweighed its enormity.—Tamen raptus in jus ad regem. "Still he was hurried to justice before the king."— Tan tristis ingratiique, etc. "Of a judicial proceeding so melancholy and unpleasing towards the lower orders, or of punishment in accordance with that proceeding," i. e., of the punishment consequent thereupon. The king himself wished to avoid the odium of so unpopular a trial, well knowing that condemnation must necessarily follow, and therefore turns the whole matter over into the hands of duumviri. The manuscripts have ad secundum judicium, but as this is unintelligible, some editors conjecture ac for ad, while others prefer aut. We have given the latter with Drakenborch.—Duumviro qui Horatio, etc. "I appoint duumviri to try Horatius for perduellio." We have here a departure from the ordinary construction, the verb judicare commonly taking the genitive of the crime alleged. In the earlier periods of Rome every act of an individual which was injurious to the state or its peace was called perduellio. Most commonly it refers to hightreason, under which head the present offence would be classed, since the act of Horatius, in killing his sister, was regarded as a usurpation of the prerogative of punishment, and hence as a crime against the state.

22-25. Lex horrendi carminis erat. "The law couched in a fearful form of words." Compare note on chap. xxiv., line 27.—Duumviri perduellionem judicent. "Let the duumviri try the question of perde-lliio." Some editors, both here and in the previous passage, give judicare the meaning of "to pass sentence," than which nothing can be more erroneous. The trial of course must come first.—Provocavit. The accused had a right of appeal from the decision of the duumviri directly to the people in the comitia.—Si vincent. The duumviri, on the appeal, come before the assembly of the people as a party to the case.—Cupit omnubito. This meant that he was devoted as a victim to the gods below.—Infelici arbori suspendito. "Hang him on the accursed tree," i.e., on the gallows. Observe that infelici arbori is the locative case, like humi. Many commentators render infelici here by the epithet "barren," but that is not the idea intended to be conveyed by the term in its present connection. It is rather the fatal tree, the tree of punishment, the tree on which is suspended an offender deemed accursed. Compare our English expression, "the gallows-tree."—Verberato. Scourging of course preceded hanging, but as being a matter of minor importance, it is here placed after.—Pomerium. Consult chap. xlv.

26, 27. Qui se absolvcre, etc. They gave the accused a trial as a matter of course, but the only matter they were called upon to determine was whether he had committed the act or not. The letter of the law allowed of no justification or extenuation of the fact. It left no alternative to the judge. Hence the force of innoxius here, "a guiltless person," i.e., one justified in the act, or without malice prepense. When, however, the question came before the assembled people on appeal, then the accused would be allowed full scope in his defence.

28–38. Tibi perduellionem judico. "I decide the question of perduellio against thee." More freely, "I adjudge thee guilty of perduellio."—Injiciebatque laqueum. "And was in the act of adjusting the rope."—Auctore Tullo. "Tullus being the adviser."—Ita de provocatione, etc. "Upon this it was contended respecting the appeal before the people," i.e., whether it should be received favorably or unfavorably.—Patrio jure in filium, etc. "He would have punished his son by a father's right." By the laws of Romulus a father had the power of life and death over his children.—Orbum liberis. "Childless."—Pila Horatia. That is, "the javelins of Horatius." Pila is here the plural of pilum, and not, as some suppose, the nominative singular of pilæ, "a pillar." There was a pillar erected, indeed, to which the spoils of the Curiatii were fixed as a trophy; but it was from the arms and not from the pillar that the place derived its name. Compare the language of Livy, a little farther on, in this same chapter, "inter illa pilae et spolia hostium," where pilae of course is the neuter plural. The position of the Pila Horatia was in the Forum, but the particular locality cannot be ascertained.

39–46. Huncine. Not to be joined in construction with eum ("this same one"), but the latter is subsequently brought in for the sake of emphasis. In translating, begin the sentence with huncine by itself. "This one here whom . . . him can you bear to see," etc.—Sub furca. "Beneath the fork." The furca was a piece of wood, in the form of the capital letter lambda (Λ), which was placed upon the shoulders of the offender, whose hands were tied to it. Besides being employed in the case of slaves, it was used in the ancient mode of capital punishment among the Romans; the criminal being tied to it and then scourged.—Quod, tam deforme spectaculum. "Which, so shocking a spectacle." Observe the opposition between the relative and what follows.—I, lictor, colliga manus, etc. A species of indignant parody of the language of the sentence. Hence the more solemn forms, obnubito, etc., are not employed.—Modo. "Provided only (it be done)."

50–57. Ipsius. The accused.—Parem in omni periculo. "The same in every danger," i.e., equally intrepid, whether in the battle-field or when on trial for his life.—Quam jure causa. "Than from the justice of his cause."—Lueretur. " Might be atoned for."—Pecunia publica. "At the public charge." Money was given to him out of the public treasury for the expiatory sacrifices.—Tradita sunt. "Have been handed down."—Transmissio per viam tigillo. "A small beam having been laid across the path."—Sororium tigillum. "The sister's beam." It appears to have been in a narrow street leading down from the Carinae to the Vicus Cyprius. As it is mentioned in the Notitia, this monument, connected with one of Rome's early legends, must have existed down to the 5th century. We learn from Dionysius (iii., 22) and Festus (p. 297, ed. Müll.) that on each side of it stood an altar, one to Juno Sororia, the other to Janus Curiatius.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1–12. Invidia vulgi. "The dissatisfaction of the populace."—Vanum ingenium corrupt. "Warped the naturally fickle mind," i.e., from the allegiance which he now owed to the Romans.—Recta consilia. "A straightforward policy."—Pravis. "By a crooked one." Supply consiliis.—Ex edicto. "By proclamation." The part which he reserves for himself and the Albans is to play the traitors to Tullus in the hour of need, wearing meanwhile the mask of friendship to Rome.—Suis per speciem societatis, etc. "He reserves for his own people treachery, under the mask of alliance."—Colonia Romana. As regards this pretended colony, consult note at the end of chap. xiv.—Pacto transitionis Albanorum. "Under a compact of desertion on the part of the Albans."

14–23. Accito. "Having been summoned." (Zumpt, § 180.)—Anienem. The Anio, now the Teverone, was a celebrated river of Latium, and one of the most considerable of the tributaries of the Tiber. The more ancient form of the nominative is Anien, whence in the oblique cases Anienis, etc. Dionysius uses 'Anīνες, -ηρος.—Ad confluences. "At the confluence of the rivers." Supply annes. The Anio and Tiber are meant.—Et in acie. "In the line of battle also." The et implies that the Veientes, as in crossing the Tiber they had Fidenæ on their left, so were they similarly marshalled in the battle-field also, since the Fidenates occupied the left wing.—Albano non plus animi, etc. "The Alban had not more courage than fidelity."—Suc-cedit. "Moves upward." Compare the phrases, succedere tumulum, succedere muros, etc.—Ubi satis subisse sese ratus est. "When he thought that he had ascended far enough," i. e., not to be pursued.— Erigit totam aciem. "He halts his whole army." Crevier compares with this the French faire alé, or formerly haut, because soldiers then stand upright, and hold their spears erect. The common but erroneous translation of the present clause is, "He marches his whole army up." Hunter, who advocates it, has a most unfortunate note on the subject. He supposes that Mettius himself first withdrew to a rising ground (sensim succedit), and when he had himself gained a sufficient height he made his whole army also march up!

24–32. Qua. "In whatsoever direction," i. e., on whatsoever side.
—Rem. "The decision of the affair."—Inclinare vires. "To bend his strength."—Esse. Historical infinitive, for erat.—Salios. These were called Salii Collini, Agonales, or Agonenses, because they performed their ceremonies and had their chapel on the Colline hill (the same as the Quirinal, or at least a part of it), previously called the Agonal hill. The Salii instituted by Numa, who were different from these, were called Palatini, because they performed their ceremonies and had their chapel on the Palatine hill.—Eidem imperat. The ordinary reading is idem, referring to the king. We have preferred, however, the conjecture of Gronovius, eidem, as referring to the horseman.

85–45. Id rati. "Having supposed that to be the case."—Et au-diverant, etc. "The Fidenates had both heard what was thus spoken with a loud voice, and a large portion of them understood Latin, since they had been added as colonists unto the Romans," i. e., had become intermingled with Romans in the colony.—Decursus. "By a sudden descent."—Intercluderentur. The battle was fought to the south of Fidenæ, so that they could have been cut off by the Albans.—Ab effusa fuga. The river prevented them from flying in disorder; it was so close to them that they had not time to scatter; but still their flight led to it.—Inter fugae pugnaque consilium. That is, while wavering between the resolution whether to fight or flee.
CHAPTER XXVIII.

4–12. Quod bene vertut. "What (he prays) may turn out favorably." A usual form of words, in praying for anything to succeed.—Sacrificium lustrale. The same probably with the suovetaurilia, mentioned in chap. xliv.—Illuxit. "Light dawned." Taken impersonally. Ciceronian usage is the other way.—Ab extremo. "At the outermost part of the camp."—Proximi constitere. They thus fell into the trap prepared for them by Tullus, namely, that they should stand nearest, and thus be surrounded by the Roman legions.—Ex composito. "According to previous arrangement."

15–20. Fuit, quod. "There was a reason that." Literally, "There was that, on account of which."—Proditione. "The treachery."—Nam ne vos falsa, etc. "For, that a false opinion may not influence you."—Subiere. "Marched up."—Nec imperium illud meum, etc. "Nor was that any command of mine, but a stratagem and the pretense of a command."

24–28. Nec. "But . . . not."—Si quo ego inde, etc. "If I had wished to draw off my army to any direction from that quarter." Declinare is here used transitively.—Itineris hujus. "Of this march."—Audeat deinde talia aliis. "Let another hereafter dare similar things."

30–40. Centuriones. They had received previous instructions.—Peragit. "Goes through with."—Quod bonum, faustum, etc. Compare chap. xvii., line 32.—Civitatem. "The privileges of citizenship." The Greek πόλις.—Rem publicam. "State."—Ut ex uno, etc. Compare chap. vi.—Albana res. "The Alban power."—In variis voluntatibus. "Amid conflicting sentiments."—Vivo tibi ea disciplina, etc. "That lesson would have been taught by me to you while still alive."

42–51. At tu, etc. There is no need here of at. It is employed, however, sometimes pleonastically to express opposition, especially after si and its compounds, and thus subserves the purposes of emphasis. (Zumpt, § 756.)—Animum inter Fidenatem, etc. "A mind divided between the interests of the Fidenates and the Romans."—Quadrigis. This term means here "a team of four horses," not a chariot drawn by them.—In currus earum, etc. "He ties Mettius, extended at full length, to their respective chariots."—Lacerum in utroque curru, etc. "Bearing off the mangled body on each chariot, where the limbs had adhered to the cords," i. e., had been tied by them.—Primum ultimumque, etc. "That was the first and last punishment among the Romans, of a character little mindful of the laws of humanity."—In aliis. "In other cases."
CHAPTER XXIX.

1-12. Inter haec, etc. The peculiarly elegant and graphic description of the demolition of Alba, given in the present chapter, has always been deservedly admired.—Præmissi. "Sent on before," i.e., to surprise the city in the absence of its defenders.—Pavor. "A panic."—Effractis. "Having been burst open."—Cursus. "The rush."—Silentium triste, etc. These words are not synonymous. Their silence did not proceed from quietness, but deep sorrow and affliction, and their grief was not expressed in shrieks or lamentations, but buried deep in their breasts.—Deficiente consilio. "All judgment failing them."—Ultimum illud. "For that last time." Observe the emphatic employment of the pronoun, and that illud, not hoc, is used, because we have here a narrative of past events.

13-20. Ut vero jam equitum, etc. "When, however, the shouts of the horsemen, commanding them to depart, grew now more urgent."

—Ultimis urbis partibus. It is better to connect these words with dirueabantur than with audiebatur, as would appear from the next words, ex distantibus locis. The work of demolition commenced on the outskirts of the city; and the crash, heard from that quarter, conveyed the news.—Raptim, quibus quisque poterat, elatis. "Having hastily brought out whatever articles each was able." A Græcism, for raptim elatis iis, quae quisque poterat efferre. The infinitive is omitted, and the relative properly depending on this infinitive is put by attraction in the same case with the omitted antecedent iis. Compare a similar construction in iv., 39: Quibus poterat sauciis ductis secum.

22-26. Obsessa. "Beset." From obsido, -ère.—Egressis urbem. The preposition here in composition has merely an adverbial force, and the compounded verb takes at once the accusative.—Romanus. "The Roman." More graphic than Romanus exercitus would have been.—Quadrimgentorum annorum opus. Livy agrees with Virgil, who counts three hundred years from the foundation of Alba to the time of Romulus (Æn., i., 272), and Rome, according to the received chronology, had now stood one hundred years. Dionysius, however, makes Alba to have flourished four hundred and eighty-seven years. On this whole subject consult Heyne, Excurs., iii., ad Virg. Æn., xii.; Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 205.—Excidio ac ruinis dedit. The details of the Alban war are obviously poetical, but the destruction of Alba itself may probably be received as an historical event, though there is much reason to suppose that it was the work of the combined forces of the Latins, and that Rome had comparatively little share in its accomplishment. The city was never rebuilt, its temples alone had been spared, and these appear to have been still existing in the time of Augustus. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 350, seq.)

CHAPTER XXX.

2–8. Caelius additum urbi mons. The Caelian hill is said to have derived its name from the Etrurian leader Cæles Vibenna, who came to Rome to lend aid, at the invitation of either Romulus or one of the early Roman kings, and settled here with his troops. Compare Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 381, seq.; Müller, Etrusker, vol. i., p. 116, seqq. —Frequentius. "More thickly." —Eam sedem Tullus regis capis, etc. Other accounts, however, represent him as dwelling on the Velia. (Cic., Rep., ii., 31.) —Tullios. Dionysius (iii., 29) mentions the Julii, instead of the Tullii, but, as Zumpt remarks, Livy has already, in chap. xvi., spoken of a Julius Proculus as a man of influence in the state. The Julian gens, therefore, though itself of Alban origin, was earlier than the time of Tullus, and the true reading here is undoubtedly Tullios. —Templumque ordini, etc. "And, as a consecrated place of meeting for the order, (thus) augmented by himself, he built a senate-house, which was called the Hostilian even to the time of our fathers." Templum means generally any place set apart and hallowed by the augurs for either religious or state purposes. The curia Hostilia was burned down before the time of Livy, and in consequence of some prodigies that occurred in the year before Caesar's assassination it was resolved to rebuild it. At the time when this decree was made Caesar was pontifex maximus, but he did not live even to begin the new structure. Augustus subsequently erected it, and it was named after its new founder Curia Julia. (Smith, Dict. Geogr., vol. ii., p. 789.)

11, 12. Equitum decem turmas. "Ten troops of equites." The turma consisted at first of thirty, afterwards of thirty-two men. The number here added, then, was three hundred, so that now the equites consisted of six hundred men.—Explet. "He recruited." —Eodem supplemento. "From the same source of supply," i.e., the Albans.—Scripsit. "Enrolled."

13–17. Hac fiducia virium. For harum fiducia virium. —Secundum Etruscos. "Next to the Etrurians." —Feroniae fainum. The temple of Feronia was in southern Etruria, at the foot of Mount Soracte, within the territory of Capena, and had a sacred grove attached to it. In process of time a town grew up around. Feronia appears to have been a Sabine goddess (Varro, L. L., v., 74), and hence the festivals at her shrine seem to have been attended especially by the Sabines, though the sanctuary itself was in the Etrurian territory, and dependent upon the neighboring city of Capena. Great numbers of people attended the annual festival of the goddess, not only for religious objects, but as a kind of fair for the purposes of trade, a custom which seems to have prevailed at all similar meetings.—Mercatu frequenti. "In a crowded market."—In lucum confugisse. "Had fled for refuge into the grove (of the asylum)." Compare chap. viii. These were offenders against justice, whom the Romans had refused to deliver up. [Madvig suggests that servos has dropped out before suos, and introduces it into his text; but Dionysius describes those who took refuge as φυγάδας, "exiles," and says that slaves were not received into the asylum.]

19–27. Haud parum memores. "Remembering well."—Circumspicere et ipsi, etc. That is, as the Romans had been strengthened by the forces of Tatius and the accession of the Albans, they too looked about for foreign aid.—Residuas bellorum iras. "The angry feelings still remaining from former wars."—Et apud vagos quosdam, etc. "And with some stragglers also from the indigent populace pay had its weight." The voluntarii were from the upper classes of the Veientes, the vagi from the rabble of the city.—Publico auxilio. Assistance from the government of Veii.—Nam de ceteris minus mirum est. That is, it is less surprising that the rest of the Etrurians, who had no quarrel with the Romans, did not aid the Sabines.—Pacta cum Romulo indutiarm fides. It is probable that on this occasion the truce was renewed by Tullus.

28–34. Verti in eo. "To turn on this."—Occupat transire. "Is the first to pass over." Consult note on chap. xiv., line 15.—Ad silvam Malitosam. "At the forest called Malitiosa." Compare Dionysius (iii., 33): τὴν Όλην καλουμένην κακούργον. This forest lay in the Sabine territory, and received its name probably from its being infested by robbers.—Ubi et pedum, etc. "Where by the strength also of the infantry, it must be allowed, but (especially) by their recently augmented cavalry, the Roman army proved far superior." Ceterum for sed is frequently used in prose, as Zumpt remarks (§ 349), after Cicero's time.—Constat. "Be maintained."—Nec fuga expicari. "Nor could flight be made." Explicare here properly means, "to bring into definite shape or condition," a signification arising from the literal one "to unfold." Compare Scheller's explanation of the present clause: "die Flucht konnte nicht zu Stande gebracht werden."

CHAPTER XXXI.

4–16. Lapidibus pluisse. "That it had rained stones." Literally, "with stones." Pluo takes also the accusative. Thus, "Sanguinem pluisse senatus nuntiatum est." (Cic., Div., ii., 27.)—In conspectu. "In their sight."—Grandinem glomeratam. "The rounded hail." [Caelo. "From heaven." See bk. xxii., chap. i., line 32. This use of the ablative without a preposition is poetical.]—Visi etiam audire. "They thought also that they heard." Literally, "They seemed (to themselves) to have heard." Compare chap. xxiii., line 31.—Aut susceperant. "Had either taken up."—Novendiale sacrum publice susceptum est. "A festival of nine days was publicly instituted." The term Novendiale is also applied to the sacrifice performed nine days after a funeral.—Quandocunque. For quandocunque.

18–25. Pestilentia laboratum est. "They were afflicted by a pestilence."—Pigritia. "A disinclination."—Ab armis. "From arms." The succeeding preposition, a, changes to the meaning of "by."—Longinquus morbo. "With a lingering malady."—Spiritus illi feroce. "That fierce spirit of his."—Obnoxius degerat. "Passed his time a slave to." Degere is here equivalent to vitam agere, and is commonly used by the poets only.—Religionibus. "With religious scruples."

26–34. Eum statum rerum requirentes. "Seeking again for that state of things," i. e., wishing to recur to it.—Unam opem. "The only relief."—Volventem. "Turning over."—Commentarios. Compare chap. xx., line 18.—Jovi Elicio. Consult note on chap. xx., line 29.—Operatum. The supine, not the participle as Weissenborn makes it. Operari is a word particularly used to signify the performance of sacred rites.—Initum aut curatum. "Undertaken or conducted."—Nullam caelestium speciem. "No appearance of objects sent from on high."—Solicitati prava religionem. "Offended at the mismanagement of the rite." Salverte has some curious remarks on this subject, in connection with the knowledge which the ancients would seem to have possessed of electrical phenomena, and the means of rendering them in some degree harmless. According to this view, Tullus was killed by an accumulation of electric fluid drawn down by conductors. Consult Anthon's Class. Dict., s. v. Elicius, and compare chap. xx., line 29.—Conflagrasse. There was a tradition that Tullus was slain by Ancus Martius, and his palace burned. (Dionys., iii., 35.)

CHAPTER XXXII.

1–12. Res ad patres redierat. "The government came back to the fathers," i. e., devolved again upon the senators, as it had after the death of Romulus.—Auncum Martium regem. Here we see, as Niebuhr remarks, the practice plainly apparent of taking the kings by turn from the Ramnes or original Latin population, and the Quirites, or Sabines added under Tatius.—Patres fuere auctores. Compare chap. xvii., line 28; chap. xxii., line 4.—Regis nepos. Consult note on chap. xx., line 19. —Ab una parte. "In one particular." More literally, "From on one side."—Religionibus. "The rites of religion."—Prae cultis. "Improperly performed."—Longe antiquissimum. "By far most important." The literal idea is, a thing that should take priority before all others. We have a similar usage in the Greek πρεσβύτερον and πρεσβύτατον.—Omnia ea ex commentariis, etc. "He orders the pontiff to exhibit all of them in public, transferred from the king's commentaries to a white tablet," i. e., to transcribe an account of the true mode of celebrating these rites, from the sacred books of Numa, on a white tablet or more, and fix them up in public. Among the Romans, the album was either a white material or a material whitened; and of course the writing would be of a different color. According to some authorities, however, it was so called because the writing was in white letters.—Pontificem. The pontifex maximus is meant. Some editions insert maximum here. The epithet maximus, however, is not properly found applied to him earlier than in book ii., chap. ii.

20–23. Medium erat in Anco ingenium. "There was in Ancus a genius of a middle kind."—Memor. "Partaking of that." More literally, "mindful of."—Cum in novo, etc. "(As) in the case of both a new, and particularly an uncivilized people."—Etiam, quod illi contigisset otium, etc. "He also (believed) that, as regarded the tranquillity which had fallen to the lot of the other, this he himself would not be likely easily to maintain, without suffering insult: that his patience was tried, and when tried was contemned; and that the times were fitter for a Tullus-king than a Numa." Observe that illa refers to Numa.

27–29. Proderentur. "Should be given forth," i. e., promulgated.—Jus descripsit. "He copied the form," i. e., borrowed it. Jus is the legal and established form or ceremony used in doing anything; carmen, a few sentences after, means the language or words used in going through it.—Æquiculis. The Æquiculi inhabited the mountainous district around the upper valley of the Anio. They would appear to have been the same people with the Æqui, though in the usage of later times the former name was restricted to the inhabitants of the more central and lofty valleys of the Apennines, while those who approached the borders of the Latin plain, and whose constant wars with the Romans have made them so familiarly known to us, uniformly appear under the name of Æqui.—Fetiales. Ancus merely assigned new functions to this order, which had been established before. Compare chap. xxxiv., line 16.

31–40. Capite velato filo. "His head being encircled with a fillet (the fillet is of wool)."—Audiat fias. "Let the justice of heaven hear."
The divine law had been violated by the transgressors.—Populi Romani. The king is not mentioned, since no declaration of war could be made without a decree of the people.—Dedier. Old form for dedit. Mihi expono. Some editions have populo Romano mihique; others nuncio populi Romani mihi; but these are evidently mere interpolations.—Siris. For siveris, another old form.—Pauuis verbis carminis, etc. "A few words in the formula, and in expressing the oath having been changed."

41-48. Quos exposcit. The men alone are mentioned here, the things demanded being implied, or, in other words, the worthier gender, to adopt the language of the grammarians, being employed in preference.—Tot enim sollemnes sunt. "For so many are customary."—Caelestes. The gods are here classified, as they cannot well be all named individually.—Inferni. The more usual form is inferi.—Majores natv. "The fathers."—Cum his nuntius reedit. "With these (announcements) the messenger returns." Observe that cum here merely marks accompanying circumstances. (Zumpt, § 307.)

49-53. Quarum rerum, etc. "With respect to the articles of property, the litigations, the causes of complaint, about which the pater patratus of the Roman people and the Quirites has conferred with the pater patratus of the Prisci Latini, which things they have neither given up nor settled, nor at all acted upon." The expression Populi Romani Quiritium, where et is to be supplied, has already been explained. (Consult note on chap. xiii., line 18.)—Priscis Latiniis. Niebuhr makes Prisci, in the appellation Prisci Latini, to have been the designation of a separate people, some early Italian race, and Prisci Latini to have been the same as Prisci et Latini; but this opinion is now generally regarded as untenable, and the form in question to mean merely "Old Latins." (Consult Smith, Dict. Geogr., vol. ii., p. 142.)—Quas res nec dederunt, etc. Observe the employment here of res to express what has been indicated by rerum, litium, and caussa-rum separately.

55-57. Puro pioque duello, etc. "I think that they ought to be demanded by a fair and regularly declared war, and therefore I consent and vote with those who think so."—Duello. Old form for bello.—Bellum erat consensum. "War was decreed by common consent," i.e., the vote of the majority was as effectual as if all were unanimous. Zumpt, regarding this as an unusual form of expression, thinks it probable that Livy is quoting from some old document. The ordinary construction, as he remarks, would be consensum erat de bello, or consensum decretum erat de bello. Some editions read bellum erat consensu, but the best manuscripts are against this.
60–70. Puberibus. "Grown-up persons."—Quod populi Priscorum Latinorum, etc. "Forasmuch as the states of the Prisci Latini and the men of the Prisci Latini have acted, have offended against, etc." From the more general designation of populi he passes to the more special one of homines.—Censuit, consensit, conscivit. "Have given their opinion, have consented, have voted in accordance."—Ob eam rem. "Therefore."—Id ubi dixisset. The subjunctive of repeated action, for Livy is here describing what was the regular course of proceeding whenever the Romans declared war.—Posterī acceperunt. When the war with Pyrrhus broke out, the custom of hurling a spear within the confines of the foe could not be observed in the usual manner; wherefore a captive soldier of Pyrrhus's was made to buy a piece of ground near the temple of Bellona, which symbolized the territory of the enemy, and was called ager hostilis. Into this the spear was flung on this as well as on all subsequent occasions, whenever war was to be declared against a people whose country lay beyond the sea. (Serv., ad Æn., ix., 58.)

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1–9. Sacrorum. Those namely which appertained to the regal office.—Flaminibus. Consult note on chap. xx., line 3.—Politorium. The situation of this early city is quite uncertain. Gell places it at La Giostra, on the right of the Via Appia, about ten miles from Rome.—Et cum circa Palatinum, etc. "And since the Sabines had filled the Capitoline and citadel, the Albans the Cælian mount, around the Palatine," i. e., places lying around the Palatine.—Aventinum. This neuter form for Aventinus (scil. mons) occurs again in the present chapter, and also in iii., 67: "Adversus nos Aventinum capitur." Dionysius frequently calls it τὸ Ἀβέντινον.

10–16. Tellenis. Tellenae is said by Nibby to answer to the modern La Giostra, where Gell places the site of Politorium. The name of this city appears again in B.C. 493, among the confederate cities of the Latin league.—Ficana. This place was situated on the Via Ostiensis, eleven miles from Rome, and immediately adjoining the Tiber.—Novi cives. In this way the plebeian order gradually arose, at first under the control of a ruling class, or aristocracy (the patricians), but afterwards forming an integral portion of the state.—Omni bello Latino Medulliam compulso. "The whole war having been concentrated at Medullia." Literally, "having been driven together to Medullia." Dionysius makes this place a colony of Alba. Its site is unknown.—Marte incerto, varia victoria. "In doubtful conflict, with varied success." The two ideas are so intimately connected that there is no need of any connecting conjunction.
20–23. Omnis copis coniuris. "Having made a vigorous effort with all his forces."—Acie. "In a pitched battle." Dionysius says he took Medullia at this same time.—Ad Murcia. "Near the temple of Murcia." Supply aedem, which is frequently omitted with the names of divinities. Murcia was a surname of Venus at Rome, and this appellation is said to have been the same as Myrtea (from myrtus, "a myrtle"), indicating the fondness of the goddess for that tree. There is said to have been a myrtle grove in front of her temple at the foot of the Aventine.

24, 25. Janiculum. This hill lay across the Tiber, and began at that point opposite the Campus Martius where the river reaches farthest to the west, whence it stretched in a southerly direction to a point opposite the Aventine.—Quando. "At any time." For aliquando.—Arx hostium. "A stronghold for the foe." The enemy here particularly meant are the Etrurians, against whom the Janiculum formed a natural outpost.—Non muniri solum, etc. The manuscripts have non muro solum, which all the editions follow. But, as Duker remarks, we must either suppose something to have been dropped from the text, or else must supply cingi after muro by a kind of zeugma from conjungi which follows farther on, since there is no proof that the Janiculum was joined at this time by a wall to the city. Neither of the suppositions, however, thus started by Duker, is at all satisfactory, and we have preferred therefore to introduce the very ingenious conjecture of Scheller, namely, muniri in place of muro. This, moreover, would seem to derive probability from the language of Dionysius, who merely employs the term ἵειξας.

26, 27. Ponte sublicio. "By the Sublician bridge," i. e., the pile-bridge. This structure, the oldest and one of the most frequently mentioned of the Roman bridges, took its name from the sublice, or wooden piles on which it rested. It was considered of such religious importance that it was under the special care of the pontifices, and was repaired from time to time even down to the reign of Antoninus Pius. (Capitol., Ant., chap.viii.) Nay, it would seem to have existed in the time of Constantine, since it is mentioned in the Notitia. In consequence, it is said, of the delay and difficulty experienced in breaking it down in the well-known feat of Horatius Cocles, it was reconstructed without nails, in such a manner that every beam could be removed and replaced at pleasure. (Plin., H.N., xxxvi., 15, 23, § 100.) It was considered so sacred that no repairs could be made in it without previous sacrifice conducted by the pontifex in person.—Quiritium quoque fossa, etc. "The Quirites' ditch, moreover, no trifling defence on those quarters which were more level (and consequently easier) to be approached (than the rest)." Aditu, as Döring remarks, is the supine. Observe here the force of the preposition a, "on the side of," "in the quarter where."

29-37. Rebus auctis. "The state being augmented."—Discrimine recte an perperam, etc. "The distinction of right and wrong being confounded." Literally, "of a thing done rightly or wrongly."—Carcer. This was what was called the Carcer Mamertinus, and from the language of the text would seem to have been more a place of punishment than of mere imprisonment. It is still to be seen near the arch of Severus, under the church of S. Giuseppe dei Falegnami. —Silva Mesia. Situated probably on the right bank of the Tiber, between Rome and the sea-coast. Pliny notices it as abounding in dormice (H. N., viii., 58, 83, § 225).—Ostia. Deriving its name from its situation at the mouth of the river. It was sixteen miles distant from Rome.—Salinae. These salt-works for a long time continued to supply both Rome itself and the neighboring country in the interior with that necessary article.—Ædes Jovis Feretrii. Compare chap. x.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1-4. Lucumo. In Etrurian Lauchme, to which the contracted Latin form Lucmo closely corresponds. Livy mistakes it for a proper name; but the term is said to have meant in Etrurian "a chief," or "noble," and to have been employed to designate a member of the ruling caste, or aristocracy, in whose hands lay all the power of the nation. So that it would be thus analogous to the Roman term "patrician" in its earliest sense. The individual, therefore, referred to in the text was not, as Livy makes him, named "Lucumo," but was one of the chiefs or nobles in the Etrurian city whence he came; in other words, he was a Lucumo or Lauchme. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 123.)—Tarquinii. Tarquinii was one of the oldest and most important cities of Etruria, situated about four miles from the coast of the lower sea, and fourteen miles from Centumcellæ, or the modern Civita Vecchia. It was the metropolis of the twelve cities which composed the Etruscan league, just as Alba was represented as the metropolis of the Latin league.

5-9. Demarati Corinthii filius erat. This Greek origin of the Tarquin family is purely fabulous. The story of the Tarquins has evidently been drawn from the works of several popular poets, and there can be little doubt that one at least of these writers must have become acquainted with Greek literature and history from the Greek colonies in Southern Italy. Hence the Corinthian or Grecian feature in the present legend. Demaratus was a merchant-noble of Corinth, and one of the Bacchiadæ. He fled from Corinth when the power of his clan was overthrown by Clytemnestra, about B.C. 657, and is said to have settled at Tarquinia. On this whole subject of the Greek character of the story of the Tarquins, compare the remarks of Macaulay (Lays of Ancient Rome, p. 80, seq., Lond. ed.).—Arrhes. More correct than Arrmus. In Etrurian Arrath, and said to be an appellation for "a younger son," the elder being called Lar or Lars. In Greek, the form is Αἰβρα or Αἰβροῦς.

12-18. Ignorans nascere vetum ferre. "Not being aware that his daughter-in-law was pregnant." Venter and uterum are often figuratively used with the signification of partus.—In nullam sortem honorum. "To no share of his property."—Egerio. From egere.—Animos facerent. "Gave him elevated notions."—Aurit. "Increased this feeling." Supply animos.—Tanquaill. In Etrurian Tanquyil. Her genuine Roman name is said to have been Caia Cecilia.—Et quae haud facile, etc. "And who could not easily brook that the condition into which she had married should be lower than that in which she had been born," i.e., that her husband should be inferior to her family. Observe that quo is here equivalent to in quo. The manuscripts erroneously read quum for quo, and illi nupsisset for innupsisset. The reading which we have given is founded on the conjectures of some of the ablest scholars, and is in every way preferable.

19-21. Spermentibus Etruscis, etc. This is based of course on the story of his foreign or Grecian origin; but as that is untrue, we must fall back upon the theory of Niebuhr, who supposes that the ruling houses of Etruria were frequently exposed to those violent revolutions by which an oligarchy is everywhere threatened, even from the midst of its own body, and that in one of these political commotions the whole house of the Tarquins were driven into exile. (Niebuhr, R. H., vol. i., p. 123.)—Indignatam. "This unmerited treatment."—Ingenitae. "The innate."—Honoratum. "Advanced to honors."

22-29. Roma est ad id, etc. "Rome appeared suited for that purpose before all other places." With est visa supply apta, and observe that potissimum is here equivalent to prae ceteris.—In novo populo, etc. We must conceive volvebat in animo, or something similar, to be understood here.—Ex virtute. "The result of merit."—Sabina matre. As having been the daughter of Numa.—Nobilemque una imagine, etc. "And was noble by the single image of Numa." He could only produce the single image of Numa among his ancestry, or, in other words, the nobility of his line only commenced with his maternal grandfather. Livy applies to these remote times the language of his own days. The jus imaginum did not come in until the admission of the plebeians to the consulship, B.C. 366, though the practice of having imagines existed probably as a custom among the patricians some time before.—Amigrant. The verb amigrare occurs nowhere else, but still it is formed after the analogy of avolare, etc., and is given by the manuscripts.

30–32. Carpento. "In a chariot." [Carpento. The more regular construction in prose is with a preposition, but the simple ablative is not uncommon in Livy in imitation of the poets, the designation of place being regarded somewhat in the light of manner.] The carpentum was one of the earliest Roman carriages of which we find mention. Properly speaking, it was the vehicle in which Roman matrons were allowed to be conveyed in the public festal processions. Of its form we know little. It is represented on a medal struck in honor of the elder Agrippina, after her death. It had two wheels, and was commonly drawn by a pair of mules, more rarely by oxen or horses. Livy uses the term here to indicate a mere travelling-chariot, and, what is more, without any top, whereas on the medal just mentioned it has a richly adorned covering.—Suspensis demissa leniter alis. "Descending gently on poised pinions." Suspendere is used strictly of weighing in a balance; hence to hold up in the air, in a state of equilibrium, and is thus applied here to a bird poised in mid-air.—Velut ministerio divinitus missa. "As if sent by divine command to perform that office."

35–37. Perita, ut vulgo Etrusi, etc. The Etrurians were remarkably addicted to divination, and had reduced it to a complete system, but then this knowledge was confined entirely to the ruling caste, or Lucumones, to which Tanaquil belonged. These Etrurian chiefs were the persons from whom the young Roman nobles received instruction in this sacred science. Livy's language therefore must not be regarded as applying to the whole nation indiscriminately.—Excelsa et alta sperare. "To entertain high and lofty hopes."—Eam alitein, etc. "That such a bird had come from such a quarter of the sky, and the messenger of such a deity," i.e., of Jupiter, to whom the eagle was sacred. All these were omens of future greatness.—Circa summum culmen hominis, etc. "That it had exhibited an omen around the highest part of man; had lifted the ornament placed on the head of man."

41–48. L. Tarquinium Priscum. Niebuhr takes this surname, Priscus (a regular Latin one), and founds upon it one of his arguments to prove that the Tarquins were not of Etrurian, but of Latin origin. His arguments, however, have not much weight, and certainly are insufficient to refute the universally received belief of antiquity in the Etrurian origin of the Tarquins, which is moreover confirmed by the great architectural works undertaken in the time of the last Roman kings, works to which no Sabine or Latin town could lay claim, and which at that time could have been accomplished by the Etrurians alone.—Novitas. "The circumstance of his being a stranger."—Benigno adloguo, etc. "By a polite address, by courteousness in giving invitations, and by conciliating to himself through acts of kindness whomever he was able, he was continually aiding his own good fortune."

45-48. Notitiamque eam, etc. "And by discharging the duties of a courtier in the royal presence with good breeding and address, he had brought that acquaintance to the privileges of intimate friendship," i. e., he had improved it to such a degree as to be at length admitted to the privileges of the closest intimacy.—Per omnia expertus. "Having been tried in all things," i. e., in every trust.

CHAPTER XXXV.

5-8. Comitia regi creando. The dative of purpose or design. (Zumpt, § 665.)—Fierent. The employment of this term shows that the comitia were to be held by an interrex. These comitia were of course the curiata, and therefore plebis, in line 9, is to be taken in the sense of populi. Compare line 23.—Sub tempus. "Shortly before the time (for holding them)." Observe the force of sub in indicating time. (Zumpt, § 319.)—Ablegavit. "He sent out of the way." Ablegare means to send out of the way whatever may be an annoyance or impediment.—Ambitiose. "By actual canvassing." Livy in employing this term is thinking of later times.

10-15. Cum. "Saying." Supply diceret, the idea of which is contained in orationem, which precedes.—Et Tatium non ex peregrino, etc. This contains both a fuller explanation of non rem novam, etc., and also the reasons why it ought to appear surprising that Tatius and Numa were made kings, reasons which did not exist in his own case. —Ignarum urbis. In consequence of the retired life which he had previously led at Cures.—Ultrò. "Voluntarily (on their part)."

15-20. Ex quo sui potens fuerit. "From the time when he became his own master." Supply tempore. Some less correctly render this, "as soon as he became," etc., but ex quo is purposely employed here to denote not only the time of migration to Rome, but also the whole subsequent period.—Sub hæc pœnitendo magistro. "Under a master not to be objected to," i. e., under no contemptible instructor. Observe the Litotes. Pœnitiet, though an impersonal, has the participles pœnitens and pœnitendus. (Zumpt, § 230.) As regards the peculiar meaning of the verb itself here, consult note on chap. viii., line 9.—Obsequio et observantia. "In duty and loyalty."
25–27. Ambitia. "The ambitious feelings." The word has here its ordinary meaning, different from that of ambitiose in line 8.—

Centum in patres legit. It needs some explanation to show how Tarquin, being an Etrurian stranger, came to be chosen king of Rome. In all likelihood he belonged to the tribe of the Lucores, which had hitherto been held subordinate. For the Senate had been chosen only from the Ramnes and the Titites or Sabines. There were no Lucores in the Senate, except perhaps some few whom king Tullus had added from the Alban families which he settled on the Caelian hill. But of late the Lucores had been waxing in power. The Alban had been added to their ranks, and no doubt this addition had made them more Latin, more like the other Romans, and less like the Etrurians. It might well be, therefore, that Tarquin was able by their means to raise himself to kingly power. This power he soon began to use for the purpose of raising those by whom he himself had risen. Hence we find him choosing 100 fresh members into the Senate, who were all of the Lucerian tribe (Dionys., iii., 67).—Minorum gentium. "(Fathers) of the younger houses." The patres majorum gentium were those whose fathers were patricians under Romulus and Tatius.—Factio haud dubia regis. "Undoubtedly a faction of the king's." Compare preceding note.

29, 30. Appiolas. Appiolas must have been a place of some importance from what is said here of the spoils, since they furnished Tarquinius with the means of celebrating the Ludi Magni for the first time, while, according to Valerius of Antium, they supplied the funds with which he commenced the construction of the Capitol. (Val. Ant. ap. Plin., H. N., iii., 5, 9, § 70.) The site is quite uncertain, but Gell and Nibby place it at a spot about eleven miles from Rome and a mile to the south of the Appian Way.—Prædaque inde majore, etc. "And booty having been brought back thence, greater than what had been the fame of the war," i.e., greater than could have been expected from a war of so little notoriety. Supply the ellipsis as follows: ma-jore præda quam tanta præda fuisset quanta bellis fama fuerat.

32, 33. Tunc primum Circo, etc. The Circus Maximus was situated in a valley between the Palatine and Aventine hills, and was called Maximus as a distinction from the Flaminian and other similar buildings, which it far surpassed in extent and splendor. To Tarquinius Priscus tradition assigned the first building of a circus, on the site of which the Circus Maximus was afterwards erected. If ever there was a circus of Tarquinius, it may have been rebuilt after the destruction of the city by the Gauls. This edifice, whatever may have been its origin, was enlarged by Caesar, and embellished by Augustus and Tiberius. In the time of Nero it was burned down (Tac., Ann., xv., 35). Trajan repaired it; and under Antoninus it became—partially ruined, but was afterwards restored. — Loca divisa patribus, etc. No building of course existed at this time, but "spaces were merely parted off for the senators and equites," where they might each erect for themselves platforms from which to see the shows. These were called fori, from their resemblance to the deck of a ship. This course, with its surrounding scaffoldings, was termed circus, either because the spectators stood around (circus) to see the shows, or because the procession and races went round in a circuit. (Varr., L. L., v., 153, 154, ed. Müller.)

34–39. Spectavere furtis, etc. "They beheld the games, fork-shaped props supporting the platforms, which were in height each twelve feet from the ground."— Acciti. "Called in," i.e., sent for. — Sollemnes deinde annui, etc. "These games thenceforth continued regularly, recurring every year." Sollemnis has here the force of "recurring at stated intervals," that interval being a year.— Porticus tabernaeque. "Arcades and shops." In the public porticoes or arcades of Rome, which were exceedingly numerous and very extensive (as those around the Forum and the Campus Martius), a variety of business was occasionally transacted: we find that lawsuits were conducted there, meetings of the Senate held, goods exhibited for sale, etc.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

2–17. Interveni. "Obstructed."— Ac prohibere. "And stop them."— Trepidatum est. "There was a panic."— Spatio. "An interval."— Addere alias constituit. He wished to double the number of the equestrian centuries, and to name the three new ones after himself and two of his friends, not, as Livy says, to leave them distinguished by his own name merely.— Inaugurato. "After consulting the auguries." More literally, "after bringing the auguries to bear upon the case." Observe the force of in in composition, and that inaugurato is much stronger than the simple augurato.— Neque mutari, neque novum, etc. "That neither could anything be changed (in the existing constitution) nor anything new be established (therein) unless the birds should have given their sanction." In the case of the earlier Roman kings, we find the priesthood upon the best terms with the ruling power, being closely connected with it by the common interests of caste. But here, in the case of Tarquinius, a change of sentiment would appear to have taken place. This is made still more apparent by the words eludensque artem, "and ridiculing his art," which immediately follow.— Age dum, divini tu, etc. "Come, prithee, thou diviner, bring the auguries to bear, (and say) whether," etc. The pronoun tu is meant to denote contempt. Compare the English form of expression, "Mr. Diviner."
18–24. In augurio rem expertus. "Having tried the matter by augury."—Atqui. "Why."—Te novacula cotem discissurum. "That you (for instance) will be likely to cut through," etc., i.e., whether you could cut through.—Hae. A razor and whetstone which the king handed to the augur.—Aves tuae. "Those birds of yours." Ironical.—Capite velato. Compare note on chap. xviii., 27.—In comito. "In the comitium." The comitium was the place where the comitia were held.—Ad levam curiae fuit. Both statue and curia had disappeared before Livy's time.—Sitam fuisse. "Was deposited."

26, 27. Auguriis certe, etc. Whatever opinion may be entertained of the old legend, it is certain, says Livy, that the college of augurs, and the science of augury, exercised great influence in the state.—Concilia populi, etc. "Meetings of the people, assemblies of the centuries, the most important concerns of the state were put off," etc. By concilia populi are meant the comitia curiata. Compare Aul. Gell., xv., 27. "Is qui non universum populum, sed partem aliquam adesse juset, non comitia sed concilia edicare juset." And again the expression exercitus vocati (literally, "armies called forth") refers to the Roman custom of attending the Comitia centuriata. The whole people was conceived as an army (exercitus, or, according to the more ancient term, classis), and was therefore divided into two parts; the cavalry (equites), and infantry (pedites), though it is not by any means necessary to suppose that the people assembled in arms. (Compare Weissenborn, ad loc.)

30, 31. Numero tantum alterum adjectit. "He added as many more to the number," i.e., doubled the number. Alterum tantum is like the Greek τοσοῦν ἦςεν. Numerum is understood.—Ut mille et ducenti, etc. The three centuries which Tarquinius added were called the Ramnes, Titienses, and Luceres Postiores. It must be borne in mind that although to the three hundred equites of Romulus ten Alban turmae were added by Tullus Hostilius, making the number of equites 600, still the number of centuries was not increased, and each century therefore contained 200 men. Hence when Tarquinius brought in his new arrangement he doubled the 600 of Tullus Hostilius, and the three centuries of Ramnes, Titienses, and Luceres contained each 200 priori and 200 posteriores. The true number of the whole therefore is 1200. Some of the best manuscripts, it is true, give 1800, which has been adopted by most modern editors; but this number is opposed to Livy's previous account, and cannot be supported by the statement of Plutarch (Rom. 20), that, after the union with the Sabines, the equites were increased to 600; because the original 300 are spoken of as the representatives of the three tribes; whereas, according to Plutarch's account, the original 800 ought only to represent the Ramnes.
CHAPTER XXXVII.

4–13. Magnam vim lignorum. Dionysius (iii., 56) says dry wood and fagots (ξύλων αἵνε καὶ φυγάνων).—Et, plequeae, in ratibus, etc. "And when most of it (being placed) on floats, having been driven against, kept sticking amid the piles, they set the bridge on fire." This agrees with the account given by Dionysius, who speaks of boats and floats (σκάφας καὶ σφεδίας) employed on the occasion. Some editors less correctly punctuate as follows, in ratibus, impacta sublicias, cum haererent, making ratibus refer either to the timbers of the bridge, or to boats which formed the body of the structure, and connecting the term in construction with haererent. The bridge meant is the one built by the Sabines at the confluence of the Anio and Tiber.—Et fusis. A better reading than effusis.—Ad urbens cognita. "Being recognized at the city."—Insignem. "Plainly known."

18–26. Petabant. The imperfect here denotes the striving to attain an object.—Tenuere. "Reached them."—Vulcano. Tarquiniius had vowed that he would burn the spoils taken from the enemy in honor of this deity, because it had been through his agency that the bridge had been consumed and the victory thus won.—Gesturos. Along with the personal pronoun (se) the copula is commonly omitted with the infinitive future.—Tumultuario militis. "With a hastily levied soldiery." Soldiers were called tumultuarios, when there was no time to enlist them in the regular way, in consequence of the urgent state of affairs.—Perditis jam prope rebus. "Their affairs having now become almost ruined."

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1–3. Collatia. An ancient city of Latium, about ten miles east of Rome, between Gabii and the Anio. Virgil notices it as one of the colonies of Alba (Æn., vi., 774); a clear proof that he regarded it as a Latin town; and Dionysius also distinctly attributes it to that people. It is strange, therefore, that Livy speaks of it here as if it had been a Sabine city previous to its conquest by the Romans.—Egerius. He obtained in consequence of this the surname of Collatinus, which he transmitted to his descendants; and Lucius Tarquiniius, the husband of Lucretia, is represented as residing at Collatia at the time of the siege of Ardea. (Dionys., iv., 64.)—In praedicio. "Over the garrison."

6–13. Oratores. "Deputies."—Estne populus Collatinus in suæ potestate? "Are the people of Collatia under their own control?" i.e., are they independent, and able to act for themselves?—Utensilia.
This means generally anything for use. It may be here rendered "implements."—At ego recipio. "Well, then, I receive them."

14–18. Priscis Latinis bellum fecit. This was in fact a continuation of the war mentioned as having begun in chap. xxxv. —Ubi. For in quo.—Ad universae rei dimicationem. "To an action decisive of the main issue," i.e., an action involving in its issue the decision of the whole war.—Nomen Latinum. Consult note on chap. x., line 13.—Corniculum, Ficulea vetus, etc. All these places were situated beyond the Anio, between Rome and the Sabine territory. Of these Crustumum and Nomentum alone deserve some mention. Mention has already been made (chap. xi.) of a colony sent to the former place by Romulus, and yet, notwithstanding this tale of a colony, we find it next appearing as an independent city in the reign of Tarquinius Priscus, and as having been conquered by that monarch from the Prisci Latini. On this occasion, Dionysius tells us that it received a fresh accession of Roman colonists; but this did not secure its allegiance, and we will find it in the second book of Livy (chap. xix.) captured for the third time in the first years of the Roman republic, B.C. 499. Nomentum was the most important of all these towns, and was situated on the Sabine frontier, about four miles from the Tiber, and fourteen and a half from Rome, by the road which derived from it the name of Via Nomentana. The site is now occupied by a village which bears the name of La Mentana, a corruption of Civitas Nomentana.—Ad Latinos defecerant. Referring to Sabines who had revolted to the Latin league.

21–29. Ut non quietior, etc. "So that the people did not enjoy more rest at home than they had in warfare abroad."—Parat. He does not seem ever to have completed the work, and hence the employment of parare.—Aliasque interjectas, etc. "And the other valleys lying between the hills."—Quia ex planis locis, etc. "Since they did not easily carry off the waters from the flat grounds." The subject of evenebant is loca and convalles.—Cloacis fastigio in Tiberim ductis. "By sewers led down by a slope into the Tiber." Some read e fastigio, "from the high ground." The most famous of these was the Cloaca Maxima, or great drain, which ran from the valley of the Circus Maximus and joined the Tiber below the island. The purpose of this great work was to carry off the waters which collected in stagnant pools in the ground to the west of the Palatine hill, and which was known by the name of the Velabrum. So admirable is the workmanship that at the present day, though the stones are kept in their places simply by their own weight, without mortar or cement, not one block has been displaced in the part of it which has been explored, and a knife-blade can hardly be inserted between the joints. It is formed in a semicircular vault, measuring nearly fourteen feet in diameter. and consists of three concentric arches, each composed of hewn blocks of hard volcanic stone.—_Occupat fundamentis. _“He takes previous possession of by foundations,” i. e., before it could be appropriated to any other purpose. Observe the peculiar force of _occupo._

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1, 2. _Eo tempore,_ etc. The account of the early life and death of Servius Tullius is full of marvels, and cannot be regarded as possessing any title to a real historical narrative. According to the general tradition, he was of servile origin, and owed his elevation to the favor of the gods, and especially to the protection of the goddess Fortune, with whom he was always a favorite. His mother, Ocrisia, according to this same tradition, a female slave of the queen, and one of the captives taken at Corniculum, was offering cakes to the Lar, or household genius, when she saw in the fire on the hearth an apparition of the deity. Tanaquil, who understood the portent, commanded her to dress herself as a bride, and to shut herself up in the chamber. There she became pregnant by the god, whom some Romans maintained to be the household genius, and others Vulcan; the former supporting their opinion by the festival which Servius established in honor of the Lares, the latter by the tradition that the statue of Servius was placed in the temple of Fortune, and remained unhurt when the temple itself was once destroyed by fire. (Ovid., _Fast._, vi., 625 seqq.; Dionys., iv., 2.) There are two other legends respecting the birth of Servius which have more of an historical air, and may therefore be regarded as of later origin. One related that his mother was a slave from Tarquinii, that his father was a client of the king, and that he himself was brought up in the palace with the other household slaves, and waited at the royal table. (Cic., _De Rep._, ii., 21.) The other legend, which gives Servius a nobler origin, and which is therefore preferred by both Dionysius and Livy, is related by the latter at the close of the present chapter.

_Cui Servio Tullio fuit nomen._ The Etrurian tradition respecting Servius was entirely different from those just mentioned, and made him a native of Etruria. This tradition was related by the emperor Claudius, in a speech made upon the admission of some Lugdunensian Gauls into the Senate, and fragments of which are still preserved. In this speech Claudius says that, according to the Etrurian account, Servius was the faithful companion of Cæles Vibenna, and shared all his fortunes; that at last, being overpowered by a variety of disasters, he quitted Etruria with the remains of the army which had served under Cæles, went to Rome, and occupied the Cælian hill, calling it so after his former commander; that he exchanged his Etrurian name, Mastarn, for the Roman one of Servius Tullius, obtained the kingly power, and wielded it to the great good of the state.

10-16. Viden'. For videsne.—Tam humilis cultu educamus. "We are bringing up in so humble a style."—Scire licet. "Be assured (from this omen)." Literally, "It is permitted you to know."—Regiae adfictae. "Of our palace when plunged in distress." Literally, "Dashed to the ground."—Materiam ingentis, etc. "This source of great glory publicly and privately," i.e., both to the state and to our own family.—Liberum loco. "As a child of their own." Liberum for liberorum.—Quibus ingenia, etc. "By which men's minds are aroused to the proper supporting of exalted rank," i.e., to maintain exalted rank with becoming dignity.

17-29. Eventis facile, quod diis cordi esset. "What was pleasing to the gods easily happened." Observe here the employment of the subjunctive to express the views or sentiments of others. It is the same therefore as saying, "What was pleasing to the gods, as far as a mortal may presume to conjecture."—Evatis. "Turned out to be."—Ulla arte. "In any accomplishment."—Quacumque de causa. "From whatever cause (it was so conferred)."—Corniculo. Compare chap. xxxviii.—Ob unicam nobilitatem. "On account of her distinguished rank."—Prohibitam. "Having been exempted." [Domus. Madvig reads domi. Either word is equivalent to our conversational "at Tarquin's," while in domo, two lines below, is "in the house."]—Mulieres. The queen and the widow of Servius Tullius.—A parvo. "From infancy."—Fortunam matris. "That his mother's lot."

CHAPTER XL.

5-8. Pro indignissimo. "As the greatest indignity." The neuter of the superlative taken as a noun.—Tutoris fraude. They conceived that they had a hereditary right to the throne. They were probably urged on by their brethren the Titienses, and others of the older gentes, who could not bear that another upstart should be king.—Non modo vicina, etc. Observe that non modo is here for non modo non, and consult Zumpt, § 724 b.—Vicinæ. As Numa had been. Some read civico, following inferior manuscripts. This reading, however, as Zumpt remarks, is quite inadmissible, because if Tarquin had been born a citizen, the sons of Ancus would have had no reason to complain. It must also be remarked that Livy never uses the adjective civicus for civilis.—Sed ne Italice quidem stirpis. Alluding to his alleged Grecian origin.—Tum impensus iis, etc. Observe the change of construction, producing an anacoluthon, and converting filii, which precedes, into a nominative absolute.

11-20. Post centesimum fere annum. Though one hundred and thirty-eight years had elapsed since the death of Romulus, yet they limit the time to one hundred, to excite greater odium against Tarquin.—Salva. “Still living.”—Aurore. “To prevent.”—Sed et in-juria dolor, etc. Three distinct reasons are given for assassinating Tarquinius rather than Servius Tullius, and these are severally marked and distinguished by et—et—tum, the second only having quia. Sauppe’s suggestion, however, of et cum gravior is exceedingly ingenious and plausible.—Tum. “And then again.”

28-32. Quibus consueti erant, etc. “Each with the iron implements of agriculture, to which they were accustomed.” Observe that the ablative agrestibus ferramentis has the same force as if cum were expressed with it.—Appellarent. “Appealed unto.”—Vocati ad regem pergunt. “Being summoned before the king, they proceed thither.” Ad regem belongs to both vocati and pergunt.—In vicem. “By turns.” One after the other.—Ex composito. “According to previous concert.”—Dum intentus, etc. “While the king, attentive to him, turned himself entirely away (from the other), this other,” etc. Some manuscripts read adverteret.—Elatam securim in caput dejectit. “Raised his axe and drove it into his head.” Whenever one of the actions precedes the other, the perfect participle of both passive and deponent verbs must be used, although in English we prefer connecting them by “and,” and describing them as simultaneous. (Zumpt, § 635, note 1.)

CHAPTER XLI.

1-13. Moribundum. “In the agonies of death.” (Zumpt, § 248.)—Excepissent. “Had taken up.”—Illos fugientes. “The men who were endeavoring to escape.”—Populi mirantium. Observe that populi, here being taken collectively, is followed by mirantium, agreeing with it in the plural. This, however, is a bold and rare construction. Compare Zumpt, § 366.—Arbitros ejectit. “She thrust out all eye-witnesses.”—Si destitutae specis, etc. “In case hope abandon her, she provides other safeguards.”—Accito. “Called unto her.” From accio.—Ne socrum inimicis, etc. “Not to suffer his mother-in-law to be a laughing-stock to their enemies.” Socrum (from socerus, and this contracted for socerus.—Alienis manibus. "By the hands of others."

15–18. Hoc caput. "That this head of thine."—Illa celesatis flam-ma. Alluding to the lambent flame that played around his head when a boy.—Et nos peregrini regnavimus. That is, our example, who were foreigners like yourself, should also stimulate you.—Qui sis. "Who you are," i.e., what a noble prize you have long been striving for, and how fortune has thus far aided you.—Si tua re subita consilia torpent.
"If your plans are paralyzed by the suddenness of the occurrence."

19–21. Clamor impetusque. "The shouting and the rush."—Novam viam. This must not be confounded with the Nova via, built by Caracalla close to the Thermae Antoninianæ, or baths of Caracalla, and reckoned one of the handsomest in Rome. (Spart., Carac., 2.)—Ad
A very common ellipsis. Compare note on chap. xxxiii., line 23.

23–29. Sopitum suisse regem. "That the king was (merely) stunned."—Jam ad se redisse. "That he was already come to himself again."—Omnia salubria esse. "That all the symptoms were favorable."—Interim Servio Tullio, etc. "That he ordered the people meanwhile to be obedient to the authority of Servius Tullius."
The phrase dicto audientem esse alicui is of common occurrence, signifying to obey or hearken unto the mandate or authority of one. [Dicto audire is never used, nor dicto audientis without some part of the verb sum.]—Cum trabea. "With the trabea." The trabea was a toga ornamented with purple horizontal stripes. It was the robe of the kings, and descended from them to the consuls, by whom it was worn in public solemnities, such as opening the temple of Janus. It was worn also by the equites at their review before the Censor.—Alia decernit. "He decides some cases."

In early Latin, fungor, utor, potior, vescor, etc., were frequently joined with the accusative. This is the reason why even classical writers, though they do not follow this usage, but give the ablative, nevertheless employ the construction with the future participle passive, where otherwise the gerund only could have been used. (Zumpt, § 466 and § 657.)—Palam factum est. "The matter was made public." Some read palam facto et comploratione in regia orta, Servius, etc.—Primus regnavit. "Was the first who reigned."—Ut nuntiatum est. "As soon as it was announced."—Suessa Pometiam. Suessa Pometia was a very ancient city of Latium, which had ceased to exist in historical times, and the position of which is entirely unknown, except that it bordered upon the Pomtinus Ager, or Pomtinae Paludes, which it was supposed to have given name.—Exsulatum. "To live out of their native land." The supine.

Whether we are to follow the Etrurian or the Roman tradition about Servius is one of those points on which no certainty can be by any possibility obtained. So much, however, seems clear, that Servius usurped the throne. He seized the royalty upon the murder of the former king, without being elected by the Senate and the comitia, and he introduced great constitutional changes, apparently to strengthen his power against a powerful faction in the state. It is equally clear that his reign came to a violent end: he was deposed and murdered by the descendants of the previous king, in league with his enemies in the state, who sought to recover the power of which they had been dispossessed. It may be conjectured, therefore, that Tarquinius Priscus and Tarquinius Superbus were both of Etrurian origin, and represent an Etrurian sovereignty at Rome, and that the reign of Servius Tullius represents a successful attempt of the Latins to recover their independence, or, in any case, the sovereignty of an Etrurian people different from the one to which the Tarquins belonged. (Smith, Dict. Biog., vol. ii., p. 1186.)

CHAPTER XLII.

1–11. Nec jam publicis, etc. "Nor did Servius now begin to secure his power more by schemes of a public than of a private nature." His public schemes were the census and comitia centuriata; his private ones were the marriage of his daughters.—Nec rupit tamen, etc. "Nor yet did he break through the inevitable decree of fate, so as that envy of the sovereign power should not render all ties, even among the members of his own family, faithless and hostile."—Peropportune. Because a foreign war usually puts a stop to intestine commotions,—Indulitiae. The truce renewed in the reign of Tullus Hostilius. Compare chap. xxx., line 27.

12, 13. Fortuna. Compare note on the good fortune ascribed in popular tradition to Servius, chap. xxxix., line 1.—Haud dubius rex, etc. "Being now indubitably king, whether he put the sentiments of the patres or the plebs to the proof." The subjunctive perichitaretur means, remarks Zumpt, that if he had tried either the one party or the other he would have found their sentiments in his favor, but that, as no proof was necessary, he had tried neither.

15–23. Adjudicatque inde, etc. "And he then proceeds to a work of peace of the greatest importance," i.e., a work of civil polity.—Conditorem omnis, etc. "As the founder of all distinction in the state, as well as of the several orders, by means of which any difference appears between the degrees of rank and fortune.” The term dignitas refers to the distinction made between the equites and those appointed to serve on foot; and fortuna to the classes instituted by Servius, which were ranged according to fortune.—Censum. “The census.” This was a quinquennial registering of a man’s age, family, profession, property, and residence, by which the amount of his taxes was regulated. Every individual was obliged on oath to give a fair return.—Pro habitu pecuniarum. “In proportion to the amount of property.”—Hunc ordinem. “The arrangement which still subsists.”—Decorum. “Well suited.”

For some remarks on the Census, and on the arrangement by classes, consult the concluding note of the next chapter.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1–3. Centum milium æris, etc. “A fortune of 100,000 copper or more.” Supply assium, not pondus, for it must be recollected that the numbers given by Livy in his account of the fortunes of the different classes are not the ancient ones, when the as was a pound weight of copper, but those of the sixth century of the city. The original numbers were probably 20,000, 15,000, 10,000, 5000, and 2000 asses respectively, which were increased fivefold when the as was coined so much lighter (Böckh, Metrol. Untersuch., c. xxix.).—Æris. Properly speaking, the Roman as was a compound metal, commonly copper and tin, and therefore a kind of bronze.—Centurias. In this account of Livy we translate centuria by the term “century,” but in reality a much larger division is meant. Neither had the centuriae in the different classes the same number of men. Thus, for instance, the whole multitude who were possessed of less than the fifth class were formed into only one century.

3–7. Quadragenas seniorum, etc. “Forty each of the elder and the younger men.” Observe the force of the distributive. The juniores were from seventeen to forty-five years of age; the seniores from forty-five to sixty. Those above sixty years were not ranked in the centuries at all, being regarded as superannuated. And as they could not serve, neither could they vote in the Comitia Centuriata; a strange provision, that was in force in Cicero’s time (pro Sext. Rosc., 35). Such old men (sexagenarii) were therefore called depontani, because they could not pass the gangway (pons) which led into the voting booth (ovile).—Prima classis. Sometimes they were simply called classis, or “the class.” Hence we have in later Latin the epithet classicus, applied to writers of the first class. (Aul. Gell., vii., 18.)
Clipeum. This neuter form is also used by Livy elsewhere (bk. xxxiv., chap. lii.; bk. xxxv., chap. x., etc.), and occurs likewise in Virgil (Aen., ix., 709).

9, 10. Duo fabrum centuriae. "Two centuries of artificers." These consisted of fabri ferrarii, or smiths, and fabri tignarii, or carpenters. Dionysius says that these belonged to the second class. Cicero, on the other hand, assigns the fabri to the first class, as Livy does, but only as one century (de Rep., 11, 22). The difficulty arising from these different accounts may be removed by the supposition that of the two centuries of the fabri, one was assigned to each of the first two classes.—Ut machinas in bello ferrent. Lipsius thinks that we ought to read facerent here instead of ferrent, but we must, as Zumpt correctly remarks, understand the repairing of old and the making of new engines, as implied in their careful transportation.

13, 14. Viginti conscriptae centuriae. Ten of old and ten of young men.—Scutum pro clipeo. The clypeus was round, and shorter than the oblong scutum. It had been given to the first class because they had also the lorica as an additional protection. But, as the second class had no lorica, they needed the longer scutum as a protection.

15, 16. Tertiae classis, etc. "He enacted that the fortune of the third class should be down to (one) of 50,000." That is, the minimum qualification was to be this sum, or, in other words, their fortune was to be from 75,000 to 50,000 asses. We must understand another censum, governed by in, and itself governing milium. Drakenborch, however, conjectures milia, and remarks that milium is an error arising from the manuscripts having merely the abbreviated form of expression, namely, in L. M.—Hæc. Old form for hæ. The ancient form of this pronoun was hæce, hæce, hœce, in which we recognize the demonstrative ce. The cases ending in c arose from the omission of the e, which is still found in old Latin, as hanc legem, hæc legem. This will explain the obsolete form hœc for hæ or hæce. (Zumpt, § 132, note.)

20, 21. Hastam et verutum. "A spear and spit-like javelin." The hasta was intended for close fight, the verutum for hurling at the foe. The latter had a sharp, round, iron point, like a spit (veru), whence its name. Its shaft was three and a half feet long, and its point five inches. The verutum was borrowed by the Romans from the Volsci. It was used also by the Samnites.—Quinta classis aucta. "The fifth class was increased (in the number of centuries)," i.e., contained more centuries than any of those that went before, excepting the first.

22, 23. In his accessi, etc. "Along with these were the supernumeraries, the horn-blowers, and the trumpeters, distributed into three centuries." The accensi were a body of reserve troops, who followed the Roman army without having any military duties to perform, and who were taken one by one to supply any vacancies that might occur in the legions. There is considerable difficulty about the present passage. The natural meaning of the words in his would be "among these," that is, that the three centuries just mentioned formed part and parcel of the thirty. This, however, could never have been Livy's idea, since then the sum total of the centuries of horse and foot would have been only 191. We must regard in his, therefore, as equivalent to cum his, and must consider the three centuries in question as merely belonging to the fifth class, but counted separately, making the whole number of centuries in this class to have amounted to 33. Some editors, viewing accensi as a verb, change tres to duas, and render as follows: "Among these were reckoned the horn-blowers and trumpeters, distributed into two centuries," while others again strike out in, and translate, "to these were reckoned," etc. Both of these modes, however, are objectionable. According to the explanation which we have adopted, the sum total of the centuries of horse and foot, as given by Livy, will be 194. Dionysius, on the other hand, makes it to have been 193, reckoning only two centuries of horn-blowers and trumpeters; and this number of his is undoubtedly more correct than Livy's, since, according to Livy's number, cases might have arisen in which it would be impossible to obtain a majority, as 97 might have voted for a measure, and 97 against it. Moreover, Cicero (De Rep., ii., 22) describes 96 as the minority.

23–25. Censebatur. "Was rated at." Construed with the ablative of estimate or value. (Zumpt, § 456).—Hoc minor census, etc. "Property lower than this comprehended the remaining multitude." —Una centuria. This century, however, was subdivided into the proletarii, capite censi, and, according to some, accensi velati. The last mentioned were those whose property was at least 1500 asses, or originally 300 asses; the proletarii were those who had at least 375 asses, or originally 75 asses, while the capite censi were all those whose property was less than the sum last mentioned, and they, in common with the proletarii, were never called upon to serve until the time of Marius.—Immunis militia. This remark, strictly speaking, applies to the proletarii and capite censi, not to the accensi. For the ablative with immunis, cf. Zumpt, § 487, note 2.

26–28. Ex primoribus civitatis. "From among the chief men of the state." They were chosen from the richest and most distinguished families in the state, plebeian as well as patrician.—Tribus ab Romulo institutis. "Three having been originally established by Romulus." Some render "out of the three established," etc., but then the preposition e ought to have been expressed. The construction is rather the ablative absolute. Livy means that Servius subdivided the three centuries of Romulus, which Tarquinius Priscus had merely doubled as regards the number of men contained in each, into six separate centuries.—Sub iisdem, quibus, etc. "Under the same names by which they had been originally instituted." That is, Romanes prii et se-cundi, Titenses pruni et secundi; Luceres pruni et secundi. Compare chap. xxxvi., sub fin.

29–31. Ad equos emendos, etc. Not only for the purchase of a horse in the case of each eques, but also for the maintenance of a groom, the procuring of a second horse for the use of the latter, the buying of caparisons, etc. Still the sum here mentioned, as well as the tax laid on viduce, would seem so large as to be almost incredible, especially when we take into account that one hundred and twenty-six years afterwards a sheep was only reckoned vii ten asses and an ox at one hundred, in the tables of penalties. (Aul. Gell., xi., 1.) It is better, therefore, to follow Böckh's opinion, already referred to, namely, that the sums of money mentioned in the Servian census are not given in asses of a pound weight, but in the reduced asses of the first Punic War. Compare note on line 1 of the present chapter.—Et, quibus equos alerent, etc. "And single women were assigned, by means of whom they might maintain their horses." Observe that by viduce here are meant single women, that is, maidens and widows, not widows alone. Orphans (orbi) were also brought under this same tax.
This was done, as Niebuhr remarks, on the principle that in a military state the women and children, if their means allowed it, ought to contribute for those who fight in behalf of them and the commonwealth; it being borne in mind that they were not included in the census.— Hec omnia in dites, etc. "All these burdens were made to lean off from the poor upon the rich."

33–38. Non enim, ut a Romulo traditum, etc. "For the franchise was not given indiscriminately to all individually, with the same power and the same right as the other kings had observed it, on having been handed down from Romulus, but gradations were established," etc.—Vis omnis penes primores, etc. Because in the comitia centuriata each century, whatever the number of men who composed it, had but one vote, so that a century of the rich, though very much smaller than one of the poor, had an equal vote.—Ibi si variaret, etc. "If there occurred a difference of opinion among these, which rarely happened, the practice was that the centuries of the second class should be summoned." Supply mos fuit before ut secundae classis vocarentur, an ellipsis easily deducible from what immediately precedes. If, however, the eighteen centuries of equites and the eighty centuries of the first class were united in opinion, there was a majority at once, and it was unnecessary to poll any more.
40. Nec mirari oportet, etc. "Nor ought we to wonder that this arrangement, which at present exists, since the tribes were increased to thirty-five, their number being (virtually) doubled by means of the centuries of juniors and seniors, does not agree with the amount (of centuries) established by Servius Tullius." The meaning of these obscure but very important words appears to be as follows: It ought not to occasion any surprise that the Servian constitution, thus far described, does not agree with the arrangement which exists at the present day, since the latter first came in when the number of tribes was increased to thirty-five (literally, "after thirty-five tribes were filled up"), that is, after A.U.C. 513, and when these tribes were virtually doubled by the centuries of younger and elder men; whereas Servius made only four tribes, and these limited to the city, and did not connect them in any way with the centuries. Livy does not say that since A.U.C. 513 there have been seventy centuries, but in effect seventy tribes (i.e., half-tribes). About the number of the centuries he says nothing, partly because he considers it too well known to require any mention, and partly because he is here merely considering the discrepancies, not the points of resemblance, between the two constitutions. As to the question about the manner in which the combination of the Comitia Centuriata and Tributa was effected, consult Smith, Dict. Ant., s.v. Comitia.

44–46. Quadrifariam enim, etc. The four city tribes were called by the same name as the regions which they occupied, namely, Suburana, Esquilina, Collina, and Palatina. Livy, it will be observed, says nothing about the number of the country tribes, and we are indebted to Fabius Pictor, the oldest of the Roman annalists, and to Varro (ap. Non., p. 43) for the number, namely, twenty-six.—Tribus a tributo. It is more natural to suppose that tributum was so called because paid by the tribes. (Varro, L. L., iv., 36.) The term originally referred to the three Roman tribes, Rarnnes, Tities, and Luceres.—Nam ejus quoque aequaliter, etc. "For the system of contributing this too, in even proportion, according to every one's property, was established by the same monarch."

We have already spoken of the growth of the Plebs or Commons, and shown how Tarquinius Priscus raised the richest and most powerful houses of this class to be members of the Patrician tribes. But still the mass of the plebs continued to live as before upon the Aventine, without having art or part in the affairs of the Roman people. The Populus, or Body Politic, still consisted only of Patricians; but the Plebeians were every day increasing in numbers and wealth, and it was to be feared that if they were much longer shut out from all part in public affairs, they might rise against the Patricians, and take by force what they could not get as a free gift, and so the Aventine would become the chief place of Rome instead of the Palatine. Servius took measures to guard against this danger by admitting the Plebeians into full citizenship, and made them in great measure equal to their Patrician brethren. He did not, however, raise the plebeian families to patrician rank, and make them members of the Curia, but he created a new popular assembly, which was to include all the citizens, Patricians and Plebeians alike. Hence arose the Comitia Centuriata. But though safeguards so many and so great were provided in favor of property, the new assembly of Servius conferred a great and positive boon on the Plebeians. It must be remembered that before this time they were outside the Populus, or Body Politic, altogether. They were still excluded from the Curia, or Assembly of the Patricians; and so far as this involved political rights, the name of Populus was still confined to the old Burgesses. But in reality the Plebeians were now made members of the Populus; for the new Centuriate Assembly slowly but surely assumed to itself all the political rights which had formerly belonged to the Curiate Assembly alone; and though it is probable that all laws proposed in the former must receive the sanction of the latter, and also must be authorized by the Senate, which was at this time exclusively patrician, in time these checks were removed, and the Centuriate Assembly became the supreme legislative body of the state. (Liddell, History of Rome, vol. i., p. 55.)

CHAPTER XLIV.

1–7. Quem maturaverat, etc. “Which he had brought to a speedy close by the dread of a law that had been passed respecting those who were not registered,” i.e., who had neglected to give in an estimate of their property, etc.—In campo Martio. The grammarians call this prolepsis, or anticipation, since the place did not get this name until afterwards. Still, however, the spot itself was proper enough for a public assembly, since an altar of Mars stood here even in the time of the kings.—Suovetaurilibus. “With the sacrifices called Suovetaurilia.” These were so called because they consisted of a pig, a sheep, and a bull. Compare Festus: “Solitaurilia hostiarum trium diversi generis immolationem significat, tauri, arietis, verris.”—Conditum lustrum. “The closing of the lustrum.” Lustrum, as here employed, included everything belonging to the census. The term, however, strictly means a lustration or purification of the whole Roman people. And then, as this purification took place only once in five years, after the censor had completed his census, the word lustrum was also employed to designate the time between two lustra.

8–14. Milia octoginta. Dionysius gives 84,700.—Fabius Pictor. The most ancient writer of Roman history in prose, and therefore usually placed at the head of the Roman annalists. But there were composers of poetic legends or lays before his time. He served in the Gallic War, B.C. 225, and also in the second Punic War. He wrote in Greek. (Dionys., i., 6.) His work appears to have been one of great value, although Polybius charges him with great partiality towards the Romans, and both this writer and Dionysius speak of him as frequently inconsistent and inaccurate. A few fragments alone remain.—Arma ferre possent. That is, according to the regulation of Servius.—Auget Esquiliis. The employment of auget here points to the fact that a part of this hill was already inhabited, and that it merely received a fuller population under Servius. There is no need, therefore, of Gronovius's emendation of Esquiliis in the ablative.

15–19. Aggere et fossis et muro, etc. For an account of the walls and circuit of the city under Servius Tullius, consult the article "Roma," in Smith's Dict. Geogr.—Ita pomerium profert. "Thus he enlarges the pomerium." Literally, "carries it forward."—Postmærium. That is, post murum, or a space behind the wall.—Circa murum. "On both sides of the wall."—Certis circa terminis. "With distinct landmarks on both sides." These termini were stone pillars, called by Varro Cippi pomerii (L. L., v., 143, Müller), and were erected at certain intervals.

20–27. Ut neque interiore parte, etc. "So that the houses might neither be erected close to the walls, whereas now in general they even unite with them." That is, the city wall forms now the back of the house.—Non magis quod post murum esset, etc. "Not more because it was behind the wall than because the wall was behind it."—Proferebantur. "Were carried forward."

CHAPTER XLV.

1–6. Magnitudine. "By the enlargement."—Formatis. "Having been modelled."—Consilio. "By policy."—Diana Ephesie. The Ephesian Diana, or Artemis, was a divinity totally distinct from the Greek goddess of the same name. She seems to have been the personification of the fructifying and all-nourishing powers of nature. It is an opinion almost universally adopted that she was an ancient Asiatic divinity, whose worship the Greeks found established in Ionia when they settled there, and that, for some resemblance which they discovered, they applied to her the name of Artemis.—A civitatisbus Asiae. By Asia is here meant Asia Minor, and more particularly the Greek portion of it along the coast.

7–15. Eum consensum, etc. "Such unanimity and allied gods,"

“Such unanimity and allied gods,” i.e., and the uniting together in the worship of one common divinity. —Hospitia. "Relations of hospitality." —Fanum Dianae. It was built on the Aventine, and, as appears from Martial (vi., 64, 12), on that side of the mount which faced the Circus Maximus. Dionysius says that he saw in this temple the original stele or pillar containing the Feudus Latinum, as well as that on which the Lex Icilia was engraved (iv., 26). —Omissum ex omnium cura Latinorum. "Dismissed from the thoughts of all the Latins." More literally, "from the sollicitudo," etc.—Se fors dare visa est. "A chance seemed to present itself." The Sabines, as well as the Latins, were struggling with the Romans for pre-eminence. This, which the Latins had resigned all hope of, the Sabine thought he could obtain for his own state.

17-22. Fixa. "Fixed up," i.e., after she had been immolated. —Monumentum ei fuere miraculo. "Were a memorial of that wonder." —Dianae immolassent. To Diana, whose temple was built on the Aventine.—Carmen. "Prediction." Compare note on chap. xxiv., line 27.—Ut prima. More usual Latinity would be ut primum.

27-30. Inaceta. "Without previous purification," i.e., with impure hands.—Quin tu ante vivo, etc. "Why do you not first wash yourself in running water?" Observe that quin is equivalent to qui non, qui being the ablative. Literally, "How do you not first," etc.—Præstitit. "Flows by." —Religione tactus. "Touched by a scruple of conscience." —Qui superet. "Since he desired." Observe the employment of the subjunctive to denote the reason or cause.—Ex templo. "Immediately." A better reading than ex templo, since thereby the eagerness of the Sabine is made more apparent, whereas ex templo merely intimates what, as Zumpt remarks, is self-evident.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1-6. Quamquam jam usu, etc. "Although he had now, through long-continued occupancy, become beyond a doubt the rightful possessor of the kingdom." The Romans considered that continuous possession for a certain period gave a right of ownership. The legal name for this was usu quo, answering to the English term prescription.—Jactari voces. "That remarks were thrown out." —Ferre ad populum. "To propose the question to the people." The populus are now the whole people assembled in the Comitia Centuriata. The kings were previously chosen in the Comitia Curia.

9-14. Adfectandi regni. "Of seizing on the sovereign power." Compare Virg., Æn., iii., 670: "Nulla datur dextra affectare potes- tas." —De agro plebis, etc. This is noticed as the first trace of the Agrarian division by Niebuhr, vol. i., p. 161.—In curia. That is, in the Senate with the senators.—Inquietum animum. "His restless temper."

14–19. Tuli enim et Romana, etc. "For the Roman palace also (as well as that of other kings) presented an instance of tragic atrocity."—Regnum. "Reign."—Filius neposne fuerit, etc. Dionysius says that he was the grandson, following Piso, who argued on chronological grounds, as Dionysius does. But the old legend cared nothing for chronological niceties.—Ediderim. "I am inclined to pronounce him." Observe the force of the subjunctive in softening an assertion or statement. (Zumpt, § 527.)—Arruntur. Compare note on chap. xxxiv., line 9.

23–29. [Ne duo. Ne here stands contrary to rule for ut non. "Perhaps Livy here writes ne because he is mentally personifying the Fortuna populi Romani" (Seeley).]—Fortuna, credo, populi Romani. Because the marriage of two such violent spirits would have accelerated the king's death, which would have been an injurious event for the state, before his various measures were established, and a taste for freedom given.—Constitui. "Be firmly established."—Civilitatis mores. "The principles of the constitution."—Angebatur. "Was tortured." [Ferox Tullia. This is contrary to the rule that proper names do not take epithets in prose. It is not merely "the high-spirited Tullia," but "that one of the Tullias who was high-spirited."]—Eum virum dicere, etc. "She called him a true man, and one truly sprung from royal blood."—Muliebri cessaret audacia. "She was deficient in the bold spirit which a woman ought to have."

29–41. Contrahit eos. "Draw them together."—Ut fere fit malum, etc. "As wickedness is in general most congenial to wickedness."—Viri alieni. "Of the other's husband."—De viro ad fratrem, etc. "About her own husband to his brother, about her own sister to her (sister's) husband."—Viduam. "An unmarried woman." Compare note on chap. xliii., line 30.—Ut elanguescendum aliena ignavia esset. "So that they must (each) languish away through life by reason of the dartily conduct of others."—Quo digna esset. Observe the force of the subjunctive to indicate the sentiments of another, "of whom she was, as she affirmed, worthy." The indicative would have expressed the opinion of the historian himself.—Regnum. "The crown."—Prope continuatis funeribus. "By funerals happening almost in succession." That is, the funerals, preceded by murders, followed one another almost without any intermission.—Magis. "Rather."

As allusion has been made in a previous note to chronological discrepancies, it may not be amiss to state here that the story of the Tarquins cannot be received as real history. The narrative is full of inconsistencies and improbabilities. It may suffice as a sample to remind the reader that the younger Tarquiniius, who was expelled from the throne in mature age, was the son of the king who began to reign one hundred and seven years previously in the vigor of life; and that Servius Tullius, who married the daughter of Tarquiniius Priscus shortly before he ascended the throne, immediately after his accession is the father of two daughters, whom he marries to the brothers of his own wife. Again, if, as the Annals gave out, Tarquiniius Priscus came to Rome at the latest in the eighth year of the reign of Ancus, he must at least have reached his eightieth year when he was murdered, and Tanaquil cannot then have been under her seventy-fifth; so that his having left children of tender age behind him is in this view also out of the question. Moreover, if Ancus died in the fortieth year of Servius, his mother must then have been a hundred and fifteen years old. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 373.) Compare note at the close of chap. xli.

CHAPTER XLVII.

1-7. Tum vero in dies, etc. "Then indeed the old age of Servius began to be every day more harassed, his reign to be more disquieted." Infestus is here used in a passive sense, which in fact is its primary force, since it is nothing more, after all, than the old participle of infixo.—Gratuita. "Useless," i.e., committed to no purpose.—Parricide. The murders of near relatives, not acts of paricide. Consult note on chap. xiii., line 7.—Nupta. That is, married nominally, not in reality. She calls her present marriage a nominal one from the pusillanimity of her husband.—Tacita. "In silence." That is, without murmuring against the reigning monarch or taking any steps to remove him.

11, 12. Pejus. "For the worse." More usually in pejus.—Quod istic cum ignavia est sceius. "Because in thee crime is associated with cowardice." Observe that istic, the demonstrative adverb of the second person, is here equivalent to in te.—Quin accingeris? "Why dost thou not gird thyself (for the enterprise)?" Quin, as before, for qui (ablative) non. The passive of accingo has often, as here, a middle force. In entering on a journey, or other active business, the ancients were accustomed to form a part of the outer robe, which was usually loose and flowing, into a kind of girdle, by drawing its outer edge round the body and tying it in a knot in front, thus rendering the garment shorter and more convenient for action.

18-18. Moliri. "To toil after."—Patris image. Equivalent to nobilitas tua. An allusion to the Roman Jus imaginum.—Domus regia. Of Tarquinius, not of Servius.—Cret vocatque regem. The verb, contrary to the grammatical rule, sometimes agrees with the nearest of several nouns, as the one which is generally intended to be most emphatic. (Zumpt, § 370, note.)—Quid frustraris? "Why dost thou disappoint?"—Regium. "Of regal spirit."—Faciesse. "Betake thyself."—Devolvere retro ad stirpem. "Sink back to thy (original) stock." Literally, "Be rolled down back," etc. A contemptuous allusion to one who, while seeking to scale the heights of greatness, loses his foothold through indecision and want of energy, and tumbles backward to his starting-point.

20–23. Instigat. "She stimulates."—Si, cum Tanaquil, etc. "(Thinking it disgraceful) if, when Tanaquil," etc. We must mentally supply turpe existimans, or something equivalent, before si.—Nullum momentum faceret. "Could exercise no influence." Momentum properly denotes a balancing or oscillating motion, and then a particle sufficient to turn the balanced scales, from which last arises the figurative meaning of weight, influence, etc.

24, 25. His muliebris instinctus furiis. "Goaded on by these maddening suggestions of the woman."—Prensaire. "Solicited." The term literally refers to the grasping of another's hand in soliciting a favor.—Minorum gentium patres. They were indebted to his father for their elevation, and ought therefore to be more anxious to support him. The Patres minorum gentium were, as already remarked, "the fathers of the younger houses," and the patres maiorum gentium, on the other hand, were those whose fathers were patricians under Romulus and Tatius. Compare chap. xxxv., line 27.

26–34. Gratiam repetere. "Begged a favor in return."—Cum de se ingentia, etc. "He grew into popularity in all quarters, both by making magnificent promises on his own part, and especially by his accusations against the king."—Pro curia. "In the front part of the Senate-house." Not in front of the Senate-house, but in the building itself. Compare pro rostris, pro tribunali, etc. The building here meant was the Curia Hostilia, erected by Tullus Hostilius.—Ne non venisse fraudi esset. "Lest it might prove detrimental to them not to have come." Fraus is here employed, as often in Livy, in its old legal sense of harm or injury. Compare chap. xxiv., line 23.—Et jan de Servio actum rati. "And thinking now that all was over with Servius." This phraseology appears to have a legal origin. As a suit once decided could not be recommenced, there arose the phrase, actum est de me, etc., "It is all over with me," "I am undone."

35–43. Ab stirpe ultima. "From the first origin (of Servius)."—R Non auctoribus patribus. "Without the sanction of the fathers." — Occupasse. "He had usurped." Observe the force of the verb here, implying that he had, in seizing upon the throne, anticipated all legal and constitutional usages.—Ex quo ipse sit. The subjunctive here marks the sentiments of the speaker, thus becoming what may be termed the mood of quotation.—Odio alicie honestatis. "Through hatred of the nobility of others," i. e., their high rank by birth.—Ereptum primoribus agrum. The public lands obtained by conquest, to which the nobles in reality had no right whatever.—Inchinasse. "He had made to fall." Compare chap. xliii., line 32.—Ut insignis ad invidiam, etc. "That the fortune of the more wealthy might become conspicuous for exciting odium, and that resources might be ready at hand, from which he might lavish, whenever he wished, on the most indigent."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1–10. Huic orationi intervenisset. "Had come up during this harangue."—Trepido nuntio. "By a messenger sent in hot haste." Some, less correctly, render this, "by the alarming intelligence."—Multa quam servum, etc. "A much more rightful heir to the kingdom, as being a monarch's son, than a mere slave."—Per licentiam, educentem, etc. "Had by arbitrary insolence made mockery of and trampled upon his masters," i. e., made mockery of them by his deceitful conduct. Eludo is a term borrowed from the gladiatorial schools, and means properly "to parry a blow," and hence generally to employ one's art and skill in baffling the efforts of another, to mock another's efforts. Observe moreover the contemptuous employment of the term dominis, as indicating strictly the masters of slaves.—Fautoribus. "The partisans."

12–18. Necessitate ipsa. "The very necessity itself," i. e., not merely his desire for the throne, but the very necessity of the dangerous position in which he now was.—Medium. "By the middle."—In inferiorem partem. "To the bottom."—Ad cogendum senatum. The senators had dispersed during the tumult.—Prope exsanguis. "Almost lifeless."—Cum sine regio comitatu, etc. The ordinary text has cum semianнимis regio comitatu. But semianнимis is a mere gloss, and a repetition of exsanguis. We have given therefore the very ingenious conjecture of Alschefski, which has been retained also in the Oxford edition of 1852.—Consecuti erant. "Had overtaken him."

19–26. Quia non abhorret, etc. "Because it is not inconsistent with the rest of her wicked conduct."—Certe. "At all events."—Carpento. Consult note on chap. xxxiv., line 30.—Reverita. "Abashed at."—Ad summum Cyprium vicum. "To the top of the Cyprian street." This street appears to have been on the north side of one of the tongues of the Esquiline, and to have corresponded with the modern Via di S. Lucia in Selci. According to Varro, Cyprius is derived from the Sabine cyrum, equivalent to the Latin bonum, and therefore Cypri-us vicus will be the same as Bonus vicus, or the “Good Street,” which explains the change of name to Sceletratus vicus, or the “Wicked Street.” (Varro, L. L., iv., 38.)—Dianium. “An enclosure sacred to Diana.” Compare Festus: “Locus Dianae consecratus.” It contained of course a temple or chapel. With the form Dianum we may compare the Greek ἄρημισιον, Ἡράκλειον, etc.—Flectenti carpentum, etc. “To her when turning her chariot to the right towards the Ur-brian ascent.” Flectenti, which is here equivalent in fact to flectere ‘‘jubenti, is, if the reading be correct, a poetic usage of the dative. Some read flectente, the ablative absolute, but the absence of the pronoun is an objection to this.—Esquiliarium. An unusual form, not occurring elsewhere.

28–34. Fædum inhumanumque, etc. “A revolting and inhuman piece of wickedness is thereupon related to have taken place.” Some less correctly translate, “is handed down to us ever since.”—Agitantibus foris, etc. “The avenging furies of her sister and husband urging her on.”—Sanguinis ac oedis paternæ. “Of the blood and slaughtered body of her father.”—Ipsa. That is, herself as well as her chariot.—Quibus iratis, etc. “Through whose anger at the wicked beginning of the reign, results similar (to that beginning) should at no distant day ensue.” Observe that quibus iratis is equivalent in effect to ut, isis iratis, and hence we have sequerentur in the subjunctive.—Prope diem. Rather an awkward expression here, since the interval was one of twenty-five years.

36–41. Difficilis amulatio esset. “A competition with him would have been difficult.”—Justa ac legitima. Servius, according to the legend, certainly usurped the regal power in the first instance, but then this usurpation was legitimatized by the subsequent choice of the people.—Quia unius esset. “Because it was vested in one person only.”—Sceclus internum. “Domestic wickedness.”—Intervenisset.
“Interrupted him.”

CHAPTER XLIX.

1–8. Cui Superbo cognomen, etc. “To whom his deeds gave the surname of the Proud.” Superbo the dative by attraction for Superbus. (Zumpt, § 421, note.) Some give Superbo here the meaning of “inhuman,” but the idea involved in the term is rather that of argrogance, and a proud contempt of all human and divine restraints.— seeking the throne by evil means.” — Primum patrum. Most probably patres majorum gentium, since those minorum gentium were partisans of Tarquiniius. — Neque enim ad jus regni, etc. “For neither as regarded a title to the throne had he anything to allege save force.” A species of oxymoron, mere force conferring a very precarious title.

11-16. Eo accedebat, etc. “To this was added the circumstance that,” etc. The more usual form of expression is quod instead of ut. — Cognitiones capitulum rerum, etc. “He used to take cognizance of capital cases alone, by himself, without any advisers.” Consiliis is here the abstract for the concrete, and the allusion is to counsellors or advisers taken from the ranks of the Senate. — Perque eam causam. “And under that pretext.” — Sed unde. “But persons from whom.”

22-29. Domesticis consiliis. Opposed to public ones. — Conciliiabat. “He strove to attach to himself.” — Peregrinis opibus. “By foreign influence.” — Octavio Mamilio Tusculano. Sigonius thinks that we ought to read Octavo, since otherwise we would have a nomen used as a prænomen. Gronovius, however, correctly remarks that what was a nomen at Rome might be used as the prænomen of an individual among some of the other states of Italy. — Ab Ulixes deaque Circa oriundus. The form Ulixes is less usual than Ulysses. So again Circa, for Circe, is the genuine but less usual Latin form, through the Æolic Greek. The house of the Mamilius traced their name and origin to the mythical Mamilia, the daughter of Telegonus, who was regarded as the founder of Tusculum, and was the reputed son of Ulysses and Circe. Compare Dionys., iv., 45; Festus, p. 130, ed. Müller.

1-6. Auctoritas. “The influence.” — In diem certam. Good prose writers make the singular of dies much more frequently masculine than feminine. The latter gender, generally speaking, is used only when dies denotes duration or length of time, and in the sense of a fixed and appointed day, as in the present instance. — Lucum Feren-tine. A sacred grove, with a fountain and shrine of the deity of the same name, celebrated as the place where the cities composing the Latin league used to hold their general assemblies. It was in the neighborhood of Alba Longa, and there can be little doubt that its site is correctly fixed by Gell and Nibby in the deep valley or ravine near Marino, where there is a copious fountain, giving rise to a small stream, which flows into the Tiber below Rome. — Diem quidem servavit. “Kept the day indeed.”

7-17. Multa ibi jactata sunt. “Many topics were thrown out.”
"Toto die. The ablative to express duration of time is rare; here the addition of tota makes the time "within which" embrace both extremities. Cf. Virgil, "Nocte pluit tota."—Aricia. A celebrated city of Latium, on the Appian Way, at the foot of Mons Albanus, and at the distance of sixteen miles from Rome. Some remains of the ancient walls still exist near the modern La Riccia.—Jam enim ita, clam quidem mussitantes, etc. "For so by this time they used to call him, muttering in secret, it is true, yet generally so."—Obnoxios premat. "He may crush them when at his mercy."

18–21. Quod si suis bene crediderint cives, etc. "But if his own citizens have acted well in intrusting him with sovereignty, or if that sovereignty has been intrusted to him at all, and not seized upon by the murder of a near relative, that then the Latins too ought to trust him with it, although not even so to an alien," i. e., though, not even if the case were so, ought they to intrust their sovereignty to him, since he was a mere alien.—Sи aut ejus paeniteat. "But if even his own people rue his power."

26–36. Seditiosus facinorosusque homo. "The seditious and daring man." Facinus, whence the adjective in the text is derived, always means a bold and daring deed, but not always a wicked one. Hence to translate the epithet facinorosus here by the term "wicked," as some do, is too strong.—Maxime dissereret. "Was very warmly discussing," i. e., urging upon the attention of his hearers.—Discipulateorum. "As an umpire." The disceptator was merely an umpire in a private matter, without any public authority, and decided "intra parietes." Compare Cic., Tusc., v., 41.—Ne id quidem ab Turno, etc. "They say that he did not even bear off this (statement) without a comment from Turnus." Observe that tacitum is here used passively. Tacitum ferre and impium ferre aliquid are applied to a person who says or does anything without recrimination or punishment.—Cognitionem. "Investigation."—Nи pareat patri, habiturum, etc. "That unless one obey his father, he will have misfortune (for his lot)." A bitter allusion to Tarquin's unnatural conduct towards his father-in-law Servius.

CHAPTER LI.

2–9. Aliquanto ægrius. "A good deal more bitterly."—Necem. "Destruction." Nex is properly a violent death.—Animos oppresserat. "He had crushed the spirit."—Pro imperio. "By virtue of any official power of his own." He did not as yet possess this over the Latins. The peculiar meaning of pro here arises from the more general signification of "in accordance with." (Zumpt, § 312.)—Oblato criminе falso. "By means of a false charge brought against him."—In deversorium ejus. "Into his quarters." More literally, "Into his lodging-place." Deversorium is properly an inn or lodging-place on the way, to which people turn aside (deverto) from the road. The quarters of Turnus, in the present instance, must have been in the neighboring town or village of Ferentinum, of which Dionysius makes mention (iv., 45).—Vim magnam. "A great number."

10–19. Una nocte. "In a single night."—Re nova. "By some strange occurrence."—Illatam. "Occasioned." Literally, "Brought upon him."—Ab Turno dici sibi, etc. Hence Turnus, as plotting the overthrow of the existing state of things, would be guilty of perduellio, or high-reason. Compare note on chap. xxvi., line 23.—Adgressuum fuisse. "That he was to have made the attempt."—Auctor consiliii. "The originator of the meeting," i.e., the person who convened the meeting, namely, Tarquin himself.—Spem destituerit. "He had defeated his hopes," i.e., Tarquin by delaying had defeated the hopes of Turnus.

19–26. Si vera deferantur. "If true information be brought him," i.e., if the information which had been brought to him (Tarquinius) be true.—Vanum. "A groundless charge."—Suspectam fecit rem. "Made the matter to be regarded as suspicious," i.e., made them suspect Turnus.—Quod videbatur ob eam, etc. "Because it seemed that the slaughter might possibly have been deferred by reason of that (delay)."

28–35. Cetera vana existimaturi. "About to regard all the other (grounds of suspicion) as futile."—Caritate domini. "From affection for their master." Objective genitive.—Vim. "A forcible resistance."—Enimvero manifesta, etc. "The matter in very truth appeared clear enough." Enimvero, like vero, forms the transition to that which is most important. (Zumpt, § 348, note.)—Atrox: "Violent."—In medio. "Before them." The Greek ἐν μέσῳ.—Indicta causa. "Without a defence." Literally, "His cause being unpleaded."—Novo genere leti. It is called a novel mode of punishment because unusual in historic times, being a remnant of early barbarism. Tacitus speaks of it as being used by the ancient Germans (Germ., xii.).—Ad caput aquare Ferentinæ. "At the head-waters of Ferentina." The reference is to a fountain, or rather lake, forming the head or source of the stream called Aqua Ferentina. Consult note on chap. I., line 3.

CHAPTER LII.

1–6. Tarquinius. Observe the position of this word in the sentence, in order to show that it was Tarquin who recalled them to the assembly and praised them collectively.—Novantem res. "Plotting innovation."—Parricidio. The offence of Turnus is here called an attempted parricide, inasmuch as he had intended to subvert the settled order of things by slaying those who, as the representatives of their common country, ought to have been regarded by him as sacred and inviolable in their persons.—Posse quidem se, etc. "That he could indeed procceed by virtue of a right long since established."—In eo fudere teneantur. "They are included in that treaty whereby the whole Alban state, from the time of Tullus, has yielded together with its colonies to the Roman sway," i. e., has acknowledged Rome as the head of the Latin confederacy. As regards the league here referred to, consult chap. xxiv.

8–14. Utilitatis omnium causa. "For the sake of the interest of all."—Quas Anco prius. The relative agrees here grammatically with vatstationes, but refers, in reality, to excidia also.—Quamquam in eo fudere, etc. "Although in that league the Roman power had the advantage," i. e., the advantage lay on the side of Rome.—Ceterum et capita nominis Latini, etc. "However, they both saw that the heads of the Latin nation sided and concurred with the king," etc. This serves to explain still farther why they so easily yielded.

17–21. Ita renovatum fudus. According to Cicero, however (de Rep., ii., 24), Latium was conquered by force of arms: "Omne Latii-um bello devicit."—Junioribus Latinorum. It would seem from this mode of speaking, as well as from the allusion to centuries farther on, that the same military division into classes and centuries, and the same mode of arming, etc., prevailed in Latium as in Rome; and that Tarquin had not altered this arrangement, though in other respects he did not acknowledge the constitution of Servius.—Die certa.
Consult note on chap. 1., line 2.—Lucum Ferentinae. Consult note on chap. 1., line 3.—Secretum imperium. "A distinct military command."—Miscuit manipulos, etc. "He blended together maniples of Latinis and Romans, so as to make single maniples out of a pair of maniples, and a pair of maniples out of single ones." That is, out of a pair of maniples, one Roman and one Latin (consisting each of two hundred men), he took half of each, and so made up one maniple; and of a single Roman or Latin maniple he made a pair by distributing the two parts of it between two separate new ones.

23. Ita geminatis manipulis, etc. After this junction of the two armies, all the maniples were considered Roman maniples; and, as every Roman maniple before now became two, by joining each half of it to half a Latin maniple, the number of Roman maniples was consequently doubled, and Roman centurions were placed over each.
CHAPTER LIII.

1-6. Dux pravus. "A despicable leader."—Nidegeneratum in altiss, etc. "Had not his degeneracy in other respects marred even this distinguished trait." The neuter of the perfect participle passive (degeneratum) is here used with the force of a substantive, a practice in which Livy often indulges. (Zumpt, § 637, note 1.)—Volsci. The Volsci were an ancient people of Central Italy, distinct from the Latins, and who bear a prominent part in early Roman history. We find them in the mountains forming the western boundary of Samnium, in the valley of the Liris, in the mountain districts of Arpinum, Sora, and Atina, and at one time masters of the plains extending from the Volscian Apennines to the sea, including the Pontine marshes, and the fertile tract that borders on them.—In ducentos amplius, etc. "(A war about to last) for more than two hundred years after his own age." There were interruptions of course during this long period. The struggle only came to a full end a short time before the close of the second Samnite War (B.C. 304), when the whole of the Volscian people had submitted to the authority of Rome, and been admitted to the privileges of Roman citizens.—Suessam Pometiam. Consult note on chap. xli., line 37.

7, 8. Quadranginta. Some editions give quareginta, so as to reconcile Livy with Dionysius, who says the sum was four hundred talents of silver, and that this too was merely the tithe of the whole plunder! Consult note on chap. lv., line 29.—Argenti. Some editions have aurique after argentii, but this, as Zumpt remarks, is inadmissible. —Refecisset. "He had made up." In the sense of collegisset. Compare bk. xxxv., chap. i.: "Quod inde repectum est militi divisum."

8-13. Concepit animo, etc. "He conceived in mind such an amplitude of a temple of Jupiter," etc., i.e., the idea of a temple so spacious, etc. Some much less correctly render amplitudinem by "magnificence."—Ipsiis etiam loci. Namely, the Capitoline hill. This is not very correctly said on the part of Livy, since the temple gave all its majestas to the hill.—Exceptiv num. "Engaged his attention."—Lenius. "More protracted."—Gabios. Gabii was a town in Latium, on the Lacus Gabinus, now Lago di Gavi, between Rome and Praeneste. It was a colony from Alba, and in early times one of the most powerful Latin cities. It was in ruins in the time of Augustus.—Urbem ... urbem. Such repetitions as these, whether adopted for the sake of perspicuity or to avoid pronouns, or arising from haste, Livy has more frequently than other writers.—Obsidendi quoque. That is, of trying it by blockade too as well as by storm (vi),

15-22. Velut posito bello. "As if the war were completely laid asīde." Deposito is also used in the same way.—Fundamentis templi fuciendis, etc. "He pretended that he was engaged with completing the foundations of the temple." Zumpt is right in preferring faciendis to jaciendis, on the ground that the deeper foundations, to which jaciendis would properly apply, had been laid some time before by Tarquinius Priscus. Compare chap. xxxviii., sub fin.—Minimus. Dionysius, on the contrary, says he was the eldest (iv., 55).—Transfugit ex composito. This story is a mere imitation of that related by Herodotus (iii., 54, seqq.) concerning Zopyrus, with some particulars added from the account given by the same historian (v., 92) of Thrasylulus, tyrant of Miletus, and Periander of Corinth.—Et liberorum quoque eum, etc. "And that he was becoming wearied even of the gathering about him of his own children," i. e., he began to loathe the society of his own children, and their moving about him in the discharge of little offices of duty and affection.—Stirpe. "Issue." Literally, "Stock," i. e., from which his family might be propagated.

23—28. Se quidem...credidisse. "That he for his part...has arrived at the belief."—Nam, ne errarent, etc. "For, that they might not be led astray, (he assured them) that the war still remains (impending)," etc.—Supplicibus locus non sit. "There be no refuge for suppliants," i. e., for him a suppliant.—Æquis. The Æqui were one of the most ancient and warlike nations of Italy. They inhabited the mountainous district around the upper valley of the Anio, and extending from thence to the lake Fucinus, between the Latins and the Marsi, and adjoining the Hernici on the east and the Sabines on the west. Their constant association with the Volsci would lead us to refer them to a common stock with that nation.—Hernicos. The Hernici inhabited the upper valley of the Trema, or Sacco, and bordered on the Æqui towards the north, and on the Volsci to the south and east. Their name is said to have been derived from an old Sabine or Marsic word "herna," signifying "a rock," an appellation well suited to the character of their country.

30—37. Etiam ardoris aliquid, etc. He means that perhaps he will find persons who will not merely protect him, but will even feel something of ardor in his behalf.—Cum, si nihil morarentur, etc. "As he seemed a person likely to go farther onward from thence, inflamed with anger, in case they should not seek to detain him," i. e., should pay no attention to his request. Morari with nihil is to let a person or thing go, i. e., to care nothing about it, to pay no attention to it, etc.—Vetant mirari. "They bid him not be surprised."—In se ipsum postremo sæviturum, etc. "That if other objects fail, he will finally vent his cruelty on himself." The neuter alia is more comprehensive and emphatic than ali would have been.—Futurumque credere. "And they were confident it would come to pass."
CHAPTER LIV.

1-5. Adhiberi. "He was admitted." — Cum discret. "While he kept saying." Observe the force of the imperfect. — Auctor. "The adviser." — Et in eo sibi praeipuum prudentiam adsimule. "And he claimed for himself superior knowledge in it." — Utriusque populi vires nosset, sciretque, etc. This passage will serve to illustrate the different meanings of nosco and scio. The former means to know a thing as an object of perception, the latter as a matter of fact. So here Sextus knows the strength of both nations, because he has seen it fully developed in each; while, on the other hand, the hatred felt towards the king by his subjects, and the feelings of his own children towards him, are matters of fact with which he is perfectly familiar.

7-10. Ad rebellandum. "To a renewing of the war." The proper and most frequent sense of rebellare. Tarquin had suspended hostilities, which were now to be revived. It would seem, however, from the expression Gabinis receptis, at the commencement of the next chapter, that the war in the first instance had been an actual rebellion against the sway of Tarquin. — Vana accresceret fides. "Ill-grounded credit kept accruing to him." We have regarded dictis factisque, etc., as the ablative of the means, with Weissenborn; others make it the dative. It may also be the ablative absolute.

12-22. Quid ageretur. "What scheme was in contemplation." — Pariter. "Alike." — Prædam munifici largiendo. It might have been sold for the benefit of the state. — Ad omnes conatus. "For all his intended movements." — Ex suis usu. "One of his creatures." — Quando quidem, ut omnia usu, etc. The manuscripts read p or pra Gabinis; in the editions this doubtful word is omitted. Zumpt thinks that we should read pretor, in the sense of "commander," since Sextus had been chosen to that office, as we have just been told in the present chapter. We have adopted, however, the very ingenious emendation of Alscheski, which makes very good sense. "Since the gods had granted to him that he alone above all the Gabini could control all things (there)." — Ei dixi dedisset. By employing ei here, and not sibi, as we would naturally expect, Livy makes the clause a part of his own narrative, and not a part of the order given to the messenger.

27-38. Ut re imperfecta. "As if without having accomplished his object." — Seu superbia insita ingenio. "Or, through the haughtiness innate in his disposition."—Tacitus ambagibus. "By these silent intimations."—Alios sua ipso invidia, etc. "Others of themselves fit for his purpose from the odium which they had incurred," i. e., who could be safely attacked from their own unpopularity.—In quibus minus speciosa, etc. "In the case of whom an impeachment would be likely to prove less plausible," i. e., might give rise to a suspicion of sinister motives.—Divisi fuere. "Were made objects of division." Literally, "Were for a division," i. e., to the people. Supply populo. The verbal noun divisus occurs only in the dative. Some editions read divisa.—Largiones inde predaque. "Then ensued largesses and plunderings." Some editions read largitionis inde predaque, making both nouns genitives singular, and depending on dulcedine. This, however, is less graphic.—Sine utt dimicatone. "Without any struggle."

CHAPTER LIV.

1-6. Gadiis receptis. "Gabii having been recovered." Implying that it had in the first instance revolted. Consult note on chap. liv., line 8.—Jovis templum. This celebrated temple consisted in fact of three parts, a nave sacred to Jupiter, and two aisles, the right sacred to Minerva, and the left to Juno.—Monte Tarpeio. This is only another name for the Capitoline mount. Before the building of the Capitol the whole hill was called Mons Tarpeius, not merely one of its summits, as Becker erroneously supposes, and in which he is followed by Zumpt. Subsequently the whole hill changed its name to Mons Capitolinus, and the process would seem to have been as follows: The northern height, on which the temple was built, was at first alone called Capitolium, or Mons Capitolinus. Gradually, however, its superior importance gave name to the whole hill; yet a particular portion, the most remote from the temple, retained the primitive name of Rupes Tarpeia. The temple stood on the north-eastern summit of the Capitoline, not on the south-western, as Becker maintains. Consult Smith, Dict. Geog., vol. ii., p. 761, seqq.—Tarquinius reges ambos, etc. Observe the peculiar construction here. In the first place, the whole clause forms a species of apposition with monumentum; in the next place, we have an example of what the Greek grammarians call σχῆμα καθ' ὅλον καὶ μέρος, that is, the whole, Tarquinius, in place of agreeing with the verb or verbs following, is resolved into its parts by a kind of anacoluthon, and each part is connected with its own verb.

7-9. Et ut libera, etc. "And in order that the whole area of Jupiter, and of his temple which was being built therein, might be free from consecration to all other gods." More literally, "from all other consecrations."—Exaugurare. "To unhallow." As no temple was ever built in a place, except augurate, that is, without ascertaining the will of the gods by augury, so without their consent none could be destroyed or devoted to another purpose. In other words, they must first be exaugurated—that is, deprived of their sacred character.

12-16. Movisse numen deos. "That the gods signified their will." Numen, from nemo, is properly the nod, hence the will and pleasure of the divinity. Sometimes it means the divinity itself.—In Termini fano non addixere. "In the case of the temple of Terminus they did not give their sanction." Addico, in its literal signification, is only an augural and judicial term. Terminus was the god of boundaries, and was represented by a stone placed erect, large stones being in early times the chief boundaries and landmarks. Some expounders of mythology seek to identify the god Terminus with Jupiter.—Non motam Termini sedem. Dionysius and Livy himself in another place (bk. v., chap. liv.) mention that the altar of the goddess Juventas, too, could not be exaugurated; a sign that eternal youth was promised to the city and state. The chapels of Terminus and Juventas were enclosed within the walls of the new temple, and that of Terminus had an opening in the roof, because no terminus was allowed to be under cover. (Fest., p. 368, ed. Müller.)

19-23. Caput humanum. According to the legend, it was the head of a certain king named Olus or Tolus, and hence the name Capitolium, quasi Caput Oli sive Toli! (Varro, L. L., v., 43; Arnob., adv. Gent., 6.)—Haud per ambages. "By no dark intimations." Literally, "By no roundabout stories."—Arcem eam imperii for. Observe that eam is connected logically with templum, but grammatically with arcem.—Quique. "Both those who." The construction que . . . que, instead of et . . . et, is used commonly only by the poets, but it is not unusual in some prose writers, when, as in the present instance, the conjunction is appended to the relative. (Zumpt, § 338.)

24-26. Augebatur ad impensas, etc. "The king's intention as to the amount of expenditure was enlarged," i. e., when he had received these omens.—Pometiae manubia. "The money obtained from the sale of the plunder of Pometia." Observe that praeda bears the most comprehensive meaning, being used for plunder of every description; while manubia is the money which the quaestor realized from the sale of those objects which constituted praeda.—Ad culmen. "To completion." Literally, "To the roof."—Suppeditavere. "Sufficed." Taken intransitively.

27-31. Fabio crediderim. "Am I inclined to believe Fabius." He means Fabius Pictor, of whom a brief account has been given in a previous note, chap. xlii., line 10.—Quadraginta. Some read quadrin- genta, but from the language of Livy it would seem that this last, both here and in chap. liii., line 7, is a false reading.—Pisoni. L. Calpurnius Piso Frugi, consul B.C. 133. He wrote annals which contained the history of Rome from the earliest period to the age in which he himself lived.—Pondo. "Pounds." In this sense an indeclinable substractive; but properly an ablative singular, "in weight." According to Weissenborn, 40,000 pounds of silver would make 400 Attic talents, reckoning the mina at 1½ Roman pounds. What Fabius therefore gives as the amount of the entire booty, Piso would make only a tenth part of the same. Compare Dionys., iv., 50.—Et nullius ne horum, etc. "And one that would be more than sufficient for laying the foundations of any building, even these magnificent buildings of the present day."

CHAPTER LVI.

8–12. Operis. "Workmen." Operæ are common laborers, workmen.—Qui cum haud parvus et ipse, etc. "And yet though this labor, not small even in itself, was added to military service, etc.— Quam postquam traducebantur. The plural is here employed because ples is taken collectively.—Foros in circo faciendos. "(Such as) the erecting of platforms for seats in the circus." Consult note on chap. xxxv., lines 32, 33.—Cloacamque maximam, etc. The construction of the cloacæ is elsewhere (chap. xxxviii., sub fin.) ascribed by Livy to Tarquiniius Priscus. Compare also Plin., H. N., xxxvi., 15, 24, § 106. Perhaps, however, they were commenced by Priscus and completed by Superbus.—Quicquam adequare potuit. "Has been able to produce anything equal."

13–15. Ubi usus non esset. "When there was no employment for them."—Occupari latius imperii fines. "That the limits of the empire should be more widely taken possession of," i. e., that the frontiers should be more extensively secured. Observe again the peculiar force of occupare, implying the being beforehand with another in doing anything.—Signiam. Signia was a town of Latium, situate on a lofty hill at the north-western angle of the Volscian mountains.—Circeios.
Circeii also was situated in Latium, on the promontory of Circeum.
Circe was fabled to have resided on this promontory, whence its name.
—Præsidia urbi futura. At present they were merely intended as strongholds against the Volsci.

17–24. Ex columna linea elapsus. The Latins more usually, in the case of verbs compounded with prepositions, do not repeat the preposition before the case. The Greeks, on the other hand, generally repeat it. Livy imitates the Greek usage, to make the expression more forcible and poetic.—In regiam. Some conjecture in regia, but we may suppose the pillar to have been in the vestibule of the palace.
NOTES.

—Delphos. Delphi, the celebrated oracle of Apollo, was situated on the side of Mount Parnassus, in Phocis. The Romans very seldom consulted this oracle, preferring their own haruspices.—Sortium. By sortes are meant properly anything used to determine chances, such as small tablets, lots, etc., and hence the term is often employed, as in the present instance, to indicate the oracle itself.—Per ignotas ea tempestate terras, etc. Livy's language is too strong. The route to Greece could not have been so unknown to the communities of Central Italy as he makes it, since Cere had relations with Delphi, Tarquinii with Corinth, and Rome with Cumæ in Magna Græcia.

26–32. Tarquinia sorore regis natus. Dionysius says that Tarquinia was the aunt of Tarquinius, having been the sister of his mother, and the daughter of Tarquinius Priscus.—Juvemis longe alius ingenio, etc. “A youth far different in cast of mind from that which he had assumed the disguise of.” We must employ the term “youth” here in what may be termed its Roman sense, since the term juvenis was applied from the age of 25 to 45, when military service ceased. Brutus at this time had two sons in early manhood.—In quibus. Equivalent to et in iis.—Interfectum. Agreeing with the last-mentioned subject, fratrem. It should properly have been interfecit, with a comma after suum.—Neque in animo suo, etc. “Resolved that nothing should either be feared by the king from his qualities of mind, or desired by him from his fortunes.”—Ubi in jure, etc. “Where there was little protection in justice.”

32–36. Factus. “Having moulded his deportment.” Taken in a middle sense.—Bruti quoque hand abnuit cognomen. The surname of Brutus, according to the legend which Livy here follows, was given to L. Junius because he pretended idiocy in order to save himself from Tarquin, and the word is accordingly supposed to signify an “idiot.” Dionysius, for instance, translates it by ηλιθως (iv., 67). Festus, however, in a passage (s. v. Brutum) which is pointed out by Arnold (R. H., vol. i., p. 104), tells us that Brutus, in old Latin, was synonymous with Gravis, which, as Arnold remarks, would show a connection with βαπαγ. The word may, therefore, as a surname, have been originally much the same as Severus. This conjecture seems more probable than that of Niebuhr's, who supposes it to mean a “runaway slave,” and connects it with the Brettii, “revolted slaves,” whence the Bruttii are supposed to have derived their name. He farther observes that this name might easily have been applied by the Tarquins to Brutus as a term of reproach. (Smith, Dict. Biogr., s. v.)—Opprere tertur tempora sua. “Might wait for its proper opportunity.”

37–42. Ludibrium. “As an object of sport.”—Aureum baculum, etc. “A golden rod, enclosed in a staff of cornel-wood hollowed out for that purpose."—Per ambages effigiem ingenii sui. "An emblem, mysteriously, of his own mind."—Incessit. "Seized." Literally, "Came upon."—Eorum. Perspicuity requires here the demonstrative instead of the reflexive.—Ex infimo specu. "From the bottom of the cave." The adytum, in which the oracles were delivered at Delphi, was a subterranean chamber, which no one was allowed to enter except the priests, and those to whom special permission was given. In the innermost part of the adytum stood a tripod over a deep chasm in the earth, whence proceeded an intoxicating vapor, which was supposed to inspire the priestess with the gift of prophecy.

44–50. Tarquinius Sextus. Livy sometimes, as here, places the name of the gens before that of the individual.—Sorti permittunt. "Cast lots." Literally, "Leave to the lot," i.e., to determine.—Pythican vocem. "That the Pythian response," i.e., the answer of the Pythia, or priestess who gave the oracles.—Velut si prolapsus, etc. He did this immediately on coming out of the temple.—Esset. The subjunctive as referring to what was passing in his own mind.

CHAPTER LVII.

1–7. Ardea. Ardea was a very ancient city of Latium, about four miles from the sea-coast, and twenty-four miles south of Rome. In early times it was one of the most wealthy and powerful places in this part of Italy, and it is supposed by Niebuhr to have been the capital or chief city of the Pelasgian portion of the Latin nation. In legendary history it appears as the capital of the Rutuli.—Ut in ea regione, etc. "As in such a region, and in such an age," i.e., considering the state of that region and that age. Some regard this construction as elliptical, and supply fieri poterat, making the meaning to be "as far as was possible." It is more natural, however, to render the clause as we have done, and not to regard it as elliptical at all.—Præter ali-am superbiam. "Independently of his other haughtiness," i.e., of the other instances of his tyranny.—In faborum ministerio. "In the employment of mechanics."

9–13. Si primo impetu, etc. "Whether Ardea could be taken on the first attack," i.e., by storm. Si for num.—Ubi id parum proce-sit. Ardea was partly defended by ramparts, and partly by precipitous banks of tufa rock on either side. It was well protected, therefore, against storming.—Satis liberri commenatus erant. "Furloughs were freely granted."—Comissationibus. "Revellings." Comissari means properly to hold a festive procession with torches and music; and comissatio, a Bacchanalian revel, a festive procession of this kind. Here, however, in camp, it can hardly be taken in such a sense, and must rather denote a carousel after the regular cena or convivium was over. The comissatio was frequently prolonged to a late hour of the night.

15–27. Egerii filius. Dionysius says he was his grandson. — Certame accenso. “A dispute having been kindled among them.” — Quin, si vigor juventae inest, etc. “Why do we not, seeing that the vigor of youth is in us, mount our horses, and inspect in person the dispositions of our wives?” “Let that be most certain evidence to each of us, which shall have met his eyes on the unexpected arrival of the husband.” Observe the employment of si with the indicative to express the actual state of the case, “since,” “seeing that.” — [Id cuique spectatisimum sit. “Let that be the best test of each of our wives.” (Prof. Chase.) According to Seeley, the expression is equivalent to sit spectatissima quaeque secundum id quod, etc., cuique referring to the wives, and spectare meaning to test.] — Age sane, omnes. “Come on by all means, they all exclaimed.” — Primis se intendentibus tenebris. “The first shades of night spreading themselves.” — Collatiam. The younger line of the Tarquinii had their residence at Collatia. Consult note on chap. xxxviii., line 1. — In convivio luxuque. “In banqueting and excess.” Observe that luxus denotes luxury as an act or condition, and sometimes objectively, as an object of luxury; whereas luxuria always subjectively, as a propensity and disposition. — Cum æqualibus. “With their companions of the same age.” — Deditam iunce, etc. “Employed at her wool, sitting in the middle of the house among her handmaids working by lamp-light.” The Atrium or Cavum ædium is here meant, a large apartment, roofed over with the exception of an opening in the centre, called compluvium, towards which the roof sloped, so as to throw the rain water into a cistern in the floor termed impluvium. The atrium was the most important room in the house, and was originally the only sitting-room. Here also various domestic operations were carried on. In later days it served for a reception-room, and was fitted up with great splendor and magnificence.

CHAPTER LVIII.

3–7. Ab ignaris consili. The allusion is to Lucretia and the other inmates of the abode. We would naturally expect, however, ignara, as referring to Lucretia alone. — Hospitale cubiculum. “The cham-her appropriated to strangers." We must suppose this sleeping-apartment to have opened, according to custom, on the atrium.—Circa. "All things around."—Sopiti. "Fast asleep."—"Tace Lucretia," in-quit, etc. Niebuhr says that Livy has here actually transcribed from one of the old romantic ballads of Rome; since what Sextus says on entering the chamber of Lucretia is nearly in the Saturnian measure:

"Tace Lucretia, inquit, Sextus Tarquinius sum; Ferrum in manu est, moriere si eniseris vocem."

9–20. Pavida ex somno. "Awakening terrified from sleep."—Ver-sars in omnes partes, etc. "Tried to sway in every direction her woman's mind." The metaphor is taken from a tree, which is swayed to and fro, in order to effect its fall, that if it does not fall one way, it may another.—Inclinari. "To be moved." Literally, and still keeping up the metaphor, "To be bent."—In sordo adulterio. "In base-born adultery," i.e., with a base-born slave. Sordidus is particularly employed in speaking of slaves and the lowest class of persons, "vile," "base."—Velut victrix libido. "His lust, as it were victorious." It was only victorious in appearance, not in reality. The true conquor was the dread of the threatened disgrace.—Ferox expugnato decore muliebri. "Elated at having overpowered a woman's honor."
—Cun singulis fideltibus amicis. "With a faithful friend each."— Ita facto maturatoque opus esse. "That it was necessary to do so, and to use despatch." Opus and usus are almost always construed with the ablative of the past passive participle, instead of with an indefinite.

23–31. conventus est. "He was met." Convenire aliquid is "to meet any one," and hence the verb being transitive in this sense, though commonly intransitive, may be used personally in the passive.
—Satina' salve. Supply sunt res. "Is all well?"—Quid enim salvi est. "For what of well is there."—Testis. "My witness," i.e., the witness of the truth of what I say.—Fidemque. "And your honor."
—Mihi sibique, si vos viri estis, etc. "Bore away from this house a gratification fraught with ruin to me, and to himself if you are true men."

strive to console her sick at heart."—Mentem peccare, non corpus, etc.
"That it is the mind, not the body, that commits crime, and that whencesoever intention may have been absent, culpability is absent," i.e., where there is no intention there is no guilt.—Vos videritis.
The futurum exactum for the simple videbitis, but implying at the same time that the thing will soon take place. (Madvig, § 340, obs. 4.)— Cultrum, quem...eum defigit. Observe that eum is not necessary here, either for syntax or meaning, but is introduced, in imitation of the Greeks, for the purpose of emphasis. "The knife which ... this she plunges."

CHAPTER LIX.

2-13. Manante crure. A much better reading than manantem crure, since it brings the circumstance more prominently forward.—Me exsequiturum. "That I will pursue." Exequi is more commonly found with the accusative of the thing (scil. injuriam) than of the person, and hence some have conjectured here exacturum; but perhaps Livy intended here to express a long-continued pursuit and complete overthrow of tyrannical power.—Stupentibus miraculo rei, etc. "Lost in amazement at the strangeness of the fact, from what cause this new intelligence (may have sprung) in the breast of Brutus."—Jam inde vocantem, etc. "From this time now summoning them," etc.

14-19. In forum. The forum of Collatia.—Miraculo rei novae atque indignitate. "By the surprising and revolting character of the strange fact."—Castigator lacrimarum, etc. "The rebucker of their tears and unavailing complaints," i. e., who rebuked them for their tears, etc.—Capiendi. Depending on auctor.—Adversus hostilia ausos. "Against those who had dared to perpetrate the deeds of foes in open warfare," i. e., what usually only an enemy in open war attempts to do.

21-27. Pari præsidio, etc. "An adequate guard being left at the gates at Collatia, and sentinels being planted," etc. Pari means, such as the emergency required. Many, however, render it, "Equal to the number that went to Rome;" but there appears to be no good reason why an even division of the forces should be made; and, besides, Collatia, from its comparative insignificance, did not require as many men to keep down Tarquin's party as were necessary to be sent to Rome. Gronovius conjectures pars præsidio relict, but the explanation we have given to pari renders any emendation unnecessary.—Regibus. "To the king and his sons."—Pavorem ac tumultum. "Panic and confusion."—Rursus ubi anteire primores, etc. "On the other hand, when they see the chief men of the state moving at the head (of the throng), they think that, whatever it may be, it is not without some good reason."—Motum animorum. "Excitement of feeling."

29, 30. Praeco. As the comitia curiata were summoned by a lictor, and the centuriata by a cornicen, the gathering of the people here referred to could have been neither of these, although Dionysius (iv. 84) makes it to have been the former.—Tribunum Celerum. "The tribune of the Celeres," i. e., the commander of the cavalry. (This officer stood in the same relation to the king as the magister equitum did, in a subsequent period, to the dictator. He occupied the second place in the state, and, in the absence of the king, had the right of convoking assemblies of the people. He appears to have been appointed by the king.—In quo magistratu, etc. This is one of the points adduced by Niebuhr to show the absurd character of the whole story of Brutus, namely, that he, a reputed idiot, should be intrusted with an office of so much importance, by virtue of which he could convoke assemblies of the citizens. [Tarquin is represented as devoted to family government, and of such governments the appointment of notoriously unfit men to high office is the most characteristic fault. (Seeley.)]

31-37. Nequaquam ejus pectoris, etc. "By no means indicative of that character and capacity, which had been counterfeited up to that day." Pectus, as here employed, is a poetical form seldom used in prose.—Tricipitini. The father of Lucretia, Spurius Lucretius Tricipitinus.—Cui morte filiae, etc. "To whom the cause of her death must be a source of greater indignation and misery than the death of his daughter itself."—Demorsae. "Sunk deep in the earth."

41-48. His atrocioribus, etc. "By detailing these and, I believe, other facts still more shocking, which the then heinous state of things suggested, though by no means easy to be related by writers, he so far worked upon the inflamed multitude, that," etc.—Junioribus. Only a part of the centuries of the juniore were in arms before Ardea.—Præfecto urbis. This was an extraordinary magistratæ, appointed to govern the city in the absence of the king, and afterwards of the consuls.

The Primores Civitatis mentioned above were Lucretius, Collatinus, Valerius, and Brutus. The junction of these four in vowing the banishment of the tyrants has quite the look, says Niebuhr, of an historical fact, yet this is merely symbolical of the union between the three patrician tribes and the plebs. It is possible that these very four men may have represented each his own order, and governed the republic till the consulship was established. Valerius was a Titiensis, and represented the Sabines. That Lucretius belonged to the Ramnes may be inferred not only from the licctors going to him from Valerius, owing to his superior rank, but from his office of governor of the city (præfectus urbis), which was attached to the dignity of the first senator, or the first among the "decem primi" of the Ramnes; hence Lucretius was interrex. Collatinus, as a Tarquinii, was one of the Lucreces, and Junius Brutus was a plebeian. The consulate of Collatinus looks like a compromise with the powerful house of the Tarquinii, to which he belonged, allowing one of them, to be chosen by the people, to share in the supreme power; but the whole house was banished shortly afterwards. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 515, seqq.)
CHAPTER LX.

3–12. Flexit viam. "Turned aside," i. e., took a circuitous route. — Exsilium indictum. The Regifugium, or expulsion of the royal line, took place in 503 B.C., on the 24th of February—Olympiad lxviii., 3—and a festival was annually celebrated on that day in commemoration of it. In some ancient Calendaria the 24th of May is likewise called Regifugium. For another explanation of the term, in connection with the symbolical flight of the Rex Sacrorum from the comitium, consult Dict. Ant., s. v.—Cære. Consult note on chap. ii., line 11. Others make them to have gone to Veii. But at Cære Roman exiles were entitled to settle as citizens. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 496.) Gabios. Dionysius says that he was made king of this place by his father (iv., 58), which may serve to explain Livy's "tangum in sumum regnum."— Veterum simulatium. "Of the old feuds."

15–20. Regnatum Romeœ, etc. Livy gives here 244 years as the duration of the regal power at Rome. Later writers make it 243 years; Cicero (De Rep., ii., 30) somewhat over 240.— Ex commentariis Servii Tullii. This may mean either that the plan of the consular government was found in the commentaries of the king, and had been drawn up by him when he intended to resign his power (compare chap. xlviii., sub fin.), or else that the form of election at the Comitia Centuriata was according to the plan which he had established. Dionysius says that the Comitia were held by Lucretius not as prefect of the city, but as interrex.— Collatinius. We may infer, from this individual having been chosen as one of the consuls, that the whole house of the Tarquinii did not adhere to the king, but that a part were on the side of the aristocracy, who had brought about the revolution.
BOOK II.

CHAPTER I.

1-7. Liberi jam hinc populi Romani, etc. "I shall now go through with the transactions in peace and in war of the Roman people from henceforth free, their annual magistrates, and the commands of the laws more powerful than those of men." Imperium properly means military power or command; here, however, it has a more general reference to the sovereignty or absolute sway of the laws in all cases, whether military or civil.—Hominum. The preceding kings are meant.—Proximi. A much more natural reading than proxima, as given in some manuscripts and editions.—Conditores partium certe urbis. "As founders of parts at least of the city." Certe implies that though they were not entitled to be counted as founders of the whole city, still they ought to be regarded as founders of parts of it at least. In the case of Numa, it is true, there was no outward enlargement of the city, but still, as Livy himself elsewhere remarks (i., 19), he may be said to have founded it anew by laws and institutions.—Novas sedes. "As new settlements."

10-19. Pessimo publico id facturus fuerit. "Would have done so with very great injury to the state." More literally, "With the worst public effect." Compare the ordinary forms of expression, bonum publicum, malum publicum, etc. Observe moreover that facturus fuerit, being in a hypothetical sentence, has instead of its own meaning as a perfect that of a pluperfect. (Zumpt, § 498.)—Immature. Another reading is immatura.—Quid enim futurum fuit. "For what would have been the result?" Perfect again employed in a hypothetical sentence, with the force of a pluperfect.—Illa plebs. "That rabble."—Sub tutela inviolati templi. "Under the protection of an inviolable asylum." The reference here is literally to the temple which Romulus erected in connection with, and for the purpose of giving a sacred character to, his asylum.—Libertatem. Exemption from previous control or bondage.—Cui longo tempore adsuescitur. "To which men become familiarized only by length of time." Observe that adsuescitur, as an impersonal verb, is quite unusual.—Animos eorum consociasset. "Had united their minds (in one society)," i.e., had produced unity of social feeling in their bosoms.

20-27. Res nondum adulter. "Their affairs not yet matured." Literally, "Not yet grown to maturity."—Quas fovit tranquilla, etc. "Which the tranquil moderation of the kingly rule had nurtured." The mild rule of the early kings, up to the period of the last Tarquin, served as a school for fostering the germ of future freedom.—Inde numeres. "You may date from this period."—Omnia jura. "All their privileges." Except those connected with religious matters. These were vested in a Rex Sacrorum, as mentioned in the next chapter.—Omnia insignia. Except the crown and sceptre. These were only seen in triumphs, and on great festal occasions, as, for instance, in the celebration of the Ludi Circenses, etc.—Ne si ambo fasces haberent, etc. A concise form of expression, instead of ne duplicaretur terror, qui duplicatus esset, si ambo fasces haberent. Each consul had twelve lictors with the fasces, but it was ordained that, while they were at Rome, only one of the consuls should be preceded by the lictors, and that the other should be attended merely by a single accensus. This arrangement was to be for month and month about. When they were not at Rome, however, but at the head of armies, each consul was preceded by his own lictors; and they then also retained the axe in the fasces, whereas in the city the axe was removed. The kings, however, always had the axe both at home and abroad. Compare note on bk. i., chap. viii., line 7.—Prior fasces habuit. That is, for the first month.

29–36. Avidum nova libertatis. "Eager to maintain their newly acquired freedom."—Frequentia ordinis. "The fulness of the order."—Ad trecentorum summam explavit. Niebuhr thinks that Livy exaggerates when he speaks of the Senate having been thinned by the executions of Tarquin, and considers it more likely that very many seats were vacated by the banishment or emigration of the adherents of the Tarquins. On the other hand, in mentioning that Brutus filled up the number of the Senate to 300, Livy omits to state that, among the equites who were so admitted, there were some plebeians also, belonging to the richest families of the commons. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 526.)—Qui patres quique conscripti essent. "Those who were patres and those who were conscripti," i. e., those who were old members, and had obtained this rank by inheritance, and those who were new members, having recently been enrolled among or added to the old ones. According to this explanation, the Senate was summoned, and was also addressed by speakers, as "Patres, Conscripti" (i. e., Patres et Conscripti), the connecting conjunction et being omitted, as it often is in ancient formulæ. But in later times it was forgotten that these names belonged to different sorts of persons, and the whole Senate was addressed, as by one name, "Patres Conscripti."

CHAPTER II.

3, 4. Necubi. For ne alicubi. "Lest in anything." Gronovius conjectures ne ubiubi, which Drakenborch and others adopt. This will require us to supply esset after ubiubi ("lest, wherever it might be");
but, as Zumpt remarks, of this ellipsis with the generalizing relative adverb ubi ubi no example can be brought forward.—Regem sacri-culum. "A sacrificing king." This priest was also termed Rex Sacrificus and Rex Sacrorum. He held his office for life, was not allowed to hold any civil or military dignity, and was at the same time exempted from all military and civil duties. His principal functions were to perform those sacra publica which had been performed by the kings; and his wife, who bore the title of Regina Sacrorum, had, like the queens of former days, also to perform certain priestly functions.

For other particulars, consult Dict. Ant., s. v.

5–13. Pontifici subjecere. The Pontifex Maximus is meant. Consult note on bk. i., chap. xx., line 18.—Ac nescio an nimis, etc. "And perhaps they exceeded the proper bounds by fencing it in too much on all sides, even in the most trivial matters." The expression nescio an is employed to denote uncertainty, but with an inclination in favor of the affirmative. It properly signifies "I know not, whether not," and hence has acquired the meaning of the adverb fortasse, "perhaps." (Zumpt, § 354, 721.)—Consulis alterius. "Of one of the two consuls."—Ne intervallo quidem facto, etc. "That even after an interval had thus taken place, Tarquinius Superbus, not having given up thoughts of the kingdom, as of a thing really belonging to another, had sought to regain it by wickedness and force, as the inheritance of his house."

17–33. Hic primo sensim temptantium, etc. "This language, employed on the part of persons first gradually sounding the dispositions (of the people), was circulated (eventually) throughout the whole state."—Nec esse Romae, unde. "Nor any one to remain in Rome, from whom."—Invitum se dicere, etc. "That he said it with reluct-tance on account of the man," i. e., through regard for the individual.
—Recuperatum esse. "Had been recovered." Liberty is here regarded as having been their original possession.—Regium nomen. His full name was L. Tarquinius Collatinus.—In imperio. "In the government."—Absolve beneficium tuum. "Complete the favor you have conferred upon your country."—Munificis augebunt. Dionysius says that they actually did so.—Ita persuasum est animis. "So persuaded are they in mind."—Regnum. "Kingly power."

34–44. Consuli primo tam novae rei, etc. "Amazement at so strange and sudden an occurrence had choked the utterance of the consul."— Major aetate ac dignitate. "Superior to the rest in age and character." Dignitas here refers to respectability, high character, and influence in general.—Agere varie, rogando, etc. "Began to try various expedients, by using entreaty and advice alternately." Alternis is here used as an adverb. Strictly speaking, however, it is the ablative of the adjective, vicibus being understood.—Privato. "When a private individual," i.e., after the expiration of his year of office.—Lavinium. Consult note on bk. i., chap. i., line 41.—Cassit. Plutarch, in his life of Poplicola, says that he was not compelled to leave Rome until he attempted to save his nephews the Aquilii. And it is also stated that he obtained twenty talents out of the public treasury, and five from Brutus, out of his own property, as a compensation.—Ad populum utit. "Proposed to the people," i.e., brought in a bill to that effect. This he did as presiding officer at the comitia. So in the next clause, sibi creavit.

CHAPTER III.

2-17. Spe omnium serius fuit. "Was later (in its breaking out) than all expected."—Nec hi tenui loco orti. "And these, too, not sprung from a lowly origin."—Quorum in regno, etc. "Whose passions had been less restrained during the king's reign, the equals in age and boon companions of the young Tarquinius."—Æquato jure omnium. "Now that the rights of all were equalized."—In suam vertisse servitutem. "Had turned into their slavery," i.e., had become slavery for them. Vertisse is only apparently intransitive here, se being in reality understood.—Regem hominem esse, etc. There is a forcible opposition here between hominem and leges, as implied by the words rem surdam. A king is but a man, and a man may be swayed by favor or kindness; but not so the laws, which are deaf to exposition.—Ubi jus, ubi injuria opus sit. "Where right, where wrong may be required," i.e., whether your request be a fair or an unfair one.—Locum. "Room."—Inopi quam potenti. Livy often uses the singular to indicate a class.—Sola innocentia vivere. "To live solely by one's integrity," i.e., to have no security for life but innocence.

18-24. Ægris. "Being discontented."—Superveniunt. "Come unexpectedly."—Bona tantum repetentes. Under the head of "effects" are probably here included those of the different individuals who either went or were driven forth along with the Tarquins.—Tenuit. "Continued." Taken intransitively.—Interim legati alia moliri. The ordinary text has alii alia moliri. This, however, would merely signify that the ambassadors were planning different schemes. As, however, together with the application for the restitution of the property, they were privately plotting for the return of the Tarquins, and for this alone, it is evident that alii must be stricken out, and the clause clam recuperandi regni consilia struere must be regarded as explanatory of alia. The ambassadors were pursuing one course with the Senate, and another with the young nobles.—Tamquam ad id, quod agi videbatur. "As if to promote the business which seemed to be carrying on," i.e., the restoration of the king's property.
CHAPTER IV.

1-8. Vitelliiis. The patrician house of the Vitellii (in place of whom Dionysius has the Gellii) appears to have died out with the individuals here mentioned. The Aquilii, however, are spoken of at a later period. Compare chap. xl., line 51. The Aquilii mentioned in the text were born of a sister of Collatinus.—Adolescentes liberī. "Sons grown up to manhood."—In societatem consilii. "Into a participation in the plot."—Consci. "As accomplices."—Abit. "Has perished." Interiit and intercidit are more usual in this sense.

8-16. In senatu. The decision of the Comitia Curiata (Dionys., v., 6) is passed over by Livy in silence.—Quae censebat. "Which recommended."—Causam. "As a pretext."—Sumpserant. "They had obtained."—Evincuntque instando. "And gain their point by urging."—Nam aliter, qui credituros eos, etc. "For otherwise how would they (the Tarquins) believe that false tidings were not communicated (to them) respecting affairs of so much importance?" Observe that qui is here the ablative. The employment of super for de is confined almost entirely, as Zumt remarks, to writers of the silver age.—Manifestum facinus fecerunt. "Made the treason palpable."

17-27. Cena tum forte, etc. "They had chanced to sup at the house of the Vitellii." The common text has et before cenatum, but strict Latinity is against making que follow et, and we have accordingly thrown it out.—Exceptit. "Overheard." More literally, "Caught up."—Rem coarguere possent. "Might be able to prove clearly the whole affair."—Ne intercidenter. "Lest they should escape their hands." More literally, "Fall between (their fingers)."—Commisisset, ut hostium loca essent. "To have so far committed themselves, that they should be (regarded) in the light of open enemies, yet the law of nations prevailed," i. e., the international law, which renders inviolate the persons of ambassadors.

CHAPTER V.

2-4. Res integra refer tur ad patres. "The whole subject is laid again before the fathers."—In publicum redigi. "To be converted into public property." Supply aerarium with publicum. That is, to be sold, and the proceeds of the sale to be paid into the public treasury.—Diripienda. "To be plundered."—Contacta regia praedia. "Being infected by the royal plunder," i. e., polluted, as it were, and rendered criminal in the eyes of the king by their plundering his property.

7-14. Martius deinde campus sicut. "Has thence become the Cam-
18. Livy. "Embassies of memory."—Manque adjectum. "And then a remonstrance was made.":—Iam eam esse, etc. "So conspirators a long time ago, and wise enough for supporting," etc. This small gap between Rome and the Jermicullum, and was called Isuadi Taurian or Isuadi Sera. The latter of these names was given to it from the legend of the serpent brought from Epidaurus, as a symbol of Echidna, to which deity a splendid temple was erected here.

18-20. Livy. Livy does not say by whom they were condemned and punished, but the context plainly shows that it must have been by the consuls, from whom, however, an appeal lay to the people. According to Diodorus and Plutarch, Brutus alone sat in judgment on his sons, but both consuls on the other conspirators. (Dion. v., 13.) Niebuhr maintains that Brutus punished his children by his authority as a father, and that there was no appeal to the people from the father (H. R., vol. i., p. 489).—Et qui. "And because," etc. Supply quod after et.

23-29. Velut ab ignotis capitibus. "As if from unknown persons."—Miserebatque non paxce magis, etc. "And men felt pity not more on account of their punishment than their guilt," i.e., because they looked upon this guilt as proceeding not so much from any bad principle as from some blind infatuation.—Illus, eu potissimum amo, etc. These are the reflections of the people. —Induxisse in animam, etc. "Had taken it into their mind to betray," etc.—Infesto exsul. "An embittered exile."

29-82. Sedem suam. The tribunal.—Securique feriant. Beheading was the usual punishment of traitors.—Eminente animo patrio, etc. "His feelings as a father appearing evident to the view during the duty of inflicting public punishment." Drakenborch says the passage means that, while he superintended the public punishment of his sons, his stern mind, though he was their father, was a more remarkable spectacle than his stern countenance; i. e., amno eminite supra spectaculum oris. But, though Dionysius and others represent him as obdurate and unmoved, this meaning, as Prendeville remarks, seems improbable, since how could his firmness of mind be seen except by his steadiness of countenance? Besides, it is scarcely credible that on such an occasion he did not evince some symptoms of humanity and paternal love.

38–39. Secundum. "After."—Ut in utramque partem, etc. "That there might be a signal example both ways for the preventing of crimes," i. e., by punishing the guilty and rewarding the informer.—Vindicta. "By the form vindicta." The vindicta was properly the rod which was laid on the head of a slave by the prætor before he manumitted him. When a master wished to emancipate a slave, the usual method was to bring him before the magistrate, and say, "I wish this man to be free." The magistrate, or a lictor, then, putting a rod on his head, said, "He is free." Whereupon the lictor, or the master, turning him round in a circle (which was called vertigo), and giving him a blow on the cheek (alapa), let him go.—Vindictæ nomen. "The name of vindicta."—Observatum. "It was observed as a rule."—Viderentur. "Should be supposed."

CHAPTER VI.

2–16. Ad iritum cadentis. "Sinking to disappointment."—Etruriae urbes. The cities of southern Etruria are meant.—Se ortum. "A man sprung from themselves."—Ex tanto modo regno. "From a kingdom lately so flourishing."—Augentem. "While striving to increase." He alludes particularly to the siege of Ardea.—Partes regni rapuisses. "Had seized as plunder, and divided the different parts of the kingdom." Observe the double force of rapuisses. By partes regni are here meant the several functions of royalty.—Expers sceleris. "Free from guilt."—Repeter. "To recover."—Persequi. "To take vengeance upon." More literally, "To follow with vengeance."

18–27. Ac pro se quisque, etc. "And in a menacing tone they loudly declare, each for his part, that their disgraces should be effaced under a Roman leader at least," i. e., each to the best of his individual exertions, that they should wipe off their past disgraces, now at least when under a Roman general, since they were not able to do so before, when under a leader of their own.—Suos. "That their countrymen."—Quadrato agmine. "In battalion order of march." By agmen quadratum is meant an army marching in order of battle, in the form of a parallelogram. It was not a square battalion, but a battalion in line, ready to meet the enemy.—Ad explorandum. "To reconnoitre."—Primus eques, etc. "The enemy’s cavalry was the foremost in the line of march."

29–34. Ex lictoribus. The lictors attended upon the general in war also.—Cognovit. "Recognized."—Ipse e ille. Observe that ipse is placed first, since the emphasis rests upon it, inasmuch as Brutus seemed to the speaker to have driven out the Tarquins in order to reign himself. Hence, too, as is placed after the emphatic word. So in bk. iii., chap. xvii., we have "primus e ego."—Magnifice incedit. "Moves pompously along," i.e., struts proudly.—In ipsum consulem. "Full against the consul."

34–39. In se iri. "That his movement is directed against himself."—Decorum erat tum. "It was honorable in those days."—Adeo infestis animis. "With feelings so deeply embittered."—Dum vulneraret. "Provided he could wound."—Contrario ictu. "By his opponent’s blow." Literally, "By the opposite blow."—Parmam. The parma was a "buckler" used by the light-armed troops and the cavalry of the Roman army. It was circular in form, about three feet in diameter, and very strongly made upon a framework of iron.—Hastis. The spears that were implanted in them.

41–45. Æquo Marte. Compare bk. i., chap. xxxiii., line 16.—Non statit solum. "Not only stood their ground."—Pepulit. "Drove in," i.e., obliged them to give way.

CHAPTER VII.

1–8. Ita cum pugnatum esset. That is, with uncertain issue to the battle.—Tantus terror. "So great a panic."—Omissa irrita re. "Having given up their attempt as ineffectual."—Silva Arsia. This forest was situated on the confines of the Roman and Veientine territories. It was probably nothing more than a sacred grove.—Sibani. Silvanus was a Latin deity of the fields and forests.—Uno plus Tuscorum, etc. "That more of the Etrurians (than of the Romans) by one man had fallen in the battle; that the Romans were the victors in the general issue of the war." It would have been clearer if Livy had said uno plures, since uno plus, etc., might also mean, "That more than one man fell on the part of the Etruscans." Consult the remarks of Zumpt, § 488, note 1.

9–15. Ita certe. "In this way at least," i.e., as far as the point could be ascertained from the marvellous announcement alluded to.—Pro victis. "As good as vanquished."—Apparatu. "Magnificence."
—Multum majus morti decus fuit. “Was a much greater honor to his death,” i. e., to the deceased.—Annum. This was a year of ten months, such being at that time the length of the Roman year, as appointed by Numa. Tradition says that this was the period of time which the same king had fixed for widows to go into mourning for their husbands.—Tam acer ulter. “So strenuous an avenger.”

18–21. Ex favore. “After popularity.”—Omnibus crimen. “Coupled with a heinous charge.”—In summa Velia. The position of the Velia has been made a matter of much discussion among antiquarians. It would seem to have been the rising ground between the Palatine, the Esquiline, and the eastern side of the Forum.—Alto atque munito loco. Cicero (De Rep., ii., 31) says that Valerius built on the same spot where Tullus Hostilius had previously dwelt.—Arcem inexcugnabilem fieri. “An impregnable stronghold was being erected.” The common text has fore, for which we have substituted fieri, with Weissenborn and others. Some manuscripts have fieri fore, the copyists evidently being uncertain which was the true reading, and leaving it therefore to the choice of the reader.

22, 23. Indignitate. “By a sense of their unworthiness.”—Summis fascibus. “The fasces having been lowered,” i. e., in token of respect to the majesty of the people. Livy omits to state here what is mentioned by Dionysius (v., 19), and by himself also in another passage (bk. xxiv., chap. ix.), that Valerius took away the securis from the fasces, so long as the consuls were within the city.—In contentionem descendit. “He mounted a high place for the purpose of delivering an harangue.” The steps of the Curia Hostilia are probably meant.

27–35. Ibi audire jussis. “Then being ordered to listen,” i. e., being called to silence. The more usual reading is ubi audire jussi, but this is less spirited.—Mortem occubuisset. “He had encountered death.”—Ad crimen atque invidiam. “For accusation and calumny,” i. e., as an object of these.—Ex liberatore patriae, etc. “That he had fallen back (in their estimation) to a level with the Aquilii and Vetelii, from having been regarded as the liberator of his country.”—Nunquam ergo, etc. The transition from the oratio obliqua to the oratio recta most happily expresses the excitement of the speaker.—Adeo a vobis spectata. “So fully proved by you.”—Subiturum. “Would undergo.”

37–45. Tam leviter momento, etc. “Does my reputation hang with so light a weight in the balance?” i. e., when my reputation and your fear of my making myself king are weighed against each other, does the former hang with so light a weight in the scales?—Adeo est, fundata, etc. “Is my credit so lightly established?”—Non obstabunt. “Shall not stand in the way of.”—Colli etiam subjiciam. “I will also place it beneath the hill.”—Melius creditur. “Is more securely intrusted.” —Ubi nunc Vica Pota est. “Where now the temple of Victory is.” Supply aedes.—Vica Pota, that is, “the victor and conqueror” (quae vincit et potitur), was the old name for Victoria, the goddess of victory.

CHAPTER VIII.

1-4. Quae . . . absolverent. “Of such a nature as to acquit.” The relative is equivalent here to tales ut, and hence is followed by the subjunctive. Consult Zumpt, § 558.—Sed quae aede in contrarium verterent, etc. “But such as to change the whole affair to so opposite a character, that they even made him popular.” After verterent supply rem.—Popularem. The term popularis, in its political sense, properly means one who is attached or devoted to the people, as opposed to the nobility. Hence the general signification of “popular.” So in the plural, by populares are strictly meant the people’s party, as opposed to the optimates or aristocracy.—Cognomen Publicola. The term Publicola means literally, “one who courts the people” (from populus and colo), and thus, as here, “a friend of the people.” The form Poplicula or Poplicola was the most ancient. Poplicola generally occurs in inscriptions, but we also find Poplicula (Orelli, Inscr., No. 547). Publicola was the more modern form, and seems to have been the one usually employed by the Romans in later times. We find it in the best manuscripts of Livy, and in the palimpsest manuscript of Cicero De Republica.

6-10. Sacrandoque cum bonis capite ejus. “And the devoting of the life together with the property of him.” This ceremony of devoting the guilty head was equivalent to a declaration of outlawry. The property of the offender was confiscated, and any one might kill him with impunity.—Ut suae unius in his gratia esset. “That the popularity in the case of these might be exclusively his own.” Observe that sua unius is for sui unius, or, in other words, unius is put in apposition with the personal pronoun implied in the possessive sua. (Zumpt, § 424.) —Collegae subrogando. “For electing a new colleague.” The verb subrogare means literally, “to choose in place of another.” So here, “to choose a colleague in place of Brutus.”

11-21. Sp. Lucretius. The father of Lucretia, Sp. Lucretius Tricipitinus. Compare bk. i., chap. viii., line 21, and chap. ix., line 20.—Bruto statin Horatium suggerunt. They place Horatius immediately after Brutus.” Polybius (iii., 22) mentions Brutus and Horatius together as the first consuls.—Memoria intercidisse. “That it has fallen out of remembrance.” The idea literally conveyed by intercidere is, as we have before remarked, that of something slipping between the fingers and falling to the ground.—Necessarit. “The kinsfolk.”

23-27. Postem jam tenenti. The person who dedicated a temple held the door-post during the ceremony.—Fædum nuntium incutient. “They abruptly communicate the shocking intelligence.” Incutio literally conveys the idea of suddenly striking into and thus seeking to excite and agitate. The false news on the present occasion was brought by M. Valerius, the brother of Publilia.—Funestaque familia. “And that the family having been defiled,” i.e., as having in it an unburied corpse.—Non crediderit factum. “Whether he did not believe the fact.” Supply utrum before non.—Tantum animo roboris. “So much firmness in his mind.” Supply mentally, “that he was not disconcerted by the intelligence.”—Nec interpretatio est facilis. “Nor is the decision an easy one.”

28-31. Nihil aliud ad eum nuntium, etc. “Having been turned off from the purpose in hand to this intelligence, no farther than that he might order the body to be carried forth (for interment).” More literally, “In no other way.” If any omen was unexpectedly presented to a man, while his thoughts were employed on some other subject, this was called augurium obliticum, and he was at liberty not to receive it, as was the case with Horatius. But if he asked for an omen from the gods, and got one, it was called impetrativum, and he was bound to obey it.—Inde. “After this.”

CHAPTER IX.

1, 2. Ad Larrem Porsonam. “To Lars Porsena.” The term Lars or Larth was a title of honor, given to almost all the Etruscan kings or chiefs, and makes the genitive in Lartis or Larthis. It probably means “Lord.” On the other hand, Lar, signifying “a god,” makes the genitive in Laris.—Porsonam. The quantity of the penult in this word is doubtful. We might infer from the form Porsona that the penult was long, but we sometimes find it short in the poets. Niebuhr, indeed, asserts that Martial (Epigr., xiv., 98) was guilty of a decided blunder in shortening the penult; but Mr. Macaulay points out (Lays of Ancient Rome, p. 45) that other Latin poets have committed the same decided blunder, as, for instance, Horace in his pure Iambic line, “Minacis aut Etrusca Porsena manus” (Epod., xvi., 4), and Silvus Italicus in several passages. The penult, however, is not short in all the Latin poets, as the line of Virgil proves, “Nec non Tarquinium ejectum Porsena jubebat” (Aen., viii., 646), and the Greek writers make it long, Πορσήνας (Plut., Publ., 16), Πορσήνος (Dionys., v., 21), etc. It would, therefore, seem that the word was pronounced indifferently either Porsena or Porsena. (Smith, Dict. Biogr., s.v.)—Clusium regem. "King of Clusium." Clusium, now Chiusi, was an inland city of Etruria, one of the most ancient and powerful in that country, and one of the twelve cities which formed the Etrurian confederation. It was situated about twenty miles to the south of Cortona, and was distant eight hundred stadia (one hundred Roman miles) from Rome. Its earlier name was Camara, which makes it probable that it was originally an Umbrian city.

7-13. Satis libertatem ipsam, etc. "That liberty has sufficient sweets of itself," i.e., without its being encouraged from without by suffering this custom of expelling kings to pass unavenged. —Nisi quanta vi, etc. "That unless kings, with as great energy as states seek it out, with so great protect their kingdoms, the highest things are reduced to a level with the lowest," etc.—Rei pulcherrimae. "The most beautiful institution."—Amplum. "A great thing."

18-21. Vel cum servitate pacem acciperet. "Should accept peace even though attended with slavery."—Blandimenta. "Conciliatory favors."—Cuma. Cuma, one of the most ancient of the Greek colonies in Italy and Sicily, was situated on the coast of Campania, and was powerful at this time both by land and sea.—Satis quoque vendendi arbitrium, etc. "The license also of selling salt, as it was sold at an exorbitant price, was taken away from private individuals, the whole expense having been assumed by the public treasury," i.e., the whole expense attending the manufacture of the article. The object of this arrangement was to supply the salt to the people at a lower rate. With sumptu supply recepto, an ellipsis naturally suggested by in publicum, and after publicum supply erarium. The salt-works referred to were at Ostia, and had been established by Ancus Marcius. By the arrangement now introduced they were no longer let by auction, but the state took them under its own management, and carried them on by means of persons employed to work on the public account. In retaining omni sumptu we have followed the reading of all the manuscripts. Lipsius, who is followed by Zumpt and others, conjectures sumptuo, and makes the meaning to be, "all the salt being transferred to the state." Gronovius gives omne sumptum, making arbitrium mean the "farming," which was let out (venibat) at a high price, and which the state now took to itself. The manuscript reading is decidedly the best.

23-25. Portorii et tributo. "From port-duties and taxes." By portoria are meant duties paid on imported and exported goods. Sometimes also the term is applied to the duties raised upon goods for being carried through a country or over bridges. The tributum was not a property tax in the strict sense of the word, but a direct tax upon objects without regard to their produce, like a land or house tax, which indeed formed the main part of it. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 581.)—Plébes. Equivalent here to pauperes, which latter term again is the same as proletarior or capite censi.—Qui oneri ferendo essent.
"Who might be able to bear the burden." This construction of esse with the dative of the gerund is usually explained by an ellipsis of idoneus; but it is better not to have recourse to an ellipsis, and to consider it analogous to the expression auxilio alicui esse. (Zumpt, § 664, note 1.)—Satis stipendii. "Tax enough."—Si liberos educerent.
"If they brought up their children." The reference is to physical education merely. The manuscripts have educent, which appears to have arisen by abbreviation (educ'ent) from educerent. Many editions have educarent, but this refers to moral education, which the pauperes could not afford to give.

CHAPTER X.

1–11. Pro se quisque. "Each for himself," i. e., as best he could.
—Sepiunt præsidii. The parts that were not sufficiently strong they make secure by military posts.—Tibéri objecto. On this side therefore there were no walls.—Pons sublicius iter pene, etc. "The sub-lician bridge almost afforded a passage to the enemy, had there not been," etc., i. e., would have afforded, etc. Historical writers often employ the perfect indicative instead of the pluperfect subjunctive, to render a description more animated, and to indicate that a part of the inference has already come to pass, and that the whole would have been realized if some obstacle had not been thrown in the way. (Zumpt, § 519.)—Munimentum. "Bulwark."—Janiculum. Compare bk. i., chap. xxxiii., line 24.—Citatos. "At full speed."—Reprehensans.
An unusual form, employed to express frequency of action.—Obsistens. "Standing in their way."—Testabatur. "He assured them." Observe the poetic tinge in obtestans... testabatur.—Præsidio. "Their post," i. e., the Janiculum, where they had been stationed.

12, 13. Si transitum pontem, etc. "If they should have left the bridge after having been crossed by them in their rear," i. e., if they crossed the bridge and left it behind them. As we can say in the active transeo pontem, so we can have in the passive transitum pons.
Some less correctly read transitus, or else make transitum a substantive in apposition with pontem. Compare "Alpes transitae," bk. xxi., chap. xliii., line 12, and "Amne transito," bk. xxiii., chap. xxviii.— Jam. "That soon."

18–18. Monere, prædicere. Historical infinitives. Many editions, less correctly, connect these in construction with the previous clause;
"That he therefore charged, that he warned them."—Possint. The present is here more animated than present, as given in most editions, and brings the action at once before the view. So likewise interruppant.—Aditum. "Entrance."—Insignisque inter conspecta, etc. "And conspicious amid the backs visible to the foe of those retiring from the fight." We have preferred the ablative pugna as the more natural reading. The ordinary text has pugna cedentium, "of those yielding (or, giving way) to the fight."—Obversis comminus, etc.
"With his arms turned against them for close encounter." Observe that comminus is to be construed with ad ineundum praedium.

20–27. Lartium. An Etrurian name, and indicating, as Weissen-born suggests, that there were Etrurians fighting on the side of the Romans also.—Et quod tumultuosissimum, etc. "And what was the most furious part of the battle."—Proceres. The Lucumones, or lead-—Alcanam oppugnatum. "To attack that of others."

29–35. Incipiant. The plural, because the idea implied in alius alium is plural. Cicero, however, in such a case, would, as Zumpt remarks (§ 367), have employed the singular verb. Gronovius is in favor of reading incipiat here also.—Neque ille minus obstinatus, etc.
"And he with no less resolution kept possession of the bridge in firmest attitude of defence." Gradus is here employed in its gladiatorial sense, to indicate the position or ground taken by a combatant.
The expression ingenti gradu does not therefore mean, as some think,
"with vast strides," but refers to one firm and fixed position.—Impetu.
"By a rush."—Alacritate perfecti operis. "From joy at the completion of the work."—Impetum sustinuit. "Choked their onset."

37, 38. Hunc militem. "This thy soldier."—Ita sic armatus.
"Upon this, armed as he was." Observe that ita is here equivalent in reality to his dictis. There is no need therefore of regarding ita sic, with Drakenborch and others, as pleonastic here. Ita is to be construed separately.—Incolunmis ad suos tranavit. Polybius (vi., 56) relates the legend differently. According to his account, Cocalis defended the bridge alone, and perished in the river. Macaulay observes (Lays of Ancient Rome, p. 43), with much probability, that it is likely that there were two old Roman lays about the defence of the bridge; and that, while the story which Livy has transmitted to us was preferred by the multitude, the other, which ascribed the whole glory to Horatius alone, may have been the favorite of the Horatian house. (Smith, Dict. Ant., s. v.)

41–44. Statua in comito posita. This statue was afterwards struck by lightning, and the Etrurian haruspices, who had been consulted respecting the prodigy, envious of the glory of Rome, caused it to be placed on a lower spot, where the sun never shone upon it. But their treachery was discovered; they were put to death, and the statue was placed on a higher spot, in the Vulcaual, or temple of Vulcan, above the comitium. (Aul. Gell., iv., 5.) The statue still existed in the time of Pliny (H. N., xxxiv., 5, 11, § 22).—Circumnaravit. "He went around with a plough." The reference is to the drawing a furrow around, not to the ploughing up of land. Dionysius says that Sacvola got the same quantity of land. Some commentators think that the domain of the infant republic was too limited to allow such a grant, but they forget that the whole story is mythical.—Studia. "Exhibitions of zeal."—Pro domestici copiis. "In proportion to their domestic resources."—Fraudans. "Depriving."

CHAPTER XI.

3–11. Plano. The plain between the Janiculum and the Tiber.—Subvexi. "To be conveyed up (the river)." Literally, "To be brought from below."—Ut milites transflumen trajiceret. "That he might throw his soldiers across the river." We have given trajiceret, the conjecture of Gronovius, in place of the ordinary reading trajicere.—Adeo infestum reddidit. "He so harassed." Infestus is here used passively.—Propellere. "To drive any thing forth."

11–18. Hoc tantum licentiae. "This so great a degree of impunity," i.e., in their inroads.—Consilio. "Policy."—In parvis rebus negligentem ultor. "A remiss avenger in trifling matters," i.e., indifferent about retaliating by inflicting a petty chastisement.—Frequentes. "In great numbers."—Aversissima. "Most remote." It was on the other side of the city.—Servitia infida transfugere, etc. "Faithless slaves were in the habit of deserting, and the enemy discovered it by the information of a deserter."

21–23. Ad secundum lapidem. "At the second mile-stone," i.e., two miles from Rome. The mile-stones along the Roman roads were called lapides, and also militaria, and, when no other place is mentioned, Rome is to be understood as the starting-point. Sometimes we have in full ab Urbe, or a Roma. Augustus set up a gilt marble pillar in the forum at Rome, to mark the central point from which the great roads diverged to the several gates of Rome. It was called Milkarium aureum. Whether the miles began to be reckoned from the pillar itself, or from the city gates, is uncertain.—Portam Collinam. The Porta Collina, at the northern extremity of the agger of Servius Tullius, was the most northerly of all the gates, and lay near the point where the Via Salaria branched off from the Via Nomentana. The Etruscans would pass by this gate in going round to the Porta Esquilina.
25–31. Porta Navia. The position of this gate is uncertain. It appears to have been in the line of wall between the Aventine and Cælian hills. — Educit. He leads them out from Mount Cælius, through the gate called Cælimontana, to the south of the Porta Esquiline. — Versis in Valerium. "Who had turned against Valerius." — Redditus clamor. "The shout was returned." — Ad fugam sæptis omnibus viis. "All the avenues for escape having been blocked up."

CHAPTER XII.

1–8. Erat. "Continued." — Expugnaturum se urbem. "That he would force the city into a surrender." — Mucius. This individual appears here as a patrician, and yet the gens Mucia is first mentioned 300 years later, and then too as plebeian. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 213.) — Servientem, cum sub regibus esset. "Even when in a state of slavery, while they were under their kings." — Liberum erandem populum. "(And yet) that the same people, when (now) free." — Itaque, etc. "And so (as I intended to state) Mucius, having thought," etc. The discourse was suspended while Livy stated Mucius’s reflections, and now he resumes the thread of the story, and returns, as it were, to mention what he had determined upon. — Facinore. "Deed."

12–22. Fortuna tum urbis, etc. "The forlorn condition of the city at this time corroborating the charge," i.e., stamping it with credibility. — In vicem ulter. "An avenger in turn." — Proficiscitur. According to Dionysius, Mucius had learned the Etrurian language in his youth, and arrayed himself on the present occasion in Etrurian armor. — Regium tribunal. "The king’s tribunal." The elevated seat of the commander in the camp is meant. — Multa ageret. "Was busily engaged." — Eun milites, etc. Observe the asyndeton. — Ignorando regem. "By showing his ignorance of the king." — Quo temere traxit fortunam facinus. "To whom chance blindly directed the stroke." Quo is equivalent here to in quem. Literally, "Whither."

26–30. Destitutus. "Placed helpless." Both meanings of the verb destitutus are here combined, namely, the original one of "to set down or place," and the later and more common one of "to forsake or abandon." — Romanus. Placed first as the emphatic word. — Hostis hostem, etc. As there is no opposition of persons here, the pronoun ego is not required to be expressed. — Nec ad mortem, etc. "Nor have I less resolution for death in my own case than I had for death in the case of another." — Fortia. "With fortitude." The neuter plural of the adjective taken in an adverbial sense, in imitation of the Greek idiom. [Nägelsbach (Stilistik, § 102) explains it as a pregnant construction, equivalent to et agendo et patiendo fortis facinora edere.] 30-35. Nec unus in te, etc. “Nor have I alone entertained these feelings against thee.”—Proinde in hoc discrimen, etc. “Wherefore, gird thyself for this risk, if it so please thee, that for each successive hour thou mayest have to do battle for thy life.”—Regia. “Of thy pavilion.” The royal tent, not palace, is meant.—Timueris. Perfect subjunctive as imperative.

37-41. Circundari ignes. “To be placed around him,” i.e., to be kindled around.—Quas insidiarum sibi minas, etc. “What threats of snares he was darkly throwing out against him.”—Qui magnam gloriam vident. “Who have great glory in view.” Another reading is petunt.—Foculo. “Into a brazier.” The foculus was a species of low movable hearth, used properly for sacrifices to the Lares. Consult Dict. Antiq., s.v.

42-51. Alienato ab sensu. “ Estranged from feeling.”—Attonitus. “Thunderstruck.”—Altaribus. Put here for foculo.—In te. “Against thine own self.”—Jubarem macte virtute esse. “I would bid thee go on and prosper in thy valor.”—Pro mea patria. “On the side of my country.”—Iure belli liberum. “Released from the law of war,” i.e., from the punishment which, by the laws of war, I could inflict on thee as an enemy.—Remunerans meritum. “Making a return for the kindness.”—Ut tuleris. “So that thou hast obtained.” Literally, “Hast borne away.”—Ceteri, ut cuique, etc. “The rest, according as it shall have fallen by lot to each one first (i.e., before the rest of his associates), will be present, each at his proper time, until fortune shall have put thee in their power.” More literally, “Shall have given thee as an opportune one (for the blow).” Several manuscripts and many editions have utcumque, “in whatsoever way.” We have followed the reading of Drakenborch, as affording the best sense.

CHAPTER XIII.

1-10. Sceævola. The name is said to be derived from sceævus, “left” (compare the Greek σκαιος), and vola, “the hollow or palm of the hand.” The appellation sceævola, therefore, will mean “the left-handed.” For remarks on the legend of Mucius Sceævola, consult Niebuhr, H.R., vol. i., p. 544 seqq.—Quo nihil se, etc. “From which nothing but the mistake of the assassin had sheltered him.” The ordinary phraseology would have been a quo.—Jactatum nequidquam, etc. “Among the conditions, the proposition was thrown out in vain respecting,” etc.—De agro Veientibus restituendo, etc. “His request was obtained respecting the restoring of their territory to the Veientes, and the necessity of giving hostages, in case they wished the garrison to be withdrawn from the Janiculum, was wrung from the Romans.”
Livy very carelessly mixes up here the two accounts of the termination of this war, the one dictated by Roman vanity, which made Porsena to have been foiled of his object, and the other, or true one, which made Rome to have been actually conquered by the Etrurian monarch. Consult note at the close of the present chapter.

17-21. Ad publica decora. "To public acts of glory," i.e., to earn distinction by patriotic exploits.—Ripa Tiberis. A different locality, of course, from that mentioned at the beginning of chapter xi., since Porsena had now retired from the Roman territory.—Ad propinquos restituit. Another tradition, of far less celebrity than the one here followed by Livy, made all the hostages to have been massacred by Tarquinius, with the exception of Valeria, who swam over the Tiber and escaped to Rome; and the equestrian statue, mentioned below, to have been erected to her, and not to Cælia. (Dionys., v., 33. Compare Plut., Poplic., 19.)

22-30. Oratores. Poetic for legatos.—Alias haud magni facere. "That he did not make the other hostages of any great consequence.* —Supra Coclicis Muciosque. In comparisons of this kind the person is often mentioned instead of the act or quality by which he is made conspicuous.—Præ se ferre. "Openly declared."—Utrinque constitit fides. "Good faith stood firm on both sides," i.e., maintained its ground.—Laudatam. "After having been eulogized by him."—Parte. "With half." Supply dimidia.

32-34. Quod et virginitati decorum, etc. "What was both honorable to her virgin delicacy, and was sure to be approved of by the agreement of the hostages themselves," etc.—Opportuna. "Exposed."

The tale which Livy follows in the present chapter, respecting the conclusion of the war with Porsena, was that by which Roman vanity concealed one of the earliest and greatest disasters of the city. The real fact is that Rome was completely conquered by Porsena. This is expressly stated by Tacitus (Hist., iii., 72), and is confirmed by other writers. Thus Dionysius relates (v., 34) that the Senate sent Porsena an ivory throne, a sceptre, a golden crown, and a triumphal robe, which implies that they did homage to him as their sovereign lord; for we find that the Etrurian cities are represented to have sent the same honors to the Roman king Tarquinius Priscus as an acknowledgment of his supremacy. (Dionys., iii., 62.) So thorough, indeed, was the subjection of the Romans, that they were expressly prohibited from using iron for any other purpose than agriculture. (Plin., H. N., xxxiv., 14, 39, § 139.) Even the common story related that they were deprived of the land which they had taken from the Veientines; and Niebuhr shows that they lost all the territory which the kings had gained on the right bank of the Tiber, and that they did not recover it until a long time afterwards. He remarks that we find the thirty tribes which were established by Servius Tullius reduced to twenty after the war with Porsena, and that it appears clear from the history of the subsequent war with the Veientines that the Roman territory did not then extend much beyond the Janiculum.

The Romans, however, did not long remain subject to the Etrurians. After the conquest of Rome, Arruns, the son of Porsena, proceeded to attack Aricia, but was defeated before that city by the united forces of the Latin cities, assisted by the Greeks of Cumæ. The Etrurians appear, in consequence, to have been confined to their own territory on the right bank of the Tiber, and the Romans to have availed themselves of the opportunity to recover their independence.

The object of Porsena’s expedition against Rome is said to have been the restoration of the Tarquins, and it is natural that such should have been the belief in later times, happening as the war did within a year or two of the establishment of the republic. But if such had been its real object, the Tarquins must have been restored to Rome on the conquest of the city. It is therefore more natural to believe that this war was in reality a great outbreak of the Etrurian nations, who meditated the conquest of Latium, and attacked Rome first, because it was the first city that lay in their way. K. O. Müller even goes so far in opposition to the old tale as to conjecture that it was Porsena who expelled the Tarquins from Rome (Etrusker, vol. i., p. 122; Smith, Dict. Biogr., s. v. Porsena).

CHAPTER XIV.

1–16. Huic tam pacate profectioni, etc. “A custom quite at variance with this so peaceful a departure of the Etrurian king from the city,” etc.—Solemnia. “Established usages.”—Bona Porsene regis vendendi. “Of selling the goods of King Porsena.” The public crier, before the sale began, repeated this form of words, which seem to breathe a hostile spirit, though they did not, according to Livy, as appears from the king’s peaceful departure, originate from any hostile proceeding.—Quam hic præ se ferat titulus. “Than this form of words may seem to import.”—Proximum vero. “The most probable account.”—Venisse. “Were sold.” From veneo, -ire.—Gratiam numeris significante. “Implying gratitude for the gift.”—Fortuna regiæ. “Of the king’s property.”—In potestatem. For in potestate, an irregularity usual, as Zumpt remarks, in some public formulæ, but only sometimes retained by historians. [The accusative is often found in MSS. in these expressions, and seems to have arisen from the confusion of the accusative and ablative in pronunciation;
the letter m at the end of words being scarcely audible. Madvig remarks, we never find in vincla habere for in vinculis habere."

The Romans of a later age were constantly reminded of Porsena’s expedition against their city by the custom at all auctions of offering for sale first the goods of King Porsena. Niebuhr conjectures, with much probability, that this custom may have arisen from the circumstance that, when the Romans recovered their independence, they must have obtained possession of property within the city belonging to Porsena, which they probably sold by auction. (Smith, Dict. Biogr., s.v. Porsena.)

20–25. Arician. Compare bk. i., chap. 1.—Tantum spei fecere. "Occasioned so much hope."—Ipso incursu. "At the very outset."—Declinavere. "Turned aside."—Effuseque praefatos hostes, etc. "And having wheeled about, attacked in the rear the enemy borne past them in disorder," i.e., who had dashed beyond them in loose array in pursuit of the Aricinians.

27–33. In medio caesi. "Were enclosed and cut to pieces."—Et fortuna et specie supplicum. "In both the condition and with the air of supplicants."—Divisique in hospitia. "And were distributed through lodgings."—Hospitum urbisque caritas. "Affection for their hosts and the city."—Tuscum vicum. According, however, to Varro, L. L., iv., 8, and Tacitus, Ann., iv., 65, this street was constructed by Romulus. These conflicting statements may perhaps be reconciled by considering the later settlement as a kind of second or subsidiary one.

CHAPTER XV.

1–6. M. Horatius, etc. The common text has P. Lucretius inde et P. Valerius Publicola consules facti, omitting the consuls of one year. According to Dionysius (v., 2), and the Fasti consulares, M. Horatius and P. Valerius were consuls, and after them Sp. Lartius and T. Hermnius. The reading which we have adopted, therefore, is decidedly preferable to the ordinary one. Consult the remarks of Drakenborch, ad loc.—Honoratissimus quisque, etc. "Each most distinguished one of the fathers." Zumpt thinks that honoratissimus here means "who had held the highest offices," but up to this time few high offices could have been filled in the infant republic.

7–14. Non quin breviter, etc. Supply before these words qui regi nuntiarent. "To announce to the king that the reason why chosen ones of the fathers were sent to him rather than an answer given to his ambassadors at Rome was not because an answer could not have been made in brief terms that the royal family is not received, but in order that, etc. Observe that quin (i. e., qui non) is equivalent here to quia non. —Neu in tantis mutuis beneficiis, etc. “And that amid so great mutual acts of kindness the feelings (of good-will) on either side might not be disturbed.” —In perniciem suam faciles. “Bent on their own destruction.”

15–17. Non in regno, etc. “That the Roman people were no longer under the dominion of their kings, but in the enjoyment of liberty.” Walker objects to this natural and obvious meaning of the text, and says that the idea intended to be conveyed is as follows: “That the Roman people, under the government of the kings, did not exist as a people,” i. e., had no power or influence; but that now, in a free state, and in the enjoyment of liberty, they did exist as a people, i. e., had influence and power. An ingenious but very improbable explanation. The meaning of Livy’s words is simply this, that the Romans, being now in a state of liberty, were resolved to maintain that liberty, and have no more kings. —Eam esse voluntatem omnium. Some editions have Ea esse vota, eam esse voluntatem omnium; but the words ea esse vota are merely a conjecture of Rhenanus, drawn in part from one of the manuscripts, though Drakenborch confesses that they are in Livy’s style and manner.

20–29. Verecundia. “By a feeling of respect.” —Obstinatum. “Fixed.” —Neque ego obtundam, etc. “I will neither annoy you by any longer urging these same things to no purpose.” Obtundere has usually an ellipsis of aures, and means literally “to drum the same thing again and again into a person’s ears.” —Quod nullum in me est. “Which does not exist in me,” i. e., which it is not in my power to afford. —Distineat. “May interrupt.” Literally, “May part, or divide.” —Agrum Veientem, etc. The more probable account has already been given in the note at the close of the previous chapter. —Fida ita fuit. “Remained thus inviolable.”

added who came from that same country." There was in later times also a nova Claudia tribus, which likewise consisted of Sabines. —In principum dignationem. "To the rank of the first men in the state."

18-26. Cum ita adstizissent. "When they had so prostrated."—Rebellionis. "Of a renewal of hostilities."—Principis belli pacisque artibus. "The leading man in the arts of war and peace."—Copiosis familiaribus adeo exquisis. "With private resources so scanty."—De publico. Supply erario.—Est datus. Some read est elatus. "He was buried." Literally, "He was borne forth (to his funeral)."—Pometia. Consult note on bk. i., chap. liii., line 6.—Cora. A city of Latium, on the left of the Via Appia, and about thirty-seven miles distant from Rome; now Cori.—Deficiunt. "Revolts."—Ad Auruncos. The original inhabitants of these places would seem to have belonged to the stem of the Ausones, and these to have now driven out the Roman or Latin colonists. The Aurunci and Ausones were originally the same people, the two names being merely different forms of the same, with the change, so common in Latin, of the s into the r (Aurunci = Aurunci = Auruni = Ausuni).

29, 30. Pometiam compulsum est. "Was concentrated at Pometia." More literally, "Was driven to Pometia."—Cedibus temperatum est. "Was any check given to slaughter."—Et quasi aliquanto plures. "Both a good many more were slain, and," etc.

CHAPTER XVII.

1-6. Verginius. Written also Virginius.—Vineis. "By vineae." The vinea was a species of shed or mantlet, under cover of which the assailants advanced to beat down or undermine the walls.—Magis jam inexpiali odio. "More by this time through implacable hatred." Jam means, now, after their many defeats.—Excucurrissent. "Had sallied forth from the town."

10-18. Reditum. "A return was made." Supply est.—Relatus. Some editions have relictus, "having been left," i. e., in the camp at Pometia.—Supplendoque exercitui. "And for recruiting the army."—Cum in majore beli. "Both with greater rage for war," i. e., warlike rage.—Aliaque mole belli. "And the other apparatus of war," i. e., the other military engines.—Jam in eo esset, ut, etc. "The soldiery were now on the point of scaling the walls." Literally, "It was now in such a state that the soldiery would have gone forth upon the walls."—Nihilo minus fide. "No less cruelly."—Sub corona venierunt, etc. "The rest, who were colonists, were sold as slaves."
Literally, "Were sold under the crown." An ordinary expression for the sale of prisoners of war, from their being crowned with a chaplet at the time of sale. Observe that by coloni alii are meant the other citizens of Pometia.—Dirutum. And yet in chap. xxii. he speaks of Pometia and Cora as places that then flourished; and in chap. xxv. he talks of the capture and plunder of Suessa Pometia; in consequence of which inconsistency it has been considered probable that Livy, following different writers, has described the same war in two places. Dionysius makes no mention of this war with the Aurunci.

CHAPTER XVIII.

3–8. Per ludos. "On occasion of the games." But per lasciviam, "through a wanton spirit."—Rixa. "A quarrel."—Rebellionem. "A renewal of hostilities."—Super bella Sabini metum. The ordinary reading is supra, but the thirty communities (triginta populi) are the thirty Latin cities which formed a league, and super, therefore, as Zumpt remarks, is the necessary reading according to good Latin, in the sense of "in addition to," supra being used only of place, "above."—Octavio Mamilio. Compare chap. xv., towards the close.

9, 10. In hac tantarum, etc. "While the city was in a state of excitement amid this expectation of such important events," i. e., being disquieted amid the anticipations of such serious difficulties.—Sed nec quo anno, etc. "But it is not sufficiently clear in what year; or who were the consuls unto whom, because they were of the Tarquinian party (for that, too, is handed down), little confidence was extended," etc. We have placed a semicolon after anno, as recommended by Prendeville, consuli bust being the dative depending on creditum sit. Dionysius says that a dictator was appointed four years before this, when Lartius and Clœlius were consuls, and that this appointment was occasioned by the people's refusing to enlist.

15–20. Consulares legere. "They chose men of consular rank," i. e., as Dictator and Magister Equitum. The selection of the latter of these functionaries, however, was commonly left to the dictator, unless the senatus consultum specified, as was sometimes the case, and as would seem to have happened in the present instance, the name of the person who was to be appointed. In later times the office of magister equitum was held usually not by a man of consular rank, but by a vir pretorius, or one who had been prœtor. The dictator himself was always nominated by one of the consuls, but it was necessary that a decree of the Senate should be first passed, authorizing one of the consuls to do this. As the Senate, therefore, virtually chose him through the consul, we have legere in the text. Some editors make consulares the nominative, "men of consular rank chose them," but this is altogether erroneous.—M. Valerium, M. filium. That is, Manium Valerium, Marci (Valerii) filium.—Quis, si maxime, etc. Observe that qui refers here to the senators.

23-36. Postquam preferrit secures viderunt. The dictator was preceded by twenty-four lictors, and, as there was originally no appeal from his sentence, his lictors bore the axes in the fasces even in the city, as a symbol of his absolute power over the lives of the citizens, although, as we have already seen, by the Valerian law, the axes had disappeared from the fasces of the consuls. Subsequently, however, an appeal lay from their sentence to the people.—Dicto. "His order."—In cura parendi. "In careful submission." Literally, "In the care of obeying."—Hominibus adolescentibus. The Sabine youth mentioned at the beginning of the chapter.—Prestare. "To make good."—Tacita. "With the tacit consent of both parties," i.e., without any formal ratification of the same.

CHAPTER XIX.

Compare bk. i., chap. ix., line 24.—Prænestæ. Now Palestrina, an old and powerful city of Latium, nearly due east from Rome, from which it was distant twenty-three miles.—Gliscens. "Kindling." Glisco properly means to gather strength, as a fire.—A. Postumius dictator.
This statement must, as Zumpt remarks, if we believe Livy's own declaration (chap. xviii.) that only men of consular rank were named dictators, be doubted. For A. Postumius was neither one of the consuls of the present year, nor had he ever borne the office before. It would seem more correct, therefore, as the same editor remarks, to follow those annalists who, as Livy tells us in chap. xxi., assigned the battle with the Latins at Lake Regillus to the third year after this.
—Ad lacum Regillum. The Lake Regillus lay at the foot of the Tus-quan hills.—Sustineri ira non potuit, etc. "Their fury could not be restrained, but that they must engage forthwith."

12-20. Aliquanto quam cetera, etc. "Considerably more hard-fought and desperate than all the others (had been)."—Suisset ipsi corporibus diminantes. "But they themselves in their own persons encountering the risk." The common text has ipsis. Our reading ipsi is an emendation of Gronovius.—Ætate et virtutis gravior. He was now about ninety years of age; and therefore Dionysius says he was not at the battle.—Admisit. "Urged on." Equivalent often, as here, to immisit.

23-30. Nec seellit, etc. "Nor did he, as he came on, escape the notice of," etc.—Contra quem, etc. Observe that quem here refers to Aebutius, and ille to dux Tusculanus, or Mamilius.—Tantaque vis infestis, etc. "And so great was the impetuosity of the parties, as they came onward with hostile spears, that the arm of Aebutius was pierced through, the breast of Mamilius was wounded." Literally, "Was struck." This does not, of course, imply that it was pierced through like the arm of his opponent, but the idea of wounding is merely a general one.—Primum ciet. "Stirs up the fight."—Exa. Scil. cohors exsulum.

CHAPTER XX.

3–11. Ostentantem se. "Displaying himself proudly."—Ut, cujus familia, etc. "That the slaying of the kings might be a glory on the part of that same family, on the part of which their expulsion was a glory." The Latin participles are here converted in our idiom into nouns.—In fenso cessit hostis. "Shrank from his infuriated enemy." Literally, "Yielded unto," etc.—Ex transverso. "Sideways." More literally, "From a cross direction."—Nec quidquam equitis vulnere, etc. The galloping of the horse contributed to his fall. This is his reason for saying that the speed of the horse was not in any way checked by the rider's wound.—Ad terram defluxit. "Sank down gradually to earth." Observe the poetic form of the language here.

14–16. Cohorti sua. Even in the early times of the republic the Roman general appears to have been attended by a select troop as his body-guard. At a later period Scipio Africanus formed a regular cohort for this purpose, termed cohort praetoria, out of the bravest troops, whom he exempted from all other duties except guarding his person, and to whom he gave sixfold pay. At a still later day the praetorian cohorts became a separate force owing to the policy of Augustus, and played an important part in the history of the empire.—Dat signum. "He gives orders."—Metu ancipiti. "Through fear from both sides," i.e., fear both from the enemy and their own side."

22–34. Ex subsidiariis. "From the reserve." The Triarii probably are meant.—Tanto vi majore, etc. "Joined battle with the leader of the enemy with so much greater fury than the master of the horse had done a little before."—Veruto. Consult note on bk. i., chap. xliii., line 20.—In primum. "To the front." The more usual form of expression would be in primam aciem.—Pro antesignanis. "As a front line." The antesignani were the men in the first line of infantry, so called because the standards (signa) were carried in the second and third lines. They were otherwise denominated hastati.—Juventutis proceres. "The nobles of the young men," i.e., the young nobles. The Equites were all Juniorces, and the most conspicuous for birth and station of all included under the military age.—Equato genere paganæ. That is, by their foregoing the advantage of their horses, and forgetting their superiority of rank.

35-42. Impulsi Latini. "The Latins were driven in," i.e., beaten back.—Equi admoti equi. "Their horses were brought to the cavalry," i.e., to those horsemen who had dismounted as above.—Eodem impetu quo fuderant. "By the same charge with which they had routed."—Hoc modo ad lacum Regillius pugnatum est. Hardly any event in early Roman history has been more disguised by poetical embellishment and fiction than the battle of Regillus, and it is impossible to decide what amount of historical character may be attached to it.

CHAPTER XXI.

1-4. Triennio dieâde. "During three years thereafter."—Claudius. Another form for Clunius.—Edes Saturno dedicata. It was in this temple the public money and public records were kept.—Saturnalia institutus festus dies. "The Saturnalia festival-day was instituted." Observe the apposition between festus dies and Saturnalia, and compare bk. xxxiv., chap. liv.: "Cerelia ludos feceverunt." The Saturnalia was the festival of Saturn, to whom the inhabitants of Latium attributed the introduction of agriculture and the arts of civilized life. Falling towards the end of December, at the season when the agricultural labors of the year were fully completed, it was celebrated in ancient times, by the rustic population, as a sort of joyous harvest-home. During its continuance no public business could be transacted, the law courts were closed, the schools kept holiday, to commence a war was impious, to punish a malefactor involved pollution. Slaves, too, enjoyed during this period some singular immunities and privileges. Strictly speaking, one day was consecrated to religious observances (hence festus dies in our text), the festivities, however, lasted seven days.

6-13. Hoc demum anno. "In this year and not sooner." This is the account of Dionysius, and very probably the correct one.—Dubire fidei. "Of doubtful fidelity (to the state)," i.e., suspected of favoring the interests of the Tarquins.—Tanti errores implicant temporum. "Such mistakes about dates embarrass one," i.e., who describes the events of these early times. Supply res gestas scribentem, or something equivalent. A mental, however, rather than an actual ellipsis.—Qui consules secundum quosdam. "What consuls came after certain consuls," i.e., there were some consuls whose successors or predecessors could not be clearly ascertained.—Rerum. "Of facts."
15-23. Mortuus Cunis. The death of Tarquinius at Cumae is, as Niebuhr remarks, certainly historical. But the only reason for placing it in the year 259 was, no doubt, because the ferment among the commonsalty at Rome broke out in that year; and the tradition ran that so long as he lived the patricians kept within bounds. Aristodemus, whose name is infamous among the earlier Greek tyrants for his atrocities, became the heir of his illustrious client; and some years after detained the property of the republic in lieu of his claims to that of the Tarquins. (Niebuhr, H. R., vol. i., p. 560.)—Luxuriosa. "Immoderate."—Cui adeum diem, etc. "To whom, up to that day, deference had been paid (by them) to the utmost of their power."—Signia colonia. Compare bk. i., chap. lvi., line 15.—Suppleto numero colonorum. "The number of the colonists being filled up." Being a military outpost on the borders of the Volscian territory, it had suffered from the incursions of that people.—Tribus una et viginti factae. By the addition, probably, of the Claudian tribe. Consult note on bk. ii., chap. xvi., line 14.—Ædes Mercurii. Compare bk. ii., chap. xxvii., line 19.—Idibus Maiis. "On the fifteenth of May." The Ides fell on the 15th of March, May, July, and October, and on the 13th of the other months.

CHAPTER XXII.

3-11. Quae mitterent. "Which they were in the act of sending." Not "would have sent," which would have required misissent.—Hac era. "Through resentment at this." Livy seems neither here nor at recens, farther on, to have considered that four years had already, according to his own account, elapsed since that time. He appears to have had in view the annalists who placed the battle of Regillus three years later.—Consilii penam non metuentes. "Dreading no punishment for mere intention."—Pometia. In the sixteenth chapter of this book mention is made of a war against the Aurunci, which appears identical with the one here described as carried on with the Volsci. It is impossible, as Zumpt remarks, that both could have been carried on, for in the sixteenth chapter Pometia was almost annihilated, whereas here it appears again as a considerable town. Livy, therefore, had, as Zumpt thinks, several ancient annalists before him, some of whom placed this event in the one year, others in the other. Without himself deciding as to the true date, he repeats the same occurrence in the separate years, in order to pass over nothing which was given as a fact in the legendary history.

13-19. Suum ingenium. "Their natural disposition," i. e., their fondness for warlike outbreaks.—Hernicis. The Hernici, as we have before remarked, were a people of Central Italy, bordering on the Æqui towards the north, and on the Volsci to the south and east.—
Chapter XXIII.

2, 3. Intestino flagrabit odio. "Was all in a blaze with internal animosity."—Propert nexus ob æs alienum. "On account of those confined for debt," i. e., whose persons were pledged as security for debt, and who had been delivered, in consequence, into the hands of their creditors. According to the Roman law at this time, if a debtor did not discharge a debt within thirty days after it was demanded of him, he was summoned before the proper magistrate, who delivered him up to the creditor. He was then kept in bonds by the latter for sixty days, after which period he was brought for three successive market-days (mundinae) before the tribunal of the judge, where a crier proclaimed the debt; and after the third market-day, if the debt was not paid (sometimes the rich redeemed the poor by paying their debts), the creditor had a right to keep him in slavery until he had worked off the debt, or even to sell him unto another. Hence such debtors were called nexi, because, until they had worked off the debt, they were in the position of slaves to their creditor.

with weeds.—Faedior corporis habitus, etc. Literally, "The condition of his body, worn out with paleness and emaciation, was still more revolting." [Pulor, "mouldiness," refers to the condition produced by imprisonment in dark and damp dungeons.]—Promissa barba et capilli. This is merely added as a coloring to the picture, since the early Romans were always accustomed to wear the beard and hair long, barbers not having been introduced into Rome until A.U.C. 454.

14–19. Deformitate. "Wretchedness."—Et ordines duxisse aiebant. "And they said that he had led a century," i.e., had been a centurion. Literally, "Had led ranks." The ordo (more commonly used in the plural, ordines) formed the half of a manipulus, or one century, and was commanded by a centurion.—Militiae decora. "Military distinctions (obtained by him)."—Contionis. "Of a regular assembly." Contio (a contraction from conventio) is properly an assembly attending to a public harangue, or any meeting for a public purpose. It sometimes means a public harangue itself.

21–27. Fructu. "The produce."—Iniquo suo tempore. "At a time inconvenient for him."—Se evisisse. "Had stripped him."—Fortunis alis. "Of the rest of his resources."—Velut tabem. "Like a wasting malady."—Sed in ergastulum et carnificinam. "But into a workhouse and place of torture." The ergastulum was a private prison attached to most Roman farms, where the slaves were made to work in chains. The cruel sufferings endured there might well obtain for it the name of carnificina.—Faedum. "Disfigured."

30–32. Nexi, vincit solutique. "The debtors, those still subject to bonds, and those released therefrom." By nexi are meant all debtors who had lost their liberty, and these again are divided into two classes, the vincit, who worked in fetters, and the soluti, who were without fetters, it is true, but still wrought for their creditors. The ordinary text has nexu vincit solutique, "Those bound by fetters, and those released from them;" but the nexu soluti, that is, those freed from restraint for debt, had no need now to implore the help of the people. —Fidem. "The protection."—Voluntarius comes. "A voluntary associate." One who had suffered no injury, and therefore had nothing to complain of.—Multis agminibus curritur. "There is a rush in many bodies (of the people)."

38–56. Haec se meritos dicer, etc. "They said that they had gained these for their services, upbraiding them with their respective discharge of military duty, each in a different campaign," i.e., "they said that this was what they had gained for their services," etc.—Ipsi futuri arbitri, etc. "Intending to be themselves the witnesses and control lers of the public de-clarations."—Contraet ob causam, etc. "Were drawn together by the causam."—Ipso accidenti. "The thin attendance."—Extrai. "Put off." The more usual form of expression is tempus extrai, or rem extrai.—Et causam ipsam temporarum. "And that the causam themselves were struggling."—Jus prope erat ut, etc.
"It was by this same near happening that," etc.—Tandem. Purposefully repeated, for emphatic sake.—Non modo. For non modo non.—Se-tis manifestat. "Was there sufficient unanimity."—Polematis ingenii. "Of violent temper."—Consulari imperio, etc. "That the matter should be settled by the causam authority."—Aptius. "More inclined."—Flucti quam frui, etc. "To be bent (by mild words) than to be broken (by harsh measures)."

CHAPTER XXIV.

2-16. Tumultuoso. "Alarming."—Plebes. Livy uses this form of the nominative as well as plebis and pleba.—Alius alius confirmare, etc. "They kept encouraging one another, not to give in their names," i.e., for enrolment as soldiers.—Perituros. Not perirent.
The future indicates here a fixed resolve.—Praemia. The booty won in war, and the possession of the conquered lands.—Casia.
"The Senate."—Cui ingenium magis popolare erat. "Who possessed a more conciliating disposition," i.e., than his colleague, Appius Claudius.—Misso senatu. "After having dismissed the Senate."—Curae esse patribus, etc. "That the Senate were solicitous that the interests of the people be consulted, but that fear for the whole collective state had interrupted their deliberation for that (which), though the greatest no doubt, (was) yet but a part of the state." He means that the plebeians constituted but a part, and not the whole of the state, as they themselves, by their violence, would seem to believe they did.

19-23. Nec posse bello praeventisse quidquam. "That neither could any consideration take precedence of the war." Praevenere is literally "to turn (one's self) in front of," and hence "to outstrip, outrun," etc. Zumpt makes the perfect infinitive here indicative of rapidity or rashness. Weissenborn, on the contrary, regards praeventisse as an aorist.—Laxamenti aliquid. "Any relaxation of the enemy's attack."
—Nisi mercede prius accepta. Servilius, in order to awaken the pride and shame of the people, artfully uses the term mercede, as it would be a base and heartless thing to have felt no more generous incentive than mere "recompense" to fight for their liberty and country. Mercede here alludes to the granting of their demands.—Per metum quam voluntate. "Through fear (i.e., under the influence of fear) than of their own free will." Observe the difference of force between per with an accusative and the simple but expressive ablative, 24-32. Contioni. "To his speech," i.e., to what he had just said in the contio or assembly.—Edixit. "He ordained."—Quo minus ei, etc. "So that he should not have the power," etc.—Moraretur. "Detain in custody," i.e., as a pledge for his debt; because a man's children and grandchildren were by the law in a state of quasi-slavery to him, and, of course, considered as part of his property. [The patria potestas is distinguished from dominium over slaves (Dig., 50, 16, 225), and never involved ownership; yet both children and slaves were res mancipi. See Smith's Dict., s. v. patria potestas.]—Proposito. "Having been published."—Nexi. "The debtors." Those who were indebted to others, and under obligations to pay, but not yet in the immediate power of their creditors.—Ut sacramento dicerent. "To take the military oath." Literally, "To give their adhesion to the oath." Sacramento is here the dative, not the ablative. After the levy was completed, one soldier was chosen to repeat the words of the military oath, and the rest swore after him, that is, each one as he passed along said idem in me.

CHAPTER XXV.

2-14. Si qua, etc. "(To see) if any desertion or treachery might be able to be effected during the night."—Temptant. "Make an attempt upon."—Vellebantur. "Were being torn up." The reference is particularly to the valli or stakes which held together the earth of the rampart, and the pulling up of which would insure the demolition of the wall.—Fugientibus. More graphic than fugientium.

18-22. Suessam Pometiam. Livy describes here, the year and the name of the foe being alone changed, the same event which he had already related in chapter xvii. Dionysius mentions the occurrence only under the present year.—Paulum recreatus. "Were a little relieved."—Ecetranorum Volscorum. "Of the Volscian Ecetranis." The Ecetranis were the inhabitants of Ecetra, a city of the Volscians, which figures repeatedly in the wars of that people with the Romans. It was situated on the north-eastern frontier of the Volsci, towards the Aequi and Mount Algidus.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1-10. Confestim et Sabini. "Immediately after, the Sabines also," i.e., as well as the Volsci.—Tumultus. "A turbulent inroad." This term was often, as here, taken in a loose and general sense to signify any sudden and disorderly taking up of arms. In a special sense, however, it meant a sudden or dangerous war in Italy or Cisalpine
NOTES.

Gaul. This is its later signification, in the time of Cicero (Phil, viii., 1).—Pervenisse. "Had passed through (the intervening country)."—Villas. "The country-houses." Villa here merely means a country or farm house, not a villa in the later and more extended sense of the term.—Postumius. He was employed on this occasion merely as a legatus under the consul.—Sabina legio. "The Sabine army." The Roman writers often apply to the enemy, in a general sense, military terms peculiar to Roman discipline.

11–21. Repleti. "Glutted."—Vix fugae quod satis esset, etc. "Possessed hardly what there was of strength sufficient for flight."—Legati Aurunci. The Aurunci had been called in by the Volsci to their aid, as being of the same race.—Cujus fama haud procul, etc. "The news of which (army) having been seen not far now from Aricia." Observe the force of jam; the Auruncan army was "already" near Aricia.—Ordine. "The senators could not be asked their individual opinions in order."—Arma inferentibus. "To those who were bearing arms to invade them."—Signa collata. "Their standards were brought in opposition with those of the foe," i.e., battle was joined with the Aurunci. Signa conferre, "to join battle."

CHAPTER XXVII

2–5. Promissa consulis, etc. "Waited for the promises of the consul and the plighted faith of the Senate (to be made good)."—Ut collegae vanam fureret fidem. "That he might render ineffectual the engagement of his colleague."—Jus de pecuniiis creditis dicere. "Proceeded to enforce the law respecting borrowed moneys." Dicere is the historical infinitive, used here with the conjunction cum, on which construction consult Zumpt, § 582. The expression jus dicere means literally "to dispense justice."

6, 7. Deinceps. "Then in succession," i.e., one after the other.—Quis ante nexit fuerant. The nexi, relying on the edict of Servilius, mentioned in chap. xxiv., and awaiting an amelioration of their condition, would seem to have refused to place themselves again in the power of their creditors. They were therefore summoned before Appius, who gave judgment against them, thus virtually declaring the edict of his colleague to be of no value. At the same time creditors were empowered, as before, to take into custody other debtors who had hitherto been free.—Nectebantur. "Were taken into custody."

8–11. Collegam appellabat. "He appealed to the colleague (of Appius)."—Ut aut referret ad senatum, etc. Gronovius and Crevier think that aut . . . aut should be both expunged; but they appear in all the manuscripts, and are necessary to the sense. Servilius had told the people (chap. xxiv.) that alarm for the whole commonwealth had alone interrupted the deliberations of the Senate respecting their welfare; and the people now entreat him to pursue one of two courses, either to lay the matter anew before the Senate, or else to lend them his official and individual aid. Observe moreover the repetition of the conjunction ut, in order to indicate the more sharply two distinct courses of action.

13-17. Tergiversari. "To temporize."—Ad eo in alteram causam, etc. "To such a degree had not only his colleague, but the whole party of the nobles, plunged headlong into the opposite side," i.e., the side of the creditors. Most of the manuscripts have preceperat, a reading out of which it is difficult to elicit any satisfactory meaning. We have adopted, therefore, with Drakenborch and others, the conjecture of Sabellius, preceps iterat. Some editors prefer preceps erat. —Medium se gerendo. "By carrying himself in a middle course."—Mollem consulum et ambitiosum. "A weak and popularity-hunting consul."—Fallacem. "A deceiver."

20, 21. Rejicit. "Referred."—Eum praesse annone, etc. "That he should preside over the market, should establish a guild of merchants, should perform the customary rites in the place of the pontifex." Mercury was the Roman divinity of commerce and gain, and presided, of course, over merchants, markets, etc. Hence the establishment of a guild of traders is here connected with the dedication of his temple. His festival was celebrated, chiefly by merchants, on the Ides of May, the day when his temple was consecrated. By annona is properly meant the yearly produce derived from anything, particularly from the main article of trade, namely, grain. From this original sense comes the meaning of "the market price," as it rose or fell, "the market," as in the present instance, etc. Under the republic, a praefectus annone, or prefect of provisions, especially of the corn market, was only appointed in times of extraordinary scarcity. Under the empire he became a regular magistrate. —Solemnia pro pontifice, etc. The customary rites in instituting the guild and dedicating the temple.

23-25. Primi pilorum centurion. "The centurion of the first rank," i.e., the chief centurion in the legion. The primipilus was the first centurion of the first maniple of the triarii, and was also called princeps centurionum. He was intrusted with the eagle, and had a seat in the council of war. The appellation of primipilus arose from the fact that the pilum, or javelin, was at first the peculiar weapon of the triarii or pilani, while the hastati and principes were called antepilani.—Non tam ad honorem ejus, etc. "To have been done not so much out of respect for the individual, to whom had been assigned a charge higher than his rank, as to put an affront upon the consuls."

26–32. Consulam alter. Appius Claudius.—Grassabantur. "They began to proceed."—Cum vidisset. "Whenever they saw."—Exau- diri. "Be heard to the end."—Vi agebatur. "All was managed by violence," i.e., the whole business was an affair of violence.—Metus-que omnis, etc. "And the entire dread and danger, with respect to personal liberty, were transferred from the debtors to the creditors, when they were individually assaulted by numbers in the very sight of the consul." One of the best manuscripts omits libertatis, but the term is good enough, and refers to the alarm entertained by the patrician creditors, lest the mob might go still farther, and treat them as they themselves were accustomed to treat the nexi.

34–41. Super hoc. "Over and above all this."—Incessit. "Came upon (the state)."—Populari silentio. "By popularity-courting si- lence."—Et ad id, quod de credita pecunia, etc. "And to the fact that he had not pronounced sentence concerning borrowed money, was adding (the delinquency) that he was not even holding a levy," etc., i.e., that he had not enforced the law against debtors.—Projectum. "Flung away," i.e., given up to contempt.—Vindicem. "The assertor."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

8–12. [Esquiliis. The name of a part of the town is here used as if it were the name of a town, without a preposition.]—Ne in foro, etc. "Lest, when assembled in the forum, they should be thrown into con- fusion by (being compelled to adopt) hasty plans of action."—Sed de- latam consulere, etc. "But it was not permitted to take their opinions in regular order with regard to it when so laid before them." Zumpt makes delatam to be governed by consulere, on the analogy of verbs of asking and requesting. It is better, however, to regard it as the accusative of nearer definition.—Si, quod imperio consulari, etc. "If, what should have been effected by the consular authority, the odium of this the consuls should throw back upon the Senate."—Profecto, si essent, etc. "That most assuredly, if there really were magistrates in the republic, there would have been no council at Rome but the public one."
17-28. Virum. "Man of spirit."—Id enim plus esse quam consulem. "For that that was more than a (nominal) consul."—Correpti. "Having been (thus-) rebuked."—Nihil enim segnius, etc. "For (they declared) that they intended to do nothing more slothfully or tamely than may prove pleasing to the fathers," i. e., that they intended to act with as much promptness and energy as the senators wished.—Dilectum quam acerrimum. "As strict a levy as possible."—Otiō lascivire. "Were growing insubordinate from want of employment."—Ni praestaretur fides publica. "Unless the public faith were made good," i. e., unless the public faith, pledged to the nexi, were maintained.—Domini. "Masters."

29-36. Quid mandatum esset, etc. "Saw clearly what had been commanded by the Senate," i. e., understood fully the orders they had received.—Ferociter. "Largely."—Participem. "As a sharer."—Atrix certamen. "A desperate conflict."—Ultima experirentur. "They resorted to extremities."—Tum vero ad sellas consulam, etc. "Then, indeed, all the youngest of the fathers flew in a body almost to the very seats of the consuls." Observe that minimus natus is merely relative, and does not imply that they were absolutely young, since every senator had served as a soldier for ten or twenty years. Some connect prope with convalare, "flew almost in one body." Others read propere.—Deeset. The subjunctive here assigns the cause or reason. "Since courage was wanting for defending this."

CHAPTER XXIX.

1-8. Utraque re satis experta. "Both experiments having been sufficiently tried," i. e., the attempting to overcome the obstinacy of the Commons and the determination of the Senate.—Ne predictum negetis. "That you may not say that warning was not given you."—Arbitrio. "At the discretion."—Quando. "Since." For quandocidem.—Dedita opera. "Purposely," i. e., in order to test the matter effectually, and prove to the Senate the refractory spirit of the Commons.

10-17. Violaretur. "He might be treated with violence," i. e., might be seized in case of refusal, and dragged away to prison.—Nihil aliud quam prendere prohibito. "Who was prevented from nothing else than arresting him," i. e., the lictor was only prevented from arresting the man, not otherwise maltreated. Compare Zumpt, § 771. —Intercessu. "By the interposition."—Quam injuria. "Than of actual mischief."

19-24. Questionem. "An inquiry," i. e., into the tumult. They wished an extraordinary inquiry to take place, since they placed the outrage upon a senator on a par with one offered to a magistrate.—Sententiae. "By an expression of their opinions," i. e., by their votes.

Sanitatis. "Of sound sense."—Rem non vulgabat. "Was not for making the case common to all alike," i. e., was of opinion that relief from imprisonment for debt was not to be extended to all without distinction.—Fidem secuti. "Having relied upon the word."

27–29. Ut merita tantummodo, etc. "That services only should be paid off."—Nec sisti posse, etc. "And that a check could not be given to the evil." Sistere is to render a thing stationary and firm. Sisti non potest is a phrase which signifies that an impending evil cannot be remedied or stayed.—Quin. "Nay rather."

31–38. Efferatus. "Inflammated."—Et lascivior magis plebem, etc. "And that the Commons were more wanton than mad," i. e., were urged on by gratuitous wantonness rather than by the madness arising from real suffering.—Quique minus esse consulum, etc. "Since that threatens (alone) belonged (now) to the consuls, not any exercise of authority," i. e., the consuls could only utter mere threats, and not exercise real power over the people, in consequence of the privilege of appeal being granted to the latter.—Pulset tum mihi lictorem, etc. "Then let any one strike for me a lictor," i. e., let me see then the man who shall strike a lictor.—Jus de tergo vitae, etc. That is, when he shall know that that man alone (namely, the dictator) whose majesty he shall have violated, by striking his lictor, has power to flog and behead him.

CHAPTER XXX.

1–5. Horrida et atroc. "Harsh and violent."—Rursus. "On the other hand."—Exemplo haud salubres. "Not of healthy influence by reason of the precedent they would establish," i. e., since it would appear that the seditious movements of the people had wrested concessions from the patricians, and this would be encouraging sedition.

—Utique Lartii putabant sententiam, etc. "The proposition of Lar- tius especially they regarded as one that would destroy all credit," i. e., by releasing debtors from the necessity of paying their debts.—Medium maxime et moderatum, etc. "The advice of Verginius was regarded as most occupying a middle course, and (most) moderate for both sides." Observe that utroque here is equivalent to in utramque partem.

6–18. Sed factione, etc. "But through the spirit of faction, and a regard for private interests."—Quae res utique. "Which step certainly."—Ut imperium, suo vehemens, etc. "That a power, in its own nat-nre uncontrolled," etc.—Cum provocationem fratris lege habet, etc. "Since they had the right of appeal by a law of his brother, feared nothing harsh or tyrannical from that family."—Confirmavit animos. "Established their confidence (in him)."—Fere conveniens. "Coinciding almost exactly."—Sed et homini, etc. "But having thought that this man and his power could be more safely relied on," etc., i. e., this man whose disposition was conciliatory and mild, and whose family had ever been friendly to them, and his power, which was beyond any control from the opposite side.

20–25. Legiones decem. This must be a great exaggeration. At the battle of the Allia the Romans had but four regular legions.—Ternae inde dote consulibus. "Of this number three were given to each of the consuls." Observe the force of the distributive.—Aut se ipsos tuendorum, etc. Weissenborn thinks that the Latins had again fallen under the Roman sway as in the time of Tarquinius Superbus, and therefore had to ask leave to take up arms to defend themselves. Zumpt, on the other hand, is of opinion that the old annalists, from whom Livy here copies, must have misunderstood the connection at this time subsisting between the Romans and the Latins, and that the latter were quite independent of the former.—Retractare arma. "To handle arms again." They feared lest they might employ them against themselves.

27–31. Locoque magis quam, etc. "And relying on their position more than on their arms."—Ne et ipse terreret tempus. "Lest he too (as well as his colleague) should waste his time." As the Æqui took shelter in the fastnesses of their hills, and gave Vetusius no opportunity of coming to an engagement, he was obliged to remain inactive.—Ad conferenda proprius castra. "To pitch their camp nearer his."—Medio inter castra campo. "In the interjacent plain between the camps." Medius sometimes signifies "lying between;" sometimes, "in the middle of."—Quisque. The individuals of both armies are meant.

34–45. Nec clamorem reddi. "Nor the battle-cry to be raised in turn."—Coortos. "Having arisen simultaneously." Livy very correctly uses this word here, as he previously described them to have stood "defixis pilis." The verb consurgere he always applies to the charge of the Triarii, for they used to await the charge of the enemy, "sinistro crure porrecto," or, as we would term it, with the body at rest.—Velut stupendibus. "As if paralyzed by fear."—Impressionem. "A charge."—Haud securus quam si, etc. They were quite taken by surprise, since they expected no resistance on the part of the Romans.—Facile adepti fessos. "Having easily overtaken them wearied."—Plusque sanguinis factum. "And more bloodshed was caused."— Velitras. Velitres, a city of Latium, on the southern slope of the Alban hills, and on the left of the Via Appia.

CHAPTER XXXI.

3-11. Exuitque. The que connects exuit as a consequence with fundit fugatque. The ordinary reading is et exuit.—Qua, dum se cornua, etc. “In the part where, while the wings extend themselves too widely, they had not properly strengthened their line by a depth of files,” i.e., by deepening the files. Literally, “by files inward.” Some read quam, and reject the second aciem, from a dislike of the repetition of the same word. But Livy shows numerous instances of similar repetitions.—Debellatamque est. “And the war was ended,” i.e., by the subjugation of the enemy; for the word does not mean to put an end to a war in any way, as, for instance, by peace.—Locus in circo, etc. That is, a place where he might erect a seat, whence to view the games. Compare bk. i., chap. xxxv., line 33.

14-23. Et colonia deducta. “And a colony was planted.” Literally, “was led forth.”—Post aliquanto. “Some time after.”—Criminantes. “Complaining.”—Irrita caderent. “Might fall to the ground of no effect.”—Perpulere, ut forte temere, etc. “ Forced him at all hazards to march his army up the opposite mountains.” Compare note on bk. i., chap. xxvii., line 23.—Id male comissum. “This imprudent step.”—Obstupesfacti. “Astounded.”—In aversas valles. “Into the valleys in their rear.” Literally, “Into the valleys that were turned away.” The front of the camp was towards the Romans, and the valleys were in a direction opposite to this. Some read adversas, on the principle that the valleys were aversae while they continued in their camp; but when they left their camp, and turned their backs to the Romans, which had been aversae to them, then became adversae. This, however, is rather far-fetched.

26-31. Tanta cum gratia, etc. “With so much influence as well as artifice had the money-lenders concerted measures, to disappoint,” etc.—Omnium actionum in senatu, etc. “Of all his measures in the Senate made that in favor of the victorious people the first; and proposed the question, what it was their pleasure should be done in the case of those confined for debt.” Any act or measure of a magistrate before the Senate or people was called actio.—Relatio. “Motion.”

32-42. Me dius fidius. “Depend upon it.” Fidius is a surname of Jupiter as the god of faith (Zeus Πίστος), and the full expression would be, “me dius (i.e., deus) fidius servet.” Hence it means, “most assuredly,” “most certainly,” “depend upon it,” etc. Zumpt, less correctly, makes it equivalent to mehercules, i.e., dius for Δώ>, and fidius archaic for filius. (Zumpt, § 361, note.)—Seditioni interero.
"I shall be a witness of the sedition." — Suam vicem indignantem.
"That, being indignant at their condition," i.e., at the treatment they had received.—Quoniam per eum non stetisset, etc. "Since it had not been owing to him that it was not made good." Stat per me means, "it is in my power," "it rests with me."—Favore. "Approbation."

CHAPTER XXXII.

4–6. Tamen quoniam, etc. "Yet, since they had sworn to the words of the consuls' (dictation)," i.e., had sworn to the oath administered by the consuls. It appears, remarks Zumpt, from Livy's description. that the dictator, by virtue of his unlimited power, had completed the levy, but had made the troops swear obedience not to himself, but to the consuls of the year. We must take it so, though it seems strange.
We read a little above, however, that the dictator had not, as usual, named a magister equitum, but had intrusted the command of two armies to the consuls. It seems probable, therefore, that he was appointed solely for the purpose of holding the levy.—Per causam.
"Under the pretext."

10–16. Nullam scelere religionem exsolvi. "That no religious obligation is dissolved by an act of criminality." The more prosaic phraseology would be nulla religione exsolvi, "that men are freed from no religious obligation." Compare Zumpt, § 607, note.—Sacrum mon-tem. The mons sacer was a hill about three miles from Rome, across the Anio, and on the right of the Via Nomentana. It was so called because the people, on their return to the city, consecrated an altar there to Jupiter. (Fest., p. 318.)—Ea frequentior fama est, etc. "This tradition is more generally received than that of which Piso is the author." Yet Sallust adopts the account of Piso (Bell. Jug., xxxi.), and says that the people retired twice to the Aventine, at this time, namely, and after the death of Virginia. With regard to Piso the Annalist, consult note on bk. ii., chap. lviii., line 3.—Quieti. "Remain ing quiet."—Sumendo. The ablative of the gerund has often a meaning closely connected with that of the present participle.—Per aliquot dies, neque lacesisti, etc. It seems hardly correct to say that during this period they did not attack others, for though they abstained from offering any personal violence, yet they supported themselves from the lands of the Claudian tribe, hostile to and bitterly hated by the plebeians, and whose possessions lay in the immediate vicinity of the sacred mount. Dionysius says that the secession lasted for three months, from about the 1st of September to the 1st of December.
NOTES.

18–26. Resicta ab suis plebes. "The portion of the commons left behind by their party."—Residem. "Who remained peaceably."—Nullam profecto spem reliquam ducere. "They considered no hope assuredly left." Ducere is the historical infinitive.—Eam per regu, per iniqua, etc. "That that (unanimity) should be restored to the state by fair means (or) by unfair," i.e., whether the demands of the people were reasonable or unreasonable, they should be granted.—Inde oriscundus. "Sprung from themselves." As he had been consul (compare chap. xvi.), and as the consulship at this period was open to the patricians only, Crevier conjectures that on the mother's side he may have been of plebeian descent, though on the father's patrician, or that he was one of those whom Brutus is said to have enrolled into the Senate, i.e., the conscripti. Nine other deputies from the Senate accompanied him. (Dion., vi., 69.) Cicero, however, following a different account from Livy, makes the pacificator of the two orders to have been the dictator, M. Valerius (Brut., 14; compare Val. Max., viii., 9, 1).

27–36. Intromissus. "Having been admitted."—Horrido. "Unpolished."—Non, ut nunc, omnia, etc. "All the members did not agree together, as they now do." We have given here consentiebant, the reading of Drakenborch and others. The manuscripts, however, generally have ut nunc omnia consentiant (the subjunctive in the obliqua oratio), which will require us to supply, rather awkwardly, the words omnia consenserint after non.—Sum consilium. "Its own plan of action."—Ministerio. "Service."—Conciferent. "Masticate it."—Hac ira. "That under the influence of this angry feeling."—Dum vellent. The subjunctive in the obliqua oratio. There is no need, therefore, of our changing dum to cum.—Ad extremam tabem. "To the last degree of emaciation."

38–41. Haud segne. "No idle one."—Reddendem in omnes, etc. "Diffusing to all parts of the body this (our) blood, whereby we have life and strength distributed evenly through the veins, when brought to maturity by the digestion of the food." More literally, "matured after the food has been digested."—Comparando hinc. "That, by drawing a comparison from this."—Quam similis. "How like."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1–5. Agi dein de cœptum. "It then began to be treated."—Concessumque in condiciones, etc. "And there was mutual concession on the terms that the commons should have their own inviolable magistrates, to whom there should be power to bear assistance against the consuls." Literally, "a bringing of assistance."—Capere. "To hold."
—Tribuni plebei. So called, according to Varro (L. L., iv., 14), because they were first chosen from the tribunes of the soldiers. The tribunes of the Commons were not properly magistrates or officers, for they had no express functions or official duties to discharge. The purpose for which they were appointed was only to afford protection against any abuse on the part of the patrician magistrates, and that they might be able to afford such protection their persons were declared sacred and inviolable.

6–11. Hi tres collegas, etc. All the ancient writers agree that only two tribunes were chosen at first, but there is a great difference in their statements as regards the time and manner of the subsequent increase of number. When this increase of from two to five took place is quite uncertain, notwithstanding Livy’s statement in the text. The next increase, however, from five to ten, did not certainly take place until the year 457 B.C., when two tribunes were taken from each of the five classes, and this number of ten appears to have remained unaltered down to the end of the empire.—Duos tantum, etc. And that the remaining three were elected in the city, after the people returned.—Ibique sacratam legem latam. “And that the devoting law was passed there,” i. e., on the sacred mount, not in the city, as others again maintained. A lex sacrata meant in general any law, the violation of which was punished by devoting the violator, with his family and property, to the vengeance of some deity. There were many such laws. The one, however, specially meant here is that by which the persons of the tribunes were made sacred and inviolable.

14–18. Ictum fiedus. Compare bk. i., chap. xxv., line 1.—Antiates Volscos. “The Volsci of Antium.” The city of Antium was situated on the sea-coast, thirty-eight miles to the south-west of Rome. It was the frontier stronghold of the Volsci in this quarter.—Longulam. Longula appears to have been a small place, not far from Antium, and a dependency of the latter.—Poluscam. The site of this place, like that of Longula, is quite uncertain. It was somewhere in the vicinity of Antium.—Coriolos. Corioli, so celebrated from its connection with the legend of C. Marcus Coriolanus, was another small place near Antium. Its territory would seem to have adjoined those of Ardea and Aricia.

20–28. Coriolano. For some remarks on this name, and on the legend connected with it, consult note at end of chap. xl.—Sine ullo metu, etc. “Without any fear of war threatening from without,” i. e., of any attack from without.—In statione. “On post.”—Retudit. “Beat back.”—Cædeque in proxima urbis facta. “And the slaughter having been carried into the adjoining parts of the city,” i. e., the parts adjoining or nearest to the gates. Cædem facere must be re-36-42. Ad terram, et solis, etc. "Having arisen, as is usual, at the first alarm." The manuscripts generally have primas artis, which Rhenanus makes equivalent to statim. The meaning, however, would rather be, "at the partition in its very first commencement." The reading which we have adopted is the conjecture of Gromovius, and also of an earlier commentator.—Quae ad feroxam, etc. We have given qui with Weise-ehren and others. The ordinary text has cui, referring to sine.—Obstult. "Eclipsed." Literally, "Stood in the way of."—Monument est. From the language of Cicero, in speaking of this "columna aerea," it would appear that Livy here refers not to his own time, but to that mentioned in the legend.—Agrippa Menexirus. Written in the inverted order in the previous chapter. The first, however, would seem to be the more correct form, as Agrippa is the praenomen.—Interpretari arsitroque. "The mediator and umpire."—Extulit ex multis, etc. "The Commons buried him by a contribution of a sextans apiece." Literally, "a sextans being contributed per head." The sextans was the sixth part of an as, which contained 12 sucius: therefore the sextans was two ounces.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

6-17. Qualis clausis solet. "Such as is wont to happen to those who are besieged." Literally, "shut up (within their walls)."—Ven- tumque esset ad. "And it would have resulted in." Literally, "It would have come unto."—Utique et plebis. "And indeed of the Commons also." Some, less correctly, connect utique with servitiorum in the sense of "especially."—Coemendum. The verb coemere denotes, "to buy up on all sides."—Dextris ab Ostia litoribus. "Along the shores to the right of Ostia," i.e. to the north of it.—Sed quesitum in Sicilia quoque. "But into Sicily also to seek for it." Some manuscripts and editions have in Sicilia.—Auxilius. "Aid." This term in the plural more commonly means "auxiliary troops."—Aristodemo. Compare chap. xxi.—Pomptino. "The Pompitine territory." Supply agro. Pomptino, quasi Pometino from Suessa Pometia, the capital city. Compare bk. i., chap. lxxxii., line 4.—Periculum quoque, etc. "There was danger also to the corn-dealers themselves from the violence of the inhabitants."

19-24. Sustenta est plebs. Observe here the employment of sustenta for sustentata. This, however, is of rare occurrence.—Incom-modo bello, etc. "Amid so scanty a supply of food they would have been harassed by an inconvenient war."—Ut etiam ubi ea remisisset. "In order that even when it should have abated." Supply se after remisisset.—Veltris. A colony had already been planted there. Consult chap. xxxi.—Et Norbae in montes. "To the mountains of Norba." We would expect here Norbam, but from the language of the text it would appear that this colony was settled on high grounds which commanded the site of an earlier city. Hence, too, the name Norba, equivalent to nova urbs. Norba was situated on the border of the Volsian mountains, overlooking the Pontine marshes. The site of the ancient city is entirely uninhabited. The modern village of Norma lies about half a mile to the south, on a detached hill.—Quae arx in Pomptino esset. "Which might serve as a stronghold in the Pomptine territory," i.e., a barrier against the Vols ci.

26-32. Quantus. "At what price."—Premendex plebis. "For crushing the Commons," i.e., putting them down entirely.—Annonam veterem. "The old price of corn," i.e., provisions at the old rate.—Sub jugum missus, etc. "After having been sent under the yoke, after having (as it were) been ransomed from robbers." He speaks figuratively; i.e., being obliged to submit to such humiliating terms as the patricians were obliged to submit to. He compares the plebeians to robbers, from whom the patricians were forced, as it were, to ransom themselves by acceding to their demands.

34-40. Tarquinium regem qui non tulerim. "Who would not have endured Tarquin as king." Tulerim for tulissem. Some render this, "who would not endure," but this is manifestly erroneous, since Coriolanus, according to Plutarch, was ἐρι μεγάλον at the battle of Regillus, and must therefore have been but a child in the time of Tarquin.—Raptant frumenta ex agris. Compare note on chap. xxxii., line 15.—Utantur annona, etc. "Let them enjoy the market which in their madness they have established," i.e., let them reap the fruits of their own madness; they who have left their fields uncultivated in order to waste their time in seditious movements.—Hoc malo domitos. "That they, subdued by this state of suffering," i.e., brought to their senses by the evil which they have brought upon themselves.—Haud tam facile dictu est, etc. "It is not so easy to be said whether this thing ought to have been done, as I am of opinion that it could have been done, namely, that the fathers, on condition of reducing the price of provisions, might have rid themselves of the tribunitian power, as well as all the laws imposed upon them against their will," i.e., I think it might have been done; but whether it would have been right to do so is not so easy to decide.
CHAPTER XXXV.

1-10. Nimis atroc. "Too harsh."—Et plebem ira prope armavit. "And almost drove the Commons to arms through exasperation."—Se jam peti. "That they are now being assailed."—Victu. "Sustenance."—Satisfat. "Satisfaction be taken." The surrender of the tribunes, their only protectors, would lead to the infliction of punishment on the backs of the Roman populace.—Eum sibi carnificem, etc. "That he had started up as a new executioner for them."—Coriolanus is meant.—Diem dixissent. "Appointed a day of trial for him." Diem dicere is a legal form of expression, and means to give notice that on a certain day a certain individual will be brought to trial. The accused, in the mean time, was compelled to give security for his appearance on the day appointed. If such security was not given, he was kept in confinement.

—Potestati. "Office."—Ut unius pæna, etc. "That the fathers had to get off by the punishment of one individual," i. e., had to escape danger themselves by giving up one of their own number to punishment. The verb is here taken impersonally.—Restiterunt tamen, etc.

"They made a stand, however, though popular hatred stared them in the face;" i. e., though they thereby exposed themselves to the hatred of the populace. Observe that adversa invidia is the ablative absolute.—Qua . . . qua. "As well . . . as." Taken adverbially.

But strictly parte is understood.

19-22. Chentibus. The clientes, dependent as they were on their patroni, the patricians, had, until the period of the Twelve Tables, other interests than those of the free plebs, and often stood arrayed against the latter, and on the side of the patricians.—Disjiicere rem.

"To quash the whole affair."—Universi. "They all in a body."— Quidquid erat patrum, etc. "You would have said that whatever there was of fathers were under impeachment," i. e., that all the fa-tthers were accused of treason, and endeavoring to excite compassion, and not one of their order merely. On these occasions the individuals who went around to solicit the people either for themselves or for others usually arrayed themselves in mourning.—Unum sibi ci-ven, etc. "That, if they were unwilling to acquit him as innocent, they would (at least) pardon unto them, as guilty, one citizen, one senator," i. e., pardon for their sakes, out of regard for them. More literally, "would make his pardon, as a guilty man, a present to themselves."

24-28. Damnatus. Dionysius and Plutarch say that this sentence was passed by the Comitia Tributa, where the influence of the plebeians was predominant; but Livy makes no mention of the Comitia Tributa being held for twenty years after this time.—Absens. Plutarch says he was present when the sentence was passed.—Colebant. "Treated him."—Percipiebantur. "Began to be heard."

29—36. Attii Tullii. In the best manuscripts of Livy the name is written Attius Tullius, and in Zonaras we also find Τόλλαος; but in Dionysius and Plutarch the form Τόλλος occurs. Tullius, and not Tullus, is the correct form. Compare Alschefski, ad Liv., ii., 37; Niebuhr, H. R., ii., note 217.—Consilià conferunt. "They concert schemes."—Arte agendum, etc. "That they must go to work artfully in the case of hatred that had now grown feeble through lapse of time."—Exacerbarentur. "Might be exasperated."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1, 2. Ludi magni. "The great games." Called also Ludi Circenses. They appear to have superseded the Consualia, established by Romulus (Liv., i., 9), and were celebrated every year, during several days, from the 4th to the 12th of September.—Ex instauratione parabantur. "Were preparing to be celebrated anew." More literally, "By renewal." The games formed part of the religious celebrations of the Romans, and whenever, therefore, there had been any informality or omission in the mode of holding them, they had to be celebrated anew.—Ludis. "On the day of the games." Some words, which do not in themselves denote time, but an event, are used in the ablative without a preposition, in order to indicate the time when a thing takes place. (Madvig, § 276, Obs. 2.)

4—6. Nondum commisso spectaculo. "The show being not yet commenced." Committó is properly "to match," "to join together in fight," and is peculiarly applicable to a spectaculum, as in it the combatants for a prize were matched against one another. So, too, the gladiators at a later day.—Sub furca cesum. "Scourged under the fork." Observe that cesum egerat means properly "had scourged and driven," the acts being simultaneous; not "had driven him after having been scourged." As regards the furca, consult note on bk. i., chap. xxvi., line 40. — Circo. The Circus Maximus.—Nihil pertinentisset. "Bore no relation."—Ad religionem. The games, as already remarked, were religious ceremonies.

8—12. Ludis praesultatorem displicuisse. "That the initiatory dancer on the day of the games had not pleased him." The term praesulator, applied here ironically to the scourged slave, properly means one who dances before or in advance of others, and is connected in origin and meaning with præsul, a name applied to the chief of the Salii, who went foremost in procession, dancing the sacred dance. Hence præsul, "qui ante alios salit."—Religionæ. "From superstitious feelings."—Vercundia tamen, etc. "His reverence, nevertheless, for the dignity of the magistrates, lest he might pass into men's mouths as an object of ridicule, conquered his religious fear." Observe that majestatis is here the objective genitive.

14–21. Magno illi stetit. "Cost him dear." More literally, "Stood him in a great price." Supply pretio.—Ægro animi. "Unto him while troubled in mind."—Mercedem. "Recompense." Ironical.—Jam præsentior res erat. "The thing was now brought more home to him." Præsens is applied to what furnishes immediate and direct proof. He before thought the danger remote and contingent, but he now found it to be at his own door.—Debilitate subita. He was seized with paralysis.

24–30. Repræsentatas. "Speedily realized." Equivalent to statim presentes fuctas, i. e., oculus subjectas, presented, as it were, to the eyes.—Consensu haud dubio. "With the unhesitating assent."—Captus omnibus membris. "Deprived of the use of all his limbs."—Func tum officio. "After having discharged his duty."

CHAPTER XXXVII.

5–8. Agere. "To treat with them about."—Quod sequius sit. "What may be otherwise than might be wished," i. e., what may be thought rather unfavorable. Sequius is the comparative of secus, and is here used elliptically.—Non tamen admissum, etc. "I do not, however, come to allege any actual commission on their part, but to warn, lest they may commit (some outrage)."

16–29. Sabinorum. Compare bk. ii., chap. xviii.—Quod ad me attinet. "As to what regards myself."—Ne cujus facti, etc. "Lest I may be tainted, if present, with the infection of any deed or word," i. e., lest any word or act may taint my character, and thereby injure me in your estimation.—Rem dubiam sub auctore certe. "This questionable statement on unexceptionable authority."—Ad praecavendum vel ex supervenio. "To take even unnecessary precautions," i. e., to take precautions even though they should eventually be found to be needless.—Pavor. "Panic."—Discurrentes in hospitia. "Running about to their lodgings."—Oborta. "Burst forth." Said of indignation smothered for a time, and then bursting forth against (ob) all one's efforts to repress it.—Conseleratos. "One and all polluted with crime.” — Cætu quodam modo, etc. “From the society in a manner of men and of gods.”

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1–6. Prope continuato agmine. “In an almost unbroken line.” — Caput Ferentinum. “The headwaters of Ferentina.” Consult note on bk. i., chap. i., line 3. — Ut quisque veniret. “As each would come up.” The subjunctive is here employed to denote an oft-repeated action. (Zumpt, § 569.) — Sedulo audientes, etc. “Eagerly listening to words favorable to their resentment.” — Multitudinem aliquam. “The rest of the multitude.” Where the contrasted objects together compose one whole, aliquus may be employed with the force of reliquus. — Subjectum vice. “Adjacent to the road.” Sub in composition has often the force of “close by,” “near to.”

7, 8. In contionis modum. “After the manner of a public harangue.” — Veteres populi Romani injurias, etc. “Even though you may forget the injuries done of old by the Roman people, and the (by-gone) disasters of the nation of the Volscii, all other things in fine, with what feelings, pray, do you endure,” etc. The construction here is purposely made irregular, in order to mark strong indignation on the part of the speaker. The conjunction ut (for the force of which here consult Zumpt, § 573) is put after the first clause, instead of at the beginning, so that the order of construction is, ut veteres injurias ... omnia obliviscamini, etc., and omnia, from its being a summing up, as it were, has the force omnia denique. There is no need therefore of the emendation and pointing of Gronovius, who proposes to read orationes exorsus veteres populi Romani injurias, cladesque gentis Volscorum, i.e., “having, in an oration after the manner of a public harangue, given a prefatory detail of the injuries,” etc., so that the words of Tullius commence at ut omnia. The reading and explanation which we have given are far more natural.

11–19. De vobis. “Over you.” — Spectaculo fuisse. “Were as a show.” — Traductos per ora hominum. He uses this form of expression to arouse them the more, since it was properly applied to captives, who were led in triumph before the eyes of the people. — Quo, si inter-sinus, etc. “By which, if we had been present at the spectacle, we should have profaned the games, and should have rendered expiation necessary.” Literally, “Should have deserved expiation.” Some editors make the previous sentence end at nefas esse, and commence a new one with quod, which they substitute for quo. — Piorum. “Of these pious ones.” Ironical.
20 25. Si hoc. The neuter here is brought in for the sake of a comprehensive summary; "if all this." More usual Latinity would give hac.—Si vivi estis. "If you are true men." The condition on which magna malo is based.—Incitat. "Incited by Tullianus."

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1-9. Omnia populum. "Of all the states," i.e., all those that formed the Volscan nation.—Aliquanto plus spei reposuit. "Con- siderably more hope was reposed," i.e., than in Attius, their own leader.—Necquam sefelli. "He by no means disappointed."—Ciceros. Compare bk. i., chap. iv., line 15.—In Latinam viam, etc. "Having passed across the country by transverse by-roads into the Latin way." The line of the Via Latina was in all probability not completed as a regular road until after the reduction of both the Latins and Volscians under the Roman sway. Livy, it is true, speaks of it here as if it already existed in the time of Coriolanus, but he in fact uses the name only as a geographical description, both in this passage, and in bk. x., chap. xxxvi., where he speaks of Interamna as a colony "qua via Latina est." Neither passage, however, affords any proof that the road was then in existence; though there is no doubt that there was already a way or line of communication.

11-12. Mugillam. The ordinary text has, after Coriolos, the words novella hae Romani oppida adexit, the expression novella oppida meaning "towns but recently conquered." Many editors, however, think that the name of a city ought to be given here, and therefore read, some Mugillam, others Borillas, according to the list of conquered cities mentioned by Dionysius. The elder Gronovius is in favor of the latter, the younger of the former, and we have given the emendation of the younger in the text, as the more natural one. Both places are mentioned by Dionysius (viii., 36) among those taken by Corio- lanus.—Lavinium recept. "He took possession of Lavinium," i.e., without fighting. Not "he recovered Lavinium," for the place had not before this been subject to the Volscians. Capit. on the contrary, implies that there was actual fighting in the case of the other cities mentioned. These cities lay to the east of Rome, on the borders of the Æquii, from whom they appear to have been taken by the Romans.

14-24. Fossas Cluiliae. Compare bk. i., chap. xiii., line 18.—Inde. "From this point."—Populator. "The devastators."—Jam ferocem per se. "Already exasperated of themselves."—Criminando. "By bringing charges."—Quamvis suspicatos. "Although distrustful."—Id modo non conveniebat, etc. "In this alone they did not agree, that," etc.—Sp. Nautilus jam, etc. Between the consuls of the year 491 B.C., mentioned in chap. xxxiv., and those named here, Livy has omitted two sets of consuls, namely, of the year 490, Q. Sulpicius Camerinus and Sp. Larcius Flavus; and of 489, C. Julius Julius and P. Pinarius Rufus Mamercinus. The omission, as Zumpt thinks, was probably an oversight on the part of Livy himself, as there is no trace of a gap in the manuscripts. Weissenborn, on the other hand, is of opinion that Livy purposely indicates the omission by the employment of the particle jam.

25-32. Reconsentes legiones. They were holding probably a muster and review of the new levies which had been raised to repair the losses occasioned by previous defeats.—Stationes. "Outposts." By stationes are specially meant the advanced posts thrown forward in front of the gates.—Referre. "To lay before them the question."—Acceperunt relationem. "Entertained the question."—Labare plebis animos. "That the spirits of the plebeians were giving way."—Atrix responsum. "A harsh answer."

32-38. Si Volscis ager redderetur, etc. The demands of Coriolanus appear, from a comparison of the accounts of Livy and Dionysius (viii., 35), to have been as follows: He demanded that the territory taken from the Volscians should be restored to them; that the colonies settled there should be recalled, and that the whole people should be received as allies and isopolites. He allowed the Romans the two terms of thirty-three days, fixed by the fetial law, to make up their minds. Should these pass away, and his demands not be acceded to, it would rest with him to determine what course to pursue. Niebuhr remarks that these terms are nothing else than the very sacrifice by which Rome, in the year 295, had the wisdom to purchase peace with the Volscians.—Traditum est: nihilo magis, etc. Gronovius would read traditum (scil. traditum est); et nihilo magis, etc. This would make the sentence somewhat more simple, though there are many instances of the present reading.

CHAPTER XL

3-18. Id publicum consilium. "Whether this was a state measure." Supply utrum before id. Dionysius says (viii., 39) that this step was recommended by Valeria, the sister of Publicola. Plutarch gives his wife's name as Virgilia.—In primo. "At first." An unusual form for primo. The preposition, though defended by some, is probably erroneous here.—Publica majestate in legatis. "By the majesty of the state (represented) in its ambassadors." Tanta offusa oculis, etc. "By so great religious sanctity poured forth upon the eyes and the imagination in the persons of the priests."—Insignem.
"Conspicuous."—Cognoverat. "Had recognized."—Tibi. The dative ethic. (Zumpt, § 408.)

19–26. Consternatus ab sede sua. "Rushing in consternation from his seat." Some construe consternatus with prope ut amens, "confounded, almost like one who had lost his reason." This, however, is less spirited.—Obvix. "As she met him."—Sine sciam. "Let me know." Ut elegantly omitted before sciam.—Ad hostem. Supply utrum before ad, and compare note on line 31. So again, captiva materne, "a captive or a mother."—Senecta. More poetic than senectus.—Traxit. As if against her will.—Non succurrít. "Did not the thought occur to you."

30–32. Sed ego nihil jam pati, etc. "But I for my part can now suffer nothing that is not more disgraceful to you than distressing to me, nor, as I am most wretched, am I likely long to remain so." She alludes, in consequence of her old age, to the speedy termination of her miseries by death. The ordinary reading is ut sim, which Zumpt very properly rejects, and gives ut sum, as found in one of the best manuscripts, because, as Veturia has just said that nothing could be more distressing to her, the undecided expression ut sim, "granting that I am," is quite unsuitable.—De his videris. "See to these." Pointing to his wife and children. Compare bk. i., chap. lviii., line 35.—Si pergis. "If you proceed (in your present course)."

35–40. Comploratio sui patriæque. "Their joint lamentation for themselves and their country."—Fregere. "Broke down."—Invidia rei oppressum, etc. "They relate that, overwhelmed by the odium of the proceeding, he perished, some say by one kind of death, others by another." Supply tradunt after alii.—Fabium. Fabius Pictor. Compare bk. i., chap. xlv., line 10.—Hanc serpe usurpasse vocem. "That he frequently made use of this remark."

41–44. Non inviderunt laude sua, etc. "Did not grudge the women the praise that was their due." Invideo is commonly used intransitively with one dative, either of the person or the thing; but sometimes the accusative of the thing is added to the dative of the person. Quintilian, however, observes (ix., 3) that his contemporaries used the ablative instead of the accusative of the earlier writers; and this construction first occurs in the present passage; very frequently in the younger Pliny, and sometimes in Tacitus. (Zumpt, § 413.)—Sine obtractatione gloriae alienæ. "Without detracting from the fame of others."—Tempulum Fortunæ muliebris. Tradition connected a temple of Fortuna muliebris, which lay four miles from the city on the Latin road, with this intercession of the Roman matrons. It was overlooked, however, that this temple after all did not stand on the spot. where Coriolanus must have received the mission; for, as the tradition most distinctly related, he pitched his camp five miles from Rome, at the Fossa Calinia.

45–53. Deinde. "Afterwards."—Aquitō Hernici, etc. "The Hernici, for they too were in arms, fell as a province to Aquilius." The consuls drew lots for their respective provinces.—Cum Volsciæ aquo Marte discessum est. "They came off in battle with the Volsci on equal terms."

The date assigned to the legend of Coriolanus in the annals is B.C. 490. The inconsistency of this legend with the traces of real history which have come down to us have been pointed out by Niebuhr, who has also shown that if the banishment of Coriolanus be placed some twenty years later, and his attack on the Romans about ten years after that, the groundwork of the story is reconcilable with history. The account of his condemnation is not applicable to the state of things earlier than B.C. 470, about which time a famine happened, while Hiero was tyrant of Syracuse, and might have been induced by his hostility to the Etrurians to send corn to the Romans. Moreover, in B.C. 458 the Volsci gained from the Romans, as we have already remarked, the very terms which were proposed by Coriolanus. The circumstance that the story has been referred to a wrong date Niebuhr considers to have arisen from its having been mixed up with the foundation of the temple to Fortuna Muliebris. The name Coriolanus may have been derived from his settling in the town of Corioli after his banishment. (Smith, Dict. Ant. Biogr., etc., s. v.)

CHAPTER XLI.

2–3. Cum Hernicis sādus iactum. This was only the renewal of an ancient league; and its stipulation (which is here quite misrepresented) was that all territory conquered in future by the arms of the confederates should be equally divided between the Romans, Latins, and Hernici. Livy erroneously regards the league as a treaty of peace at the end of a war; and Dionysius even enters into a circumstantial relation of the campaign. The war, however, is a mere fabrication, derived from the notion that the league was a treaty of peace, and from a misunderstanding of what was reported of its contents with regard to the division of conquered territories. (Niebuhr, H. R., ii., p. 87.)—Partes due. "Two thirds." The other third, according to Livy's erroneous version of the affair, was given to the Hernici, which is a charge brought soon after by his colleague against Cassius.—Inde dimidium. "One half of this;" i.e., of these two thirds.
5-9. Adjiciabet. "He was for adding."—Publicum. "Though belonging to the state."—Possideri. "Was occupied." So by possessores are meant "occupiers;" by possessio is meant the property occupied; by usus, the act of occupation. These terms are always employed when the use of the public lands is spoken of. It was an essential part of the definition of possessio that it could relate only to what was not a man's own property. After every conquest, what portion of land should be retained as public property was determined, as well as what portion should be assigned in parcels to individuals by way of remuneration for military services. The plebeians were as much disqualified for occupation as the patricians were from receiving assignments.—Publica sollicitudo. "A solicitude for the public welfare." Observe here the force of sed et at the beginning of the clause. The anxiety of many of the fathers arose no doubt from their apprehensions with regard to their own property. But there was also among them a solicitude for the public welfare, etc.

11-15. Lex agraria. This was but a revival of the Servian law; and its object was, after setting apart the public portion, to divide the remainder among the plebeians; and at the same time, by way of raising a fund for the payment of the army, to levy from the "occupiers" the tithe, the payment wherof had been discontinued. The patricians, of course, set their faces against such a law, because the public land, which was wholly unprofitable to the Commons while undivided, became wholly lost to themselves when divided.—Caeperat fastidire, etc. "I had begun to feel disgust, that he had gone from citizens to allies, to make the gift an indiscriminate one." If the reading esse be here correct, Cassius and not munus must be regarded as the object. Vulgatam, according to our reading, is the supine after esse, a verb of motion.

18-31. Regno viam fieri. "That the way was being paved to a throne."—Quid ita enim adsuni, etc. "For why was it so that the allies and the Latin nation were admitted to participate?"—Quid attinuisse. "What purpose did it serve that."—Pro Coriolano. "Instead of a Coriolanus."—Dissuasor et intercessor. "The dissuader and opposer."—Ambitiosus in socio, etc. "Anxious to be popular with the allies, and on that account less regarded by the citizens."—Siculo frumento. Compare chap. xxxiv., line 12.—Præsente mercedem regni. "An immediate bribe for sovereign power."—Velut abundaret omnia. "As if all things were in abundance (unto them)."—Respuebantur. "Were loathed," i. e., were rejected with disgust.

38-40. Actorem. "The exactor," i. e., the one who inflicted. The ordinary text has auctorem; but auctor properly denotes "the proposer of a measure," which would be inconsistent here with the father's authority.—Peculium. "The private property." Peculium is properly the property acquired by a slave with his master's consent; and as a son was in patria potestate as much as a slave was in domini potestate, the term "peculium" is appropriate to the property of a son acquired with the father's consent.—Signum. In the sense of status.—Kæsone. Commonly written with merely the initial K. The name Kæso was given as a praenomen to those whose birth was like that of Macduff. (Shakespeare, Macbeth, v., 7.) The name Caesar arose from a like circumstance.—Diem dictum. Compare chap. xxxv., line 10.—Perdullionis. "For high-treason." Compare bk. i., chap. xxvi., line 21.—Telluris æden. This temple, first consecrated in 484, stood in the Carinae, near the Sororium Tigillum. (Becker, i., 524.)—Dannatur. Dio Cassius (Frag. 19) shows that he was unjustly condemned.

CHAPTER XLII.

2–12. Dulcedo. "The charm."—Dempto. "Having been removed out of the way."—Malegitate. "By the parsimony." This is the sense in which this word is generally used in Livy.—Volscis Æquisque. Both nations are generally mentioned together from this time down to 295.—Fraudavere. Livy himself, by the employment of this term, acknowledges the gross unfairness with which the Plebeians were treated, in being deprived of all share in the conquered lands, although they furnished the greater part of the foot forces.—Venditit. "Caused to be sold."—In publicum. Supply œarium. [Fabium nomen. "All the Fabii." Nomen is used as in the common phrase nomen Latinum].—Tenuere. "Gained their point." For obtinuere.—Intermissee. "Were suspended."

18–16. Uno animo. "Becoming of one mind," i.e., becoming united in feeling.—Castoris ædes. Though dedicated to the twin gods, this temple was commonly called Ædes Castoris. After the battle at Lake Regillus, the Dioscuri, who had assisted the Romans in the fight, were seen refreshing themselves and their horses, all covered with dust and sweat, at the little fountain of Juturna, near the temple of Vesta. A temple was accordingly erected to these deities on the spot where they had appeared. It was not a temple of the largest size, but its conspicuous situation on the Forum made it one of the best-known in Rome.—Idibus Quinctilibus. "On the Ides of July," i.e., on the 16th of the month.

19–24. Sollicitati sunt. "Were excited."—Popularem potestatem, etc. "Were every day bringing more into note their popular power by means of this popular law." Observe the force of the imperfect. Since the tribunes as yet could not originate any motion of this kind, the law here and afterwards meant is that brought forward by Cassius, the passage of which was hindered by the Senate.—Satis superque gratui té fúorís esse. "That there was enough and more than enough of gratuitous frenzy." Some manuscripts give favoris instead of fúorís, "That the tribunes had enough and more than enough of gratuitous favors among the multitude." The common reading, however, ought not to be disturbed.—Vicit. Namely, by preventing the passage of the bill.

28-41. Vana lex, etc. "The law became an empty project, and the abettors of the law mere empty boasters from their ostentatiously promising a favor that could not be realized." Observe the force of the frequentative.—Unoque velut tenere, etc. "And all uniformly tried in contests with the tribunes," i. e., their fidelity to the cause of the patricians was thus tried and established. Expertus is here employed in a passive sense; it commonly appears in an active one.—Bene locatus. "Well placed." A metaphorical expression, from money well laid out, and yielding good interest.—Prope supererant. "Was almost more than sufficient."—Ægras jam mentes. "The already affected minds."—Consulti. Belonging to numinis along with moti, and not, as some erroneously think, to vates.—Incesti. "For unchastity." The punishment was to be buried alive.

CHAPTER XLIII.

2-14. Segnió. "Less active."—Atrocius. "More formidable."—Cura. "The solicitude."—Ortonam. Situated on the confines of the Eáquian territory. The Romans had to lend aid to it, in accordance with the stipulations of the Latin league. There was another Ortona, a considerable town of the Frentani, on the coast of the Adriatic.—Pleni. "Sated with."—Cum compescere deberent. "When they ought to have held in check."—Non sua sponte. As in former days. Compare chap. xxvii., line 35.—Spurius Licinius. Dionysius calls him Icilius, and Zumpt thinks that this is the correct form of the name, since the praenomen Spurius does not occur among the Licinii, but is common among the Icillii.—Injunxenda. "Of forcing."

16-19. Auctorem. "The author of the step," i. e., the tribune Licinius, who had endeavored by his veto to stop the levy.—Collegae. This conduct on their part, however, was unconstitutional, since they had no power to interfere with the intercession of Licinius, which was properly final. 'Compare Seneca, Controv.; i., 5: "Ex tribunis potentior est qui intercedit."—Ducendus Fabio in Eáquos, etc. This reading, which was first established by Siganus, on the authority of one or two manuscripts, preserves a consistency in Livy's statement; for he says, in the next chapter, "Proximo bello, in ipsa acie, in ipso certamine, consensu exercitus, traditam ultro victoriam victis Æquis." The old reading of almost all the manuscripts and printed copies was Fabio in Vientes, in Æquos Furio datur, but this destroys the consistency of the passage.

20–27. Veientibus. The old reading is Æquis. Consult preceding note.—Ipse consul. "Himself (alone) a consul," i. e., alone displaying the true spirit of one. This is said as a contrast to the movements of his colleague.—Imperatorias artes. "Qualities as a commander."—Nec illos, etsi non, etc. "Nor, although the exhortation of their leader, whom they hated, was not (able to effect this), could their own infamy at least, and the public disgrace at present, and danger soon after, if courage should have returned to the foe, compel them to accelerate their pace, or if (they did) nothing else, stand in order of battle." We have given, in the last line of this passage, stare, the correction of Muretus, instead of the common reading in-stare, which cannot be defended, although many have sought to do so.

32–36. Navatam ab equite operam. "The assistance rendered by the cavalry." Equivalent to equitem quod navaverit operam.—Adeo excellentibus ingeniiis, etc. "To such a degree, unto transcendent abilities, is the tact more likely to be wanting," etc., i. e., so true it is that to transcendent abilities, etc.—Citius defuerit. More literally, "Likely sooner to be wanting." Observe the force of the potential defuerit.—Obtinuere. "Gained their point." Compare chap. xlii., line 9.—Ut in Fabia gente consulatus maneret. The extraordinary fact, says Niebuhr, that for seven consecutive years, from 269 to 275, one of the seats in the consulship was always filled by a member of the Fabian house cannot have been the result of accident. It was the price paid by the older tribes to the powerful house in question for their support in an attempt to exclude the lesser houses from the consulship.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1–13. Auctorem legis agrariae. "As the advocate of the agrarian law." Not "as the author of an agrarian law," for the reference is to the law of Cassius, which was again, as before, sought to be carried through.—Tib. Contraction for Tiberius.—Velut processisset Licinio. "As if success had attended Licinius." More literally, "As if it had succeeded to Licinius." The verb is here taken impersonally, though more commonly construed with a subject.—In presentia re, etc. "For the present by the very fact (of the defeat of Licinius), for all future time by the precedent (which had been established),"
i. e., when the patricians had once found that the tribunitian power could be defeated, they would always have recourse to the same method of defeating it. Most of the manuscripts and old editions have rei publicae in place of re ipsa.—Dissolvi. "Was rendered nugatory."
—Qui et ex collega, etc. "To wish both a victory (won) from a colleague for himself, and also the gratitude of the better portion (of the community) by means of a public service."—Et unum vel adversus omnes, etc. Compare note on chap. xliii., line 16.

17-22. Proceptis. "By the counsel."—Comiter ac beneigne.
"Courteously and kindly."—Ut cuique privatim, etc. "As each had in his personal capacity any influence with them individually." Observe that jus here, as often elsewhere, signifies "power" or "influence," and moreover that adversus does not always imply hostile opposition or injury.—Salubres. That is from a patrician point of view.
—Quattuorquc tribunorum, etc. In the manuscripts and old editions the reading is novemque tribunorum, etc., which is quite incorrect, as at this time there were only five tribunes. The error arose, as Sigonio remarks, from inaccuracy in transcribing the Roman numeral IV, V being written X.

24-37. Profecti. That is, in company with the Latins and Hernici.
—Etruria. This country was then at the height of its power.—Principes. The Etrurian Lucumones are meant. Compare bk. i., chap. xxxiv., line 1.—Id unum venenum, etc. "That this was the only bane, this the plague-spot discovered for powerful states, in order that great empires might be mortal." The allusion is to internal dissension.—Sustentatum. "Kept down." Sustentare, as Zumpt well remarks, has two significations, "to maintain, keep up" a good thing; and "to retard, keep down" a bad thing.—Consilia. "By the wise measures." And yet, in reality, it had been fomented by the very course of policy pursued by the fathers.—Saeuire. "To act turbulently."—Qualicumque urbis statu, etc. "That, as long as military discipline remained, in whatever condition of the city, it had been possible for order to be established."—Non parendi. "Of disobeying."

38-44. In ipsa acie. "In the very field."—Ultrro. "Voluntarily."
—Aquis. Consult note on chap. xliii., line 19.—Multis in vicem casibus, etc. "By many vicissitudes vanquished and victors in turn." Livy appears to mean that they expected some decisive advantage now from the divisions of the Romans, especially as they were sometimes successful against them even when united.
CHAPTER XLV.

1-7. Præterea aliusd. Pleonastic. — Ne rem committerent eo, etc. "Lest they should bring the affair into such a situation where two armies would have to be feared at the same time," i. e., their own and that of the enemy.—Tam ancipit periculo aversi. "Keeping aloof (from an engagement) by reason of so double a danger." Supply a praedio committendo after aversi.—Diem tempusque, etc. "(Hoping) that length of time and circumstances," etc. Compare Weissenborn, ad loc., "Länge der Zeit und Umstände." Supply sperantes at the beginning of the clause.—Sanitatem. "A healthy tone of feeling."

9-14. Præpropere. "With overhaste."—Obsequitando. "By riding up to." This compound is a favorite with our author.—Qua...qua. "As well...as." Frequent in Livy.—Remedium timoris. "As a palliation for their cowardice."—Inventum. Properly inventam; but the participle is usually accommodated in gender to the predicate.—Et consules magis non confidere, etc. "And that the consuls rather distrusted the valor than disbelieved the sincerity of the soldiers," i. e., their willingness to fight. Drakenborch thinks that, inasmuch as Fabius says afterwards, "Ego istos posse scio; velle ne scirem, isti fecerunt," the expression non confidere means, not to depend on their fidelity, and non credere, not to trust their valor. But, as Prenderville remarks, it does not follow that the enemy and the consuls said or thought the same thing. The enemy said it was cowardice, the consuls said it was want of inclination on the part of the Romans. Each had their own motive for what they said.

16-23. In novitatem generis, etc. The Etrurians, proud of the antiquity of their nation, taunt the Romans with "the newness of their race and origin."—Sub. "Close to."—Haud aqre. "Without any impatience."—Vorsare. "Kept agitating." Literally, "Kept turning to and fro."—Nolle successum non, etc. "They wished not success either to the fathers or the consuls." The general negation comes first, and is then repeated distributively with the single terms. Hence the two negatives do not destroy one another. (Madvig, § 460, Obs. 2.)—Certare. "Struggled for the mastery."—Eludebat. "Mocked them."

25-35. Capita conferunt. "Lay their heads together." So also conferre sermones, "To talk over together."—Sed retro revocanda, etc. "But this wish was to be kept back and concealed."—Incitato semel. "When once aroused."—Ut in hostem animadverturos. "That they will inflict punishment on him as on an enemy."—Quo minus consules velle credunt. "The less they believe the consuls to wish for battle."
—Rem ad ultimum, etc. “That the affair will break out into the extreme of sedition,” i.e., into a desperate sedition.

39-44. Totis castris. “From every quarter of the camp.”—Sen-sim. “With reserve.”—Centurionum principes. “The principal centurions.” The allusion is to the first centurions of the three lines, the hastati, principes, and triarius, of each legion. They were also called principes ordinum, or primi ordinis, or centuriones primorum or-dinum. Their centuries were called honesti ordinis.—Tergiversantur tamen. “They keep putting it off, however,” i.e., keep delaying to accede to the cries of the soldiery. Tergiversari means properly, “to act in a shuffling or evasive manner, to temporize.”—Ad crescentem tumultum, etc. “As his colleague was now beginning to yield through the fear of a mutiny, on the tumult increasing.” Ad has here a species of temporal signification. (Zumpt, § 296.) Some, less correctly, make it equivalent to propter. Another, but inferior reading, is tumultus... metum.—Ego istos, Cn. Manli, etc. “I know, Cneius Manlius, that those soldiers can conquer the enemy; (but, by their conduct,) they themselves caused me not to know for certain that they wished to do it.”

CHAPTER XLVI.

2–5. Legiones. For copiae or exercitus. The Roman mode of speak-ing applied to the enemy. Compare Horace, Sat., i., 6, 4.—Prope certa spes erat. That is, to the Veientes and the Etrurians.—Majus quoque aliquod, etc. “That some greater feat also (on their own part) is not to be despised of in the case of such irritated feelings, and on so doubtful an occasion.” As the Romans before, when sure of suc-cess against the Æqui, gave up the advantage, it was not likely that they would now hazard a battle, when they could not be certain of the successful issue of it, and were besides in such a state of discon-tent. The enemy therefore calculated upon an easy victory, and even hoped to accomplish some greater feat than before—for instance, to take the Roman camp.
8-12. Explicandi ordines. The MS. reading is ordinis, which would refer merely to a single rank, not to an entire army. We have given therefore the correction of Gronovius. Drakenborch conjectures explicandis ordínibus.—Abjectis temere magis, etc. "Having been rather thrown off at random than hurled with any aim (at the foe)."—In manus . . . ad gladios. Livy is fond of varying his expressions, particularly prepositions.—Genus Fabium. Equivalent to gens Fabia. Zumpt, however, thinks that gens would refer merely to the patricians, whereas genus includes also the humbler families of the same name attached to the great house, freedmen and their descendants.

14-28. Principem in confertos Veientes. "Foremost into the thickest of the Veientes."—Armorum arte. "Skill in arms."—Versantem. "Ranging." Moving to and fro.—Telo extracto, etc. "The weapon having been plucked out (by the Tuscan), Fabius fell headlong on the wound," i.e., fell forward on his breast where he had received the wound. The word abīt, says Burmann (ad Quintil. Declam., 9, 5), is expressive of the force and quickness with which he fell.—Hoc jurastis? "Was it this which you swore?"—Injuratus. Dionysius (ix., p. 567) says, on the contrary, that the consuls did take the oath.—Te impetraturum. "That you will bring it to pass."—In primum. "To the van."—Infensis hastis. The term infestus is more commonly applied to weapons and things, and infensus to persons.

CHAPTER XLVII.

3-12. Est versata. "Prevailed."—Et ut ille. "And when he," i.e., Manlius.—Gradum retulere. "They fell back," i.e., from the point to which they had advanced.—Cessissentque loco. "And would have retired from the field." Literally, "from the place" originally assigned them in the commencement of the flight.—Rem inclinatam. "The drooping action." Inclinatam properly means here "bent," or "turned away," for the purpose of flight, the latter, however, not having as yet actually commenced.

13-22. Coram. "In person."—Vanior. "Thinner," i.e., full of gaps. Equivalent to rarior, and opposed to densa acies. The primary signification of vanus is "empty."—Subtracta subsidia. "Detached bodies of reserve."—Terunt. Some read tererent, which is incorrect. Cum tererent would be correct.—Nuntius. "Intelligence." Nuntius, like the Greek ἀγγελος, has the double meaning of "messenger," and of "the message" sent.—Ad prætorium. "To the general's tent," i.e., to the quarter where the general's tent was. The commander of an army was originally called prætor, i.e., qui præstit.—Opposita. "Having been posted."
CHAPTER XLVIII.

1-11. Studiis. "In accordance with the zealous wishes."—Bellī. The MSS. have bella, which most editors retain, on the supposition that Livy intended to go on thus: neque ullam aliam rem prius curare, but from forgetfulness, or by mistake, introduced curam agere instead of curare! We have adopted, however, the conjecture of Hearne, belli, which makes delectus a genitive.—Ullam aliam. Equivalent in effect to ullius alius rei publicae. —Cum patribus coalescerent, etc. "The feelings of the Commons might become in unison with those of the fathers."—Censuit. "He proposed."—Occuparent patres ipsi, etc. "That the fathers themselves should anticipate (such a movement) by making it their own gift." More literally, "Should be beforehand to make it," etc. He recommended that they should themselves vote the division of the lands, and thereby carry off from a tribune the credit of giving the people a present—Quam maxime equaliter. "As equally as possible." That is, two jugera to each man. Compare bk. i., chap. xlvi., line 5.—Verum esse. "That it is but fair." More literally, "That it is the true way."
14–19. Nimia gloria luxuriare, etc. "That the once energetic spirit of Cæso was running to waste, and beginning to grow enfeebled through a surfeit of glory."—Deinde. "For some time thereafter." It would be palpably erroneous to make deinde here refer to all the time that came after. He merely means, immediately or for some time after this. The demands for an agrarian law were ever and anon renewed by the tribunes, though without success.—Eo nulla pugna, etc. Observe that eo is here equivalent to ideo. Compare bk. i., chap. xi., line 29.

21–27. Temeritate. As he carried on the war alone, and without the co-operation of any of the allies, his defeat is easy to be conceived. —Res proxime, etc. "The affair had come very nearly to the form of a mere predatory excursion." By res is meant the campaign. The MSS. have in fornam, but the absence of the preposition makes nearer Latinity, though the other form of expression is not opposed to the usage of the language.—Legionibus Romanis cedebant. "They retired from before the Roman legions." On this employment of the dative, consult Madvig, § 244, a. —Eludentes. "Evading." The verb eludere is properly said of gladiators avoiding a blow by shifting the body, etc. Ludus is the gladiatorial school or combat.—Neque omitti, etc. "Could neither be wholly disregarded nor yet brought to a conclusion."

28–34. Praesentia. "At the very time."—Non diutius, quam recens, etc. "No longer than (while) the fresh smart of their late disaster would be passing off."—Mox moturos se. "Would soon put themselves in motion." Livy here varies the construction. We would have expected the clause to run as follows: Aut exspectabatur, ut a Sabinis, etc. He makes the change, however, in order to lay the emphasis on Sabinos and Etruriam.—Assiduum magis quam gravis. "I persevering rather than seriously formidable."—Animos agitabat. "Kept their minds in constant uneasiness." Observe the force of the imperfect.—Averti aüo. "To turn their attention elsewhere." Referring to the Romans. The passive in a reflexive sense, and equivalent to avertere se, like the middle voice in Greek. (Zumpt, § 146.)

35–40. Assiduum magis, etc. "A permanent rather than a large military post." Presidium is often used in the same sense with reference to colonies sent out to such a post.—Vos curate. "Do you attend to."—Hostes. "As foes."—Auctores sumus. "We pledge ourselves."—Nobis in animo est. "It is in our contemplation."—Res publica et militae, etc. "Let the state be exempt from (the charge of providing) both soldiery and money in that war." Illic is here equivalent to in illo bello.
42. Vestibulo. "The court-yard." Vestibulum has here its proper meaning. It did not, strictly speaking, form part of a building, but was a vacant space before the door, forming a court, which was surrounded on three sides by the structure, and was open on the fourth to the street. The two sides of the building joined the street, but the middle part of it, where the door was placed, was at some little distance from the street. The ordinary meaning of the term "entrance-hall," within the house-door, but without the sleeping- apartements, does not of course apply here.

Aulus Gellius (xvii., 21) says that the three hundred and six Fabii perished along with their families on the Cremera, and hence Niebuhr (vol. ii., p. 193) infers that they were not merely an advanced post in an enemy's country, occupying a fort there for the sake of ravaging the territory of the foe, but that they formed a regular settlement on the river with their wives and children, and that eventually a town would have sprung up there.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1-11. Manat. "Gradually spreads."—Subisse. "Had undergone," i.e., had taken upon themselves.—In privatam curam. "Into a matter of private concern." This is said with somewhat of rhetorical exaggeration, since the state still really carried on the war. Compare line 38 seqq. of the present chapter.—Si sint. "If there be besides."—Postera die. Livy very rarely uses dies in the feminine gender. Drakenborch says only in four places, of which the present is one, and yet even in these the MSS. vary, so that he himself gives the masculine the preference here. We have followed, however, Alschefski and Zumpt.—Paludatus. "In his paludamentum," i.e., in full military costume. Consult note on bk. i., chap. xxvi., line 10.—Acceptus in medium. "Being received into the centre."

14-21. Sex et trecenti. These were the Fabii proper, or members of the Fabian house; but there were besides these, as Festus informs us, five thousand clients, since it would require a large number of men to maintain a military post in the immediate vicinity of the foe. Perizonius (Animadv. Hist., c. 5) thinks that the number of the Fabii is greatly exaggerated, and no doubt he is right, since the whole account has evidently been drawn from some family lay of the Fabian house. Compare the remarks of Niebuhr on this whole subject (R. H., vol. ii., p. 195).—Quorum neminem, etc. Rhetorical exaggeration merely.—Egregius senatus. "An upright senate."—Propria alia, etc. "One part belonging to themselves, composed of their relations and acquaintances." We may here mentally supply pars, as elicited from _turba_ which precedes. —_Nihil medium_, etc. "Nothing moderate, neither (moderate) hope, nor (moderate) anxiety." —_Inmensa_. "On the highest scale." —_Stupens_. "Wholly engrossed."

22-28. _Felices_. "With happy omens." —_Reddere_. "To bring back." —_Ut mittant_. "To send on its way." —_Ad parentes_. Those who are going forth are here regarded as _juniores_, just as above they are termed _milites_. —_Infelici via_, etc. "Having set out on their luckless route, through the right-hand archway of the Carmental gate." This gate lay just at the foot of the Capitol, and was named after a fane or altar of Carmenta, the mother of Evander, which stood near it. The principal gates of Rome had commonly more than one thoroughfare, and these archways, or passages, were called _fornices_ and _Jani_. (Consult note on bk. i., chap. xix., line 6.) The right-hand _Janus_ of the _Porta Carmentalis_ was always afterwards regarded as ill-omened to one passing out of the city under it, and was branded with the name of _Porta Sceletara_, from the disaster of the _Fabii_. —_Cremetram_. The Cremera, now _la Valca_, was a small stream, in the territory of the Veientes, and emptying into the Tiber, on the _Etrurian_ side of that river.

31-45. _Donec nihil alius_, etc. "As long as the war consisted in nothing else than devastations." For this idiomatic usage of _alius quem_, consult Zumpt, § 771, and on _donec_ with the indicative, Zumpt, § 575. —_Infesta hostium_. "Those of the enemy constant objects of attack." —_Per utrumque finem_. "Along each frontier." —_Dirigendi_. For _instruendi_. —_Dum post signa_, etc. "While the ranks, following their standards, are entering upon their ground, and posting their reserves." Some, less correctly, regard _ordines_ here as the accusative: "While they are entering their ranks." —_Ademit locum_. "Took away all room," i. e., all possibility. —_Saxa Rubra_. A village and station on the Flaminian Way, now _Prima Porta_, nine miles from Rome. It evidently derived its name from the redness of the tufa rocks, which is still conspicuous in the neighborhood. —_Ab insita animis levitate_. "From the innate fickleness of their minds." —_Ante deductum_, etc. It would seem from this to have been the intention of the Romans to give up the post on the Cremera, and to recall the _Fabii_.

CHAPTER L.

2-12. _Majoris belli apparatu_. "Preparation for a more serious war." Equivalent in effect to _maje re belli apparatu_. —_Incursantium_. "Of marauders." —_Collatisque signis_. "And in pitched battle." —_Ut tum res erant_. "As things then were," i. e., considering how such things were then estimated. —_Ex re natum_. "Springing from the very nature of the case," i.e., the offspring of, and suggested by, the very circumstances of the case.—Prodestituit obviam. "In the way of those who were plundering."

17-28. Proverit. "Carried them on so far."—Rara. "Here and there."—Improvidi. "Incautious."—Superassent. "They had passed." Livy often employs superare in this sense. Compare Virg., Æn., i., 244: "Fontem superare Tumavi.—Vaga. "Straying about."—Et adversi et undique. "Both in front and on all sides."—Accidebant. "Kept falling in upon them."—Septi. "Hedged in."—Orbem colligere. "To contract their ring."—Insignem. "Conspicuous."—Multiplicatis in arto ordinibus. This refers to the Etrurians, whose ranks grew more numerous as the space grew narrower. Some, less correctly, give multiplicatis here the meaning of "more condensed," to signify that the Etrurians, who before, when scattered, appeared few, now seemed more numerous when wedged closely together.

30-35. Nisi. "Having used their utmost efforts."—Editum leniter. "Of gentle ascent."—Restitere. "Halted."—Subemates. "The foe advancing up the hill."—Vincebatque auxilio, etc. "And their paucity of numbers was beginning to conquer by the advantage of the ground (and would eventually have proved victorious), had not," etc. The indicative is here employed instead of the subjunctive, to mark that a part of the inference has already come to pass, and that the whole would have been realized if an obstacle had not been thrown in the way. (Zumpt, § 519.) Compare note on bk. ii., chap. xc., line 4.
—Jugo. "Along the slope."

38-39. Unum prope puberem, etc. It is unanimously stated by the ancient writers that all the Fabii perished at the Cremera, with the exception of one individual, from whom all the later members of the gens were descended. The same accounts relate, as Livy does here, that he was left behind at Rome in consequence of his youth; but this could not have been the reason, if the supposition be a correct one that the Fabii migrated from the city with all their families, and it is moreover refuted by the fact that this same Fabius was consul ten years afterwards. ["By the words prope puberem aetate Livy intends merely to describe Fabius, not to assign a reason for his being left in the city; and relictum means 'survived the battle.'" (Weissenborn.)]—Stirpe genti Fabiae. "A stock for the Fabian house," i.e., to propagate the Fabian house.
CHAPTER LI.

1-11. Clades est. Not esse, as some read, because this would imply that Horatius and Menenius were consuls after the defeat of the Fabii had taken place, whereas it plainly appears from the next chapter (quum haud procul inde stativa consul habuisset) that Menenius was consul during the disaster. — Super bellum. “Over and above the war.” — Institit. “Threatened.” — Ad Spei. Supply aedem. This temple was about a mile from the city. — Portam Collinam. This was the most northerly of all the gates, and lay near the point where the Via Salaria branched off from the Via Nomentana. It took its name from the adjacent Collis Quirinalis. — Parvo momento. “By but a slight preponderance.” More literally, “Turn of the scale.” — Meliorem. The Greek διπόνον.

15-22. Velut ab arce Janiculi. “From the Janiculum, as if it were their fortress.” For a Janiculon velut arce. — Secuti dedita opera, etc. “Having pursued some cattle intentionally driven out in every direction for a decoy, they plunged headlong into an ambuscade.” — Atrox. “Bitter.” — Major. For eo major. A common ellipsis. — Adorti sunt. Used here in its primitive sense. Compare Donatus, Ad Ter. Andr., 3, 1, 21: “Adortus dicitur, qui ex insidiis repente invadit.”

25-31. Ferox. “Elated.” — Magis tamen, quod, etc. “More, however, because want of provisions drove him into measures however rash, provided they were more expeditious.” — Adverso Janiculo, etc. “He rashly marched his army up the Janiculum.” It would appear from this that the Janiculum at this time was detached from the city. As regards the phrase erigit aciem, compare bk. i., chap. xxvii., line 28. — Occidione occisi. “Were slain with utter slaughter,” i. e., were cut to pieces. An expression of frequent occurrence in Livy. — Oppressum. “Was put a sudden stop to.” Opprimere is often employed, in describing military operations, to denote some sudden and unexpected act.

CHAPTER LII.

1-18. Laxior annona. “A less straitened market.” — Abditum fuerat. “Had been hoarded up.” — Suо veneno. “With their (old) poison.” — Universos. “All collectively.” — Invidia erat, etc. “The loss of the post on the Cremera afforded a ground of odium (against him).” Niebuhr remarks that, in whatever way the Fabii may have perished, they were not doubt sacrificed. They could easily have been saved by Menenius. — Ea oppressit. “This (odium) crushed him.” Supply invidia. The editions generally have eum oppresserunt. Many MSS., however, have eam oppressit, from which Gronovius deduced by conjecture the reading given in our text, which undoubtedly gives the best sense.—Cum. "Although."

15–18. In multa temperarent, etc. “The tribunes acted with moderation in (merely imposing) a fine. Though they had prosecuted him for a capital offence, they only decreed against him when condemned two thousand asses as a fine.” In our currency this would be about §230 according to Hultsch’s valuation. Other authorities take the as libras at 16½ cents.—Ea in caput vertit. “This proved fatal to him.” Caput is here taken in its physical sense. In the phrase capitis acquirere the reference is to physical and civil existence combined.—Inde morto absuentum esse. If, as is generally supposed, Menenius allowed the Fabii to be destroyed, in accordance with the wishes of the ruling party in the Senate; if these sacrificed him, in his turn, for the sake of washing out their own guilt; if with vulgar thoughtlessness they estimated the sentence by the insignificance of the penalty, we can easily conceive that Menenius, who may have known that many of his judges, as far as wishes and commands went, were more culpable than himself, should have sunk under his shame. (Niebuhr, vol. ii., p. 208.)

22–31. Gratiaque. “And his influence.”—Et quae praetum, etc. “Against him also a battle, etc., was made a ground of accusation,” i. e., against him also, just as Menenius had been charged with the loss on the post on the Cremera.—Oratone feroci refutando. “By confuting in a haughty speech.”—Cujus patris munere. Compare bk. ii., chap. xxxii., line 25.—Discussit. “He shook off.”—Participando laudes. “By sharing his praises with him,” i. e., by attributing to him a share in his praiseworthy deeds.—Mutaverant animum. Observe the transitive force here given to the verb mutare with animum. The form mutaverant anini would have been more in Livy’s style, and some editors actually adopt it.

CHAPTER LIII.

2–7. Quibus. Referring to Veientibus as implied in Veientis.—Sabini. They had been quiet or only threatening since A.U.C. 260.—Promenibus. As a defence for the city.—Ut dum dispersi, etc. “That, while scattered (throughout the camp), they sally forth in different ways, by separate companies,” etc. With alia supply via. They did not march out of their camp in one body, but in companies, by different ways, and hence, amid the confusion which thus arose, the Romans made themselves masters of one of the gates of the camp.

13–25. Toto impetu intentos, etc. “Whose attention was turned with all their energy towards the camp.”—Utroque versis signis. That is, they formed a double front. — Finitimae gentes. One idea, and therefore the two attributives that precede.—Per se. "By their own exertions." Literally, "Through themselves." The inroad was so sudden that they had no time to wait for succor from Rome.—Calamitatis contumeliceque. "Of injury and indignity."

CHAPTER LIV.

2–10. Non tamen bellatum. "No war, however, was waged."—Stipendio. "Money." Stipendium is properly the pay of soldiers, and money raised for that purpose. It cannot, however, mean pay here, since the Roman soldiers did not receive pay until seventy years after this time, in 403. In later times it was usual to exact a contribution of corn and money for the troops from conquered enemies, before granting them peace or a cessation of hostilities. Here, however, as Zumpt remarks, the term stipendium is used for "money" generally, the expression being taken from the custom of later times.—Pacis externe festim continuatur. "Is the immediate successor of peace abroad," i.e., ensues immediately after.—Tribunici. "Applied by the tribunes." Equivalent to a tribunis subditis.—Arripuit. "Ar- raigned them." The verb arripere originally referred to a plaintiff's being allowed to lay hands upon a refractory defendant, and thus drag or take him to court.

14–19. Ad populum. That is, before the Comitia Tributa.—Juniores patrum. These would be naturally ambitious of attaining to public office and honors.—Suadent, moment. The first of these words is directed to the will, the second to the understanding.—Pretextam curulemque sellam. Compare bk. i., chap. viii., line 11.—Claris insignibus, etc. "That decked with these fine insignia, as with fillets, they were destined for sacrifice." A forcible allusion to the custom of decking victims with fillets before sacrifice. With velatos compare the Greek ἵσταται ἔντειον.

21–28. Jam tunc ita, etc. "That they should now by this time bring into their mind the conviction," i.e., now at length after past experience.—Apparitori. Compare bk. i., chap. viii., line 10.—Si se commoverit. "If he but stir." Referring to the particular patrician whom they were addressing.—Aliud. "Any other power."—Seducta. "Withdrawn."

29–35. Ubi. Referring to these secret meetings of the patricians.—Constaret, etc. The idea, when more fully expressed, would be as follows: "Constaret eripiendos esse periculon, nec interesse jure an injuria eriperentur." Hence the expression jure an injuria differs here but little from sine jure sine injuria.—Atrissimissimum. "Most desperate."—Auctor. "A leader."—Eucta expectatione. "On the tip of expectation."—Descenderet. Into the forum, where the tribes were assembled.—Suspicer fieret. "Was becoming more and more suspicious."—Qui obversati, etc. "They who had been hovering about at the tribune's porch." Compare, as regards the meaning of vestibulo here, the note on chap. xlviii., line 42.

39-43. Quam nihil eritili. "What a nullity of protection."—Sacrae leges. Consult note on chap. xxxiii., line 11.—Noviss. "Of the crime." Novis and novis are often indiscriminately used to denote a criminal or punishable act.—Malo. "Bodily harm."

CHAPTER LV.

1-8. Sub hac pessimi, etc. "Close upon this victory, of a most ruinous precedent." Some prefer the accusative here instead of the ablative, but sub hac victoriam would denote simultaneity, "at the same time with this victory," which is not the meaning of Livy.—Silentio. The non-interposition of the tribunitian veto.—Antiqua. "The old state of things," i.e., which preceded the establishment of the tribunitian office.—Aliud agenda ac cogitandum. "That some other course must be pursued and thought of." Observe that this is no hysteron proteron, as some suppose, but the words ac cogitandum are merely meant, as Weissenborn remarks, to be further explanatory of agenda.

10-22. Quattuor et viginti lectores. Consult note on chap. i., line 26.—Apparere consilium. "Attend on the consula." Apparere is the word used to signify the attendance of an inferior officer (apparitor) on a magistrate. Compare bk. i., chap. viii., line 10.—[Contemptus. "More contemptible." The perfect passive participle is often, like the Greek verbal in -ρος, equivalent to an adjective in -bils. Thus invictus, "invincible;" conspectus, "visible," etc.]—Si sint qui contemnunt. "If there be only those who can contemn them."—Quia, quod ordines duxisset, etc. "Because, inasmuch as he had led a century," etc., i.e., had been a centurion. Literally, "Had led ranks." Consult note on chap. xxiii., line 15.—Militem. "A common soldier."—Spoliari. "To be stripped."—Inquit. Separated from its subject, in order to bring forward the latter more prominently.—Circumcencre. "Tore off his garments."—Eo infestius. "The more roughly." violent."—Fidem. "The protection."—Nihil est quod exspectetis tribunos. "There is no reason that you should wait for the tribunes."

CHAPTER LVI.

2–10. Plebi. Old genitive, for plebei, from plebes, the form of the fifth declension. It may also, however, be the regular dative of plebs, and Livy may mean to designate Volero, specially, as a tribune for the Commons, that is, one on whom they could certainly rely for aid in any future collision with the aristocracy and their adherents.—Eum permisssurum tribunatum. "That he would give loose rein to his tribuneship." A metaphor taken from the management of steeds. Thus, permittere equum is to give loose rein to a horse, and thus quicken his speed.—Post publicam causam, etc. "Private resentment being postponed to the public interest." Posthabere is more commonly employed with the dative.—Ad populum. That is, to the people assembled in the Comitia Tributa.—Ut plebei magistratus, etc. Before this time, according to Cicero and Dion. Hal., the tribunes of the Commons had been elected at the Comitia Curiata. Niebuhr, however, maintains that they were elected by the centuries, and that the curies merely sanctioned the election. —Minime atroci. "By no means formidable."

13–22. Actioni. "Measure." Any act or measure of a magistrate before the Senate or people was called actio. Compare note on chap. xxxi., line 29.—Una vis. "The only effectual means."—Ex collegio. "Of the college (of tribunes)."—In annum. "For a whole year," i. e., for a whole year after.—Ad ultimum dimissionis. "To the very extremity of a contest," i. e., to the last stage of a desperate struggle.—Jam inde a, etc. "All along from the time of," etc.—Titus Quinctius Capitolinus Barbatus.

24–34. Inventor. "The originator."—Auctor. "Supporter."—Is, cum Volero, etc. This sentence is rendered somewhat obscure by the two clauses each with cum, namely, cum is . . . contenderet, and cum Volero . . . loqueretur.—Ipse in accusationem, etc. "Having broken out, for his part, into an accusation of Appius." More freely, "Having broken out at once." Gronovius thinks that we ought to read incusationem here, and that the preposition in should be omitted.—Rudis in militari nomine, etc. "His language, untutored as (was natural) in the case of a mere soldier, was not adequate to his freedom of spirit."—Suppeterone means properly, "to be at hand in sufficient quantity," "to be a supply to one."—Non satis. Supply tam. An early is usual with the test writers.—Adeste. I've said this in what was called a contio. We must always distinguish the meetings in which measures were put to the vote from those in which a proposition was merely advocated and debated. Such a preliminary assembly was called a contio, and hence, in the present instance, it was at a contio, on the day before the one appointed for voting, that Lactarius called on the plebeians to attend on the morrow. (Nebuhr, vol. ii., p. 216, note.)

37, 38. Occupant templum. "Take previous possession of the consecrated stand." The tribunal from which the speakers addressed the assembled people is here meant. Templum in general, however, refers to the whole place of assembling, since the people could not assemble anywhere for the transaction of public business except on consecrated ground, that is, in a templum, or duly inaugurated place.

—Ad impediam legem. Adopting Nebuhr's view that the patricians had no right to vote at the Comitia Tributa, or to take any part in the assemblies of the plebeians, until the time of the decemviral legislation, we may conclude that on the present occasion they only attended for the purpose of defeating the passage of the law by their tumultuous proceedings.

38–40. Submoveri. This was correct enough. Before the votes were taken, the ground was to be cleared of all who did not belong to the commonalty, in order that each tribe might collect within the space set out for it by ropes. The patricians, therefore, were only required to walk over to the other side of the rostra. (Nebuhr, vol. ii., p. 213.)—Stabant. "Stood firm."—Viatorii. "To the officer." The viatores were officers who attended upon and executed the commands of certain Roman magistrates, to whom they bore the same relation as the lictors did to other magistrates. Their name was derived from the circumstance of their being chiefly employed on messages, either to call upon senators to attend a meeting of the Senate, or to summon the people to the comitia, etc.

42–46. Non enim populi. By populus is here meant the whole people taken collectively, and including the patricians. Nebuhr, less correctly, makes it refer merely to the patricians. Consult Weissenborn, ad loc.—Nec illum ipsum, etc. "Nor can that very magistrate himself (of the whole Roman people collectively), according to the usage of their forefathers, remove any one by virtue of his authority." The argument of Appius is this. No magistrate of the whole people, even the consul, for instance, can remove any one, even by any exercise of his imperium, from the public comitia, because the formula, "If you please," etc., handed down by ancient usage, implies that such removal of a citizen cannot be commanded. Much less, then, can a tribune, who is only a magistrate for a part of the people, and who besides has no imperium, any right to do this. — Contemptum. "With a contumacious air."—Perturbare. "To disconcert."

47-60. Ad consulem. "For the purpose of arresting him."—Privatum. Because without any imperium, although just mentioned as a magistratus plebis.—Coorta. They rose simultaneously, as indicated by con.—Concitate. "Exasperated."—Negocio dato. "Having given it in charge."—Sevientem. "Infuriated."—Tempus. "Delay."—In potestate. "Under the control," i. e., subject to the authority.

CHAPTER LVII.

2-5. Patribus. The consulares mentioned in the previous chapter are particularly meant.—Dimisso tandem concilio. It is more than probable that, before the comitia broke up, Lætorius carried through his plebiscitum, as he had promised to do. But as it still needed the ratification of the Senate, and of the curiae or centuries, this circumstance was taken advantage of to delay its final passage. Meanwhile, as we learn from Dion. Hal. (ix., 48), the tribunes being resolved to have their law fully established, seized upon the Capitol by a sudden movement, and there defied all the attacks of the patricians.—Sententias variassent. "Had produced a diversity of opinions."—Ab impetu, etc. "Their minds were called from violence to cool deliberation." Zumpt thinks that avocabantur here would have been more in accordance with common usage. He does not perceive, however, that avocabantur is purposely employed by Livy, since the principal idea is contained in consultandum.

10-13. Tantam. "So great merely," i. e., so great and no greater. Hence the force of the adverb tantum, "only."—In medio. "Between the two." That is, there are two parties or factiones, no state.—Distractam laceratamque rem publicam. Commentators generally regard this as the accusative for the nominative by enallage. It is better, however, to view it as a peculiar instance of what is termed accusativus Graecus, and to translate as follows: "That, as to the distracted and lacerated republic, the object sought for was rather in whose hands it is to be, than that it would be safe." (Consult Zumpt, § 459; Madvig, § 237, c, Obs. 3.)

17, 18. Accipi. "Are being received."—Consensu. "By the unanimity."—Lex silentio perfetur. The plebiscitum had already been passed. The reference now is to the ratification by the Senate, which made it a lex. By this Publlilian law the plebs in the *Comitia Tri-bids were erected to delimitate on all matters affecting the common well when brought forward by the tribunes. However, such a res-motion of the people might be repeated by the Senate unanswered, until the law of Bruti in A.U.C. 336, which obliged the Senate to take such a resolution into express consideration.

CHAPTER LVIII.

2-15. Addito. All the MSS. and earlier editions have added, which Drakesworth also retains, placing a comma after addito. The true reading, however, is addito, as given by all the later editors.— Tre. Consult note on chap. xxxii., line 6,—Pis. Consult note on be. i.e., chap. iv., line 7. —Duellum. Earlier form of Duellum.—Ad se servum habebat. The fear of such a movement on the part of the plebeians was probably one of the causes which induced the patricians to yield the passage of the Publilian law.—Appius Claudius in Volcano missus. In accordance probably with the terms of the Latin league; since, otherwise, the tribunes would hardly have allowed Appius to take the command of an army.—Seriatia. “Severity.” —Liberior, quod. etc. “The more unpimped, because he was free from the fetters of the tribunisian authority.” The power of the tribunes extended at no time farther than one mile beyond the gates of the city; at a greater distance than this they came under the imperium of the magistrates, like every other citizen.—Se victum ab ea. Some of the MSS., and all the early editions, have quod se victam, etc., but this can only be defended by supposing an anacoluthon to take place, or by an awkward ellipsis of sidebat or diebat.—Se unico consule electo, etc. “That, though he had been chosen as the only fit consul,” etc.
The reading objecto for electo, as given by many, does not, as Zumt remarks, accord so well with the signification of unico.

19-28. Nec ulla vi domari poterat. “Nor could it (however) be subdued by any coercion on his part.” The allusion is to the Roman army and its refractory spirit.—Certamen. “A spirit of opposition.”
—Segniter, otiose. “Lazily, slowly.” The former of these adverbs refers to laziness in commencing, the latter to slowness in carrying on any work. They took their own time to begin, and their own time to finish after having made a beginning.—Metus. The fear of military punishment.—Agmen agi. “The march to be urged on.”— Motam industrium. “The energy begun to be exhibited.”—Prompta.
“Having been openly tried.” —Cavillans. “With an air of mockery.” As the participle denotes the time with reference to the leading verb of a proposition, it here assumes a kind of adverbial force.
(Madvig, § 431.)
CHAPTER LIX.

2-14. Certamen animorum. "Animosity of feeling."—Fabium consulém habuisset. Compare chap. xliii.—Nec ante restitit quam... vidit. In negative propositions Livy uses the indicative after ante quam and prius quam, but in affirmative propositions the subjunctive.

—Tum expressa vis, etc. "Then was forced out of them strength (sufficient) for contending, in order that," etc., i.e., the obligation to fight was wrung from them.—Satis. "Clearly enough."—Alii. "In other respects." We have given aliis with Weissenborn. Haupt's conjecture, aliter, is also a good one. The MSS. have aliis, which cannot be correct, since by aliis and miles Romanus the same persons must be meant.

16-24. Insuper. "Still farther."—Ne utique experiri, etc. "By no means to wish to make trial of his authority," i.e., to put his power to the proof.—Vis omnis. "The entire strength."—Vulgo. "As a general thing."—Ingentis mali. "Of a great disaster."

26-30. Quando quidem nihil, etc. "Since they would gain nothing except a delay of punishment." This refers to what was passing in the mind of Appius at the time. He knew that he could punish them at some other time. Observe here the less usual meaning of noxa.—Remissa. "Having been given up."—Cum maxime, etc. "At the very time in particular when," etc.—Novissimos. "The hindmost."

33, 34. Ulius. For ulius aliqui rei. Compare chap. xlviii., line 8. —Per stragem corporum, etc. "Over heaps of men and arms lying strewn over the ground." The majority of the men, of course, would be, not the wounded or slain, but those who in their hurry to escape had flung away their arms, and were thrown down by coming into contact with one another.

36-43. Cum revocando, etc. "When he had in vain followed his men in endeavoring to rally them." Literally, "to call them back." Another instance of the gerund with a meaning closely allied to that of a present participle. Compare chap. xxxii., line 16.—Haud falsa. "Not without truth."—Signo amisso. In a collective sense.—Duplicariosque. "And the soldiers of double allowance." The Duplicarii (called also Duplarii) were soldiers who received on account of their good conduct double allowance, and perhaps, in some cases, double pay likewise.—Virgis censes, etc. Compare chap. v., line 31.—Decimus quisque. This is the famous punishment of decimation which forms so marked a feature in the military discipline of Rome. It does not appear to have been often inflicted in the early times of the
CHAPTER LX.

1-15. Corre ca. "On the contrary." Taken in an adverbial sense. — γα ο ο μετ σ, ἐτη, etc. On this superfluous addition of the person of a case. Zonara, § 744. — Gonadar. "Indulged in.* — Praetor. "More restricted." — Domnian. "A tyrant." — Virtu fœtiva hoc. "Amid the various vicissitudes of war." — *Comitia Trib.. Com. chap. ii., line 1. — Res major, etc. "A matter more important than the victory gained by the plebeians) in the contest exceeded that from any real advantage (accruing from it)." In a previous chapter IV., line 10, Livy calls it "hostis pater rei." He does not, however, here contradict himself, because though the patricians lost all power of creating what tribunes they pleased, and therefore it was really a very important matter, yet as they generally found one or more of the tribunes to lead themselves to them in urging the measures of the rest by their power of intercession, that loss proved virtually of less serious consequence. — Plus enim dignitatis, etc. This is one of the passages which Wachsmuth adduces to prove that the patricians were included in the Servian tribes. Niebuhr's opinion, however, already referred to, is considered more correct, namely, that down to the decemviral legislation the tribes were entirely plebeian.

CHAPTER LXI.

1-9. Turbulentior inde axus, etc. Niebuhr thinks that it was in this year that the Sicilian law was passed, which had for its object to prevent all interruption to the tribunes while they were addressing the plebs. In some cases the penalty was death. — Tib. śemilio. The ordinary text has T. Ėmilio, for which we have given the conjecture of Sigonius. The praenomen Titus does not otherwise occur in the gens Ėmilia. Dionysius everywhere calls him Τιτῆρον Ἀμιλίου. — Possessorum. Compare chap. xli., line 6. — Tremum tertio Consuli. "As if he were a third consul." The two consuls were favorable to the law; but Appius, as if he were a third consul, counteracted them and opposed the tribunes. — Diem dixere. He was charged, according to Dionysius, with having violated the sacred person of a tribune. — Plenus suarum, etc. "Loaded with the angry feelings (of the Commons) towards himself, loaded with those towards his father." Observe that the adjectives represent here the objective genitive.

10-20. Non temere. "Seldom, if ever." Equivalent to non facile. — Propugnatum, etc. "(Reflecting) that the champion of the Sen-
"etc." The allusion is here to what the patricians thought among themselves on the occasion, and hence the accusative with the infinitive.—Sue. The Senate's.—Opposum. "Placed as a barrier against." Oppositus is properly said of a mound or breakwater erected to resist inundations of the sea.—Swum judicium. "His own trial."—Vesten mutaret. Accused persons generally put on dark and sordid vestments in order to excite compassion, and went about grasping the hands of individuals (prensantes), with the view of obtaining their favor.—Aliquid leniret atque summitteret. "To soften down and abate aught."—Habitus oris. "Expression of countenance."

23–32. Semel. "Once only."—Diem producierent. "Adjourned the trial." It would seem, as Zumpt remarks, that the tribunes granted a second delay after this (trahi rem sinerent), which was probably sought by the accused himself, on the ground of his health, for he died before the day ultimately fixed.—Morbo moritur. Observe that morbo is purposely added here, since accounts varied respecting the manner of his death. Livy follows the statement given in the annals of the gens Claudia, but the common story made him to have committed suicide. With this last account the Greek writers agree, as, for instance, Dion. Hal. (ix., 54); Zonaras (vii., 17).—Laudationem. "Funeral eulogy." Compare chap. xlvii., line 43.—Tam equis auribus. "With as favorable a hearing."—Et exequias frequens celebravit. "And attended his funeral rites in crowds." Observe the force of celebravit.

CHAPTER LXII.

4–6. Faeda. "Violent."—Ut religio fuerit. "That they felt a religious scruple."—Villarum. "Country-houses," not villas in the later sense of the term.—Quibus frequenter habitabatur. "In which it was numerous dwelt," i.e., wherein was a large population.—Integro bello. "The war remaining unfinished," i.e., without having brought the war to an end.

CHAPTER LXIII.

2–11. Titus Numicius Priscus. A family name of very infrequent occurrence, and hence probably the cognomen is here added.—Lativa. "Likely to endure."—Ultima vis. "Extreme violence," i.e., seditious outbreaks.—Coacti extemplo, etc. "Being compelled by a decree of the Senate to set out at once to the war." We must here mentally supply educere from what follows.—Nihil alius quam, etc. "Without effecting anything more than filling the Romans with groundless alarm.” Idiomatic Latinity. (Zumpt, § 771.) With aliud supply agentes.

12-22. Antium. Compare chap. xxxiii., line 15.—Rem prolapsam restituit. “Remedied the slip which had been made.”—Canoneum. The harbor of Antium, now Porto d’Azego, lying at the foot of the height on which Antium itself lay.—Tenem. “Keep occupied.”—Utroque per iram consule, etc. “Each of the consuls having entered their territory under exasperated feelings.”

CHAPTER LXIV.

1-19. Extremo anno, etc. In consequence of the campaigns not occupying the entire year.—Sollicita. “Disquieted.”—Interesse consularibus comitiiis. From this passage we may infer the three elements of the comitia centuriata, namely, the patricians, their clients, and the plebeians.—Tranquilla. Supply tempora, to be elicited from initia.—Crustuminos campos. Compare chap. xix., line 4.—Circum Aniennem. “In the country around the Anio.” Compare bk. i., chap. xxvii., line 15.—A porta prope Collina, etc. That is, when now almost at the gate itself.—Populationem adeo, etc. Observe the emphatic nature of the asyndeton.—Multiplici prada. “Booty many fold greater,” i. e., than what the Sabines had carried off.—Et in Volscis, etc. “In the case of the Volsci, also, the public interests were signally sustained,” etc.—Sanguine. This refers to the wounded merely, as cede does to the slain.—Quia paucitas, etc. “Because their paucity of numbers was nearer feeling the loss,” i. e., made their loss to be more sensibly felt.—Concitasset. “Reanimated.”

22-36. Tacitis induitiis. “By a tacit suspension of arms.”—Si sensoriat. “If they (the Romans) shall have discovered (this great accession to the numbers of the foe),” i. e., whenever they shall have discovered it.—Tertia fere vigilia. The night was divided into four watches of three hours’ length each.—In stationem. “For an outpost.”—Canere. “To sound their trumpets.”—Armatorum peditum. These were the outpost or advanced picket of Hernici, whom they mistook for Romans.—Saeiebant. “Were wildly restive.”

CHAPTER LXV.

1-15. Integer. “Refreshed.”—In quos post principia, etc. “To which the unbroken lines behind the front ranks had a safe retreat.” Observe that post principia is here equivalent to post primam aciem.—Ante signa. They wished to advance in front of the legions, instead of forming, as they usually did, the wings of the army.—Conclamant. "They cry out simultaneously," i.e., both horse and foot.—Quo leviores ardua evaderent, etc. "That they might with less incumbrance scale the heights, they advance on a run." Having dispensed with their javelins, they would be more active in their movements.—Sic prope oneratum est, etc. For the mood, consult note on chap. x., line 4. The soldiers, terrified by the stones showered down upon them, were panic-struck, standing still or beginning to retreat, exposed to the danger, and would have been crushed (oneratum) had not the consul urged them to renew the attack.

18–27. Deinde, ut, in obtinentes, etc. "Then, as their strength permitted them (so to do), they venture of their own accord to advance upon those who were holding the place against them." The MS. reading is obtinentes without in, making the participle refer to the Romans, "in striving to gain." As this, however, gives a far inferior meaning, we have introduced the preposition into the text, with many editors, on the conjecture of Sigonius.—Commovent aciem. "They put the whole line simultaneously in motion."—Impetu capto. "Having made an effort." More literally, "Impetuosity having been assumed."—Enituntur. "They struggle forward."—Incidere. "Rushed into."—Nulla oppugnantium nova vi. "Without any new effort on the part of the besiegers." The alarm occasioned by the recent defeat was quite enough to intimidate and induce them to surrender.
NOTES ON BOOKS XXI. AND XXII.

INTRODUCTION.

The Twenty-first and Twenty-second Books contain the account of the triumphant advance of the Carthaginian arms from Saguntum to Cannae. Livy uses, as his chief authorities, Polybios, the friend of Scipio Aemilianus, Fabius, Cincius Alimentus, and the poems of Ennius and Naevius. To expect an impartial judgment of the Semitic invaders of Europe from an historian so inspired would be as idle as to expect an unbiased judgment of the Saracens and Saladin from a writer who derived his information from the chronicles and romances of the Crusaders, or an unprejudiced description of the Moors in France from an author relying on Isidorus Pacensis and the Chanson de Roland. To Hannibal's talent as a general and to his bravery as a soldier, to his personal fascination over the wild tribes he led to victory through cold and hunger and weariness—trials harder to the ruder races of mankind than is the shock of battle—Livy bears sufficient testimony; nor does he omit to tell how generously he sought for the bodies of the slain consuls. But he is too fond of attributing to him falsehood and treachery, of regarding him always as ποινιξ ἀνήρ ἀναγιμὴ εἰδώς—a view perhaps derived from Ennius, in whom it was a reminiscence of Homer. As regards the charge of cruelty and carelessness of human life, Livy is most probably in the right. In all that we call culture and civilization Hannibal and his officers were far superior to the rough and unpolished Romans and Italians; yet all history tells us that such men may often be careless of human suffering, especially when the sufferers seem to them barbarians. In another respect Livy is merciful to the Carthaginians: he does not describe the army of Hannibal as modern writers describe those of the Constable de Bourbon, or of Tilly and Wallenstein; nor does he give the details of his razzia in Etruria with the minuteness with which Macaulay paints the devastation of the Palatinate by the order of Louis XIV. "Livy," writes a modern critic, "seeks to dispose us in favor of the Romans rather than to make us know Hannibal. Change the point of view. We observe that that army (the country of Hannibal, and the patrimony of his family) was a mercenary one. We perceive what an admirable and infamous education he received in that camp, an assemblage of hired brigands, engaged in a war without quarter; a mixture of all religions, of all languages, of all manners, 'sans country, sans home; a wandering Sodom at which the old city of the plain would have shuddered. Like Wallenstein, Hannibal lavishes money on his soldiers, and exacts absolute devotion and immediate obedience. He treats Italy as Tilly treated Magdeburg—throwing into wells the senators of Acerra, burning alive the wives of those who abandon him, putting to the sword the Italians who would not go with him. Brought up in a barrack, he is an adventurer, a soldier of fortune; he flings aside, after Zama, the tribune who talks against peace, and laughs at the senators who complain of the tribute.” “Our tendency,” says Arnold, “is to admire individual greatness far more than national; and, as no single Roman will bear comparison with Hannibal, we are apt to murmur at the event of the contest. Never was the wisdom of God’s providence more manifest than in the issue of the struggle between Rome and Carthage; Hannibal’s conquest would have stopped the progress of mankind.”

An interesting comparison might be drawn between the first and second Semitic invasions of the West. Every place which had once been Phœnician or Carthaginian fell, almost without a struggle, beneath the Mohammedan power. The Mediterranean coast of Africa, the western side of Sicily, Malta, and Spain up to the Ebro, seem rather to have been annexed to the Semitic empire of Damascus than conquered by its arms. The townsmen of St. Augustine called themselves Canani; Strabo found Phœnicians and Phœnician customs at Tartessus. Did this old Phœnician influence prepare the way for the kindred Arabian? Like the Barcine family, the Arab commanders in Spain founded a kingdom with little encouragement from the sovereign power whose servants they were. When Abdulrahman crossed the Ebro and the Pyrenees, he defeated the Christians in two great battles, in the latter of which, the Franks confessed, God alone could count the number of the slain. The policy of Fabius was again called forth by Charles Martel, “If you follow my advice, you will not interrupt their march nor precipitate your attack. They are like a torrent, which it is dangerous to stem in its career;” and, very curiously, Gibbon suggests in the case of Charles, what Varro asserts in the case of Fabius, that this dilatory policy was adopted for the purpose of weakening political enemies.

The Carthaginians, or Phœni, called themselves Canani. Fable represents some settlements as having been made near the present Cape Bon by Canaanites fleeing from before the Israelites; more trustworthy accounts assign the foundation of Hippo and Cambe in that neighborhood to expeditions from Sidon, “the first-born of Canaan.” But it was under the predominance of Tyre that the great development of Phœnician colonization took place. Of these colonies Carthage was the greatest, Tartessus the oldest. Utica had been founded in B.C. 1158, and Gades (now Cadiz) a few years later, and the Phœnicians afterwards planted other colonies in Spain at Calpe (Gibraltar), Carteia (Algesiras), and Malaca (Malaga). They had factories at Lilybaeum, Panormus, and Soluntum in Sicily; in Melita (Malta) and Gaulos (Gozo), and at Caralis (Cagliari) in Sardinia. All these seem to have been planted for purposes of trade; but Carthage (B.C. 872) arose from a revolution in Tyre, where Pygmalion, or Piigelun (the great-grandson of Ethbaal, the father of Jezebel), united with the people against the aristocracy. He deprived his sister Elissa of her share in the government, and put to death her husband, the High-Priest of Melcarth (the Tyrian Hercules) and head of the aristocratic party, the Sichéus of Virgil, the Acerbal (Zicharbaal) of other traditions. Elissa and the aristocracy, unequal to the task of opposing the king and the people, set sail with a large number of adherents, including three hundred senators, and, landing at the old Sidonian colony of Campe, founded a town, to which they gave the name of Carthage, i.e., the new city. Elissa from this voyage derived the name by which she is best known, Dido, "the wanderer."

Cut off from any return to their fatherland by political antagonism, the settlers were compelled to look on Carthage as a new home; they introduced trade and agriculture, and gradually extended their power over the native tribes in the neighborhood, while their numbers gave them a predominant influence over the other Phoenician colonies. This supremacy was confirmed by the siege of Tyre by the Assyrian king Sargon, in B.C. 715, which reduced Tyre from being the head of the Phoenician confederation; and by the settlements of the Greeks in Sicily (from B.C. 736), which drove the older Phoenician colonies into close connection with their powerful African neighbor. To the last, however, some of the Phoenician colonies, Utica, for example, retained a certain degree of independence of Carthage. By the close of the sixth century B.C. the power of Carthage, as the head of the confederate colonies, and as the mother of numerous colonies along the African shore within and without the Straits of Gibraltar, extended from the Greater Syrtis to the Fortunate Islands, and from Corsica to the flanks of Atlas.

Carthage seems to have long kept up a connection with Tyre. According to M. Oppert's readings of the cuneiform inscriptions (agreeing with a tradition in Ammianus Marcellinus), Carthaginian auxiliaries appear with the forces of Ashurbanipal at the capture of Thebes in B.C. 666. In the year 588 B.C., during and after the siege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, a further emigration to Carthage took place. After the surrender of Tyre to Cambyses, B.C. 525, the Phoenicians refused to serve against Carthage. In the great Persian invasion, B.C. 480, Xerxes seems to have been able to direct the Carthaginian fleet against the Sicilian Greeks, as well as the Phoenician fleets against the Greeks of Greece proper.

The constitution of Carthage was aristocratic; the native element, or the pure Phoenicians, located at Carthage, governing the rest of the empire. The chief magistrates were two Suffetes, or Judges, who were elected, probably for life, by the people, under certain restrictions as to families. The Council consisted of several hundred members, from whom were chosen the Gerusia or Senate of One Hundred, and the Pentarchies or Commissions of Five, which managed the various departments of state. Originally the Suffetes commanded the fleets and armies, but these military functions were afterwards assigned to generals elected by the people. The aristocratic character of this constitution was maintained by public opinion, which was in favor of power resting with the rich.

The armies of Carthage consisted of a nucleus of citizens and Liby-Phœnices, and large bodies of mercenaries, raised partly from the Numidians and Mauritanians, partly from the Ligurians of Italy, the Celts of Gaul, and the Iberians of Spain. Her fleet was always numerous; the officers and sailors being Carthaginian, the rowers slaves of the state; and it rendered her for several centuries undisputed mistress of the Western and Central Mediterranean, her only rivals being the Etruscans. Rivals though they were, they joined forces to destroy the Phoccean fleet in about B.C. 550, when the Phocæans, after founding Massilia, and opening a trade with Tartessus, endeavored to get a footing in Corsica. In B.C. 508 was concluded the treaty between Carthage and Rome mentioned by Polybius. Carthage, succeeding to the influence of Tyre over the Phœnician colonies in Sicily, and dreading interference with her trade by the intruding Greeks, soon formed a desire to conquer the whole of that island. Defeated in B.C. 480, she returned in B.C. 409, but, after a century of warfare, had not succeeded in gaining a foot of ground. At the opening of the First Punic War she held rather more than a third of the island, her possessions lying to the west and south, and including Agrigentum. Deprived by that war of Sicily and Sardinia, she was induced by the Barcine faction (as Livy styles the war party headed by Hamilcar Barca) to seek for compensation in Spain, and by the year B.C. 220 had established her power over the southern and south-eastern districts, where Phœnician influence had been for centuries diffused from the great colonies of Tartessus and Gades. In the year B.C. 218 Hannibal formed the siege of Saguntum, and the twenty-first book of Livy begins.

Rome now appears as the mistress of Italy, maintaining her power by a system of colonies and alliances. The socii were either fœderati united by treaties to Rome, or liberi, possessing autonomy subject to the goodwill of Rome. The nomen Latinum designates the Latins of Latium and the Latin colonies, i.e., colonies possessing the Latin franchise whatever might be the nationality of the colonists. The coloniae civium Romanorum consisted of citizens who retained the rights they would have had at Rome. (Liv., bk. xxxix., chap. lv.) Of the towns possessing the civitas there were three classes. The first class retained their own constitutions and magistrates, but the citizens could neither vote nor hold office at Rome. (Liv., bk. viii., chap. xiv., § 11.) The second was completely incorporated with the Roman state. (Liv., bk. viii., chap. xiv., § 3; Weissenborn's note.) The third class retained at home their own administration, but the inhabitants might go to Rome, and exercise there all the rights of Roman citizens.

BOOK XXI.

CHAPTER I.

1–9. In parte operis mei. "In this particular part of my undertaking," i.e., at this particular division of my work.—Summae totius. "Of the entire body of their work," i.e., of their work considered as one connected whole. Summa means "a whole," in opposition to its parts. It is simpler to make totius agree with summae than with operis understood.—Scriptores. Thucydides would seem in particular to be meant.—Quod. "Which war." The relative introducing an explanatory clause, and therefore followed by an indicative, gessere, instead of the more regular subjunctive, gesserint. (Zumpt, § 546.) —His ipsis. The Romans and Carthaginians.—Virium aut roboris. "Of external power or internal strength." According to Fabri, vires conveys the idea of power ready at hand, and adapted to carry out plans, and hence often stands for fleets, armies, etc., while robur denotes internal or innate strength, and carries with it the idea of firm and unflinching endurance.

10–16. Et haud ignotas, etc. "They brought into action moreover no arts of war unknown to one another." Connect inter se with ignotas, not with conservabant.—Expertas. "Those which had been tried." —Propius periculum. The reading of two of the best MSS. The later ones have periculo. Livy uses both constructions, the dative and accusative, with the comparative and superlative of præpe. (Zumpt, § 411.)—Qui vicerunt. "Those who were eventually victorious."—Odii. "Feelings of hatred." The plural, as referring to both parties. (Madvig, § 50, Obs. 3.)—Credent. An attraction of the mood. Properly speaking, it ought to be credebant. (Zumpt, § 551; Madvig, § 357, Obs. 2.)—Imperitatum. The frequentative, as indicating a repetition of the act. Livy alludes to the conduct of the Romans after the First Punic War, in taking advantage of the Carthaginian troubles at home with their rebellious mercenaries, to render the conditions of peace more severe.
16-24. Annorum ferme novem. The genitive of quality, following immediately after the proper name. (Zumpt, § 397; § 426.)—Puerilita blandientem, etc. "While boyishly coaxing his father Hamilcar (and entreating) that he might be taken with him," etc. Observe the constructio prægnans in blandientem.—Africo bello. The war which the Carthaginians had carried on with their own revolted mercenaries, after the close of the first Punic conflict. It was brought to a termination principally by the skill and valor of Hamilcar.—Altaribus. The classical writers exclusively use altaria in the plural, because such an altar consists, as it were, of several areæ, piled upon one another.—Tactis sacris. His hand having been laid on the offering, or, as Nepos (Hagn., 2) says, on the altar.—Nam et, etc. After nam supply angebatur, from angebant which precedes. —Concessam. Sicily was given up to the Romans by treaty, at the close of the First Punic War. The Carthaginians were also required to pay the sum of 3200 talents in ten years.—Inter motum Africæ. During the war which the Carthaginians carried on in Africa against their revolted mercenaries, their mercenary troops in Sardinia also raised the standard of rebellion. The Romans espoused the cause of the latter, and managed in this way to compel the Carthaginians to surrender Sardinia into their hands. They even had the effrontery to insist upon the payment of a further sum of 1200 talents as a compensation for injuries which they pretended had been done to their shipping.—Stipendo etiam, etc. "A war-contribution also having been imposed in addition," i.e., 1200 talents in addition to the previous 3200 talents. Observe the force of insuper. The old and erroneous reading was superimposito.

CHAPTER II.

2-15. Sub recentem Romanam pacem. "Immediately after the peace with the Romans." (Zumpt, § 319.) Observe that recentem here merely expresses more definitely the sense implied in the preposition sub.—Per quinque annos...novem. These varieties of construction often occur. Compare bk. xxxv., chap. xxxiv.: "Media urbe ac per forum;" bk. ii., chap. xlii., line 38: "extis...per aves." Five years denote the whole interval between the close of the First Punic War and Hamilcar's crossing into Spain.—Qui Hannibalis, etc. The relative here has really the force of "even as." The MSS. give qui, which has been restored to the text. Other editions have quæ, referring to anna.—Mors Hamilcaris. He fell in a battle against the Vettones, a people who dwelt between the Tagus and Anas.—Pueritia Hannibalis. He was then about eighteen years of age.—Medius. "Intervening."—Floreat ætatis conciliatus. "Endeared by his youthful beauty."—Altam. The conjecture of Lipsius, in place of altam, the common reading.—Propsecto. Opposed to uti ferunt, and indicating something well known.—Factionis Barcinae opibus. "By the influence of the Barcine party." This party derived its name from Hamilcar, who was surnamed Barca. They were opposed in the Senate by another party, less hostile to the Romans, the heads of which are here called principes, "the nobles."

18–26. Consilio. "By stratagem."—Hospitius regulorum. "By (forming) connections of hospitality with the leading chieftains." The reguli here meant were the chiefs or heads of tribes, to whom, on account of their inferior power, the appellation of reges did not properly belong.—Palam. According to Polybius (ii., 36), in the night-time; according to Diodorus (xxv., 17), secretly; according to Appian (vi., 8), while hunting.—Interfecti ab eo domini. "For his master's having been slain by him." Objective genitive.—Habitu oris. "Expression of countenance."—Præbuerit. Consult note on chap. i., line 15.

27–29. Fœdus renovaverat. Thirteen years after the conclusion of the First Punic War, being the sixth treaty between the Carthaginians and Romans. The fifth was the memorable treaty at the close of the First Punic War.—Saguntinisque, etc. Saguntum was a town of the Edetani, in Hispania Tarraconensis, near the sea, on an eminence on the banks of the River Pallantias, between Suero and Tarraco, and nearly one hundred miles to the south-west of the mouth of the Iberus. When the Iberus therefore was made the boundary between the Carthaginian and Roman dominions, this city would naturally have been included in the former. According to Livy, however, it was expressly stipulated in the treaty that the independence of Saguntum should be preserved intact. Polybius, however, says nothing of this. The more accurate view probably is that Saguntum had been for some time in alliance with Rome, and therefore, though it was on the Carthaginian side of the Iberus, was by Roman custom entitled to support.

CHAPTERS III., IV.

1–8. In Hasdrubalis locum, etc. The words in Hasdrubalis locum do not agree in construction with what follows. Livy, no doubt, had intended to write in Hasdrubalis locum haud dubia res fuit quin Hannibal succederet, or something similar, but, abandoning this construction, he passes over into another which gives more of detail. In other words, we have here an anacolouthon, in imitation of what so often occurs in oral discourse.—Prærogatiam militarem. "The previous choice of the soldiery." Prærogativa properly means the tribe or centurion to which it fell by lot to vote first in the Comitia. And as their vote was regarded as an omen, and generally influenced the votes of those that came after, prærogativa came to signify a previous choice.—Vixdum puberem. "Scarcely as yet arrived at early manhood." Hannibal was then nearly twenty-two years old. Livy's language is rather singular, Hannibal being strictly in natura juventute.—Barcinis. Consult note on chap. ii., line 15.

10-21. Missus Hannibal, etc. A portion of the third chapter, and a small part of the fourth, immediately connected with it, have been purposely omitted.—Juvenem. "In all the vigor of youth."—Eundem vigorem in vultu, etc. "They beheld the same energy in his look and fire in his eye, (the same) expression of countenance and features."—Ut pater in se, etc. "That his father should be, in his case, the least powerful means for gaining the favor of the soldiery," i. e., that the memory of his great father, Hamilcar, would have less weight in conciliating their esteem than his own ability and skill.—Habillius. "More fitted."—Haud facile discerneres. "You could not easily distinguish." All the MSS. give discerneres. Gronovius conjectured decerneres, which is far inferior, though followed by many editors.—Imperator. Hadrabal.—Alium quemquam praecicere. "To place any one else in command." Supply militibus.—Malle. Historical infinitive, for imperfect indicative. So also confidere and audere.—Fortiter ac strenue. "With spirit and energy."—Agendum esset. The subjunctive here indicates an action often repeated. (Madvig, § 389.)—Alio duce. "Under any other leader." Literally, "Another being leader." Ablative absolute.—Capessenda. "Encountering."—Consilii. "Of prudence."

23-28. Patientia. "Endurance."—Desiderio naturali, etc. "Was limited by the wants of nature, not by sensual desire." There is strong MS. authority in favor of voluntate, but still voluptate is decidedly the more appropriate term here.—Vigilariam somnique, etc. "The times of waking and sleeping were distinguished neither by the day nor by the night," i. e., he could remain awake during the night, and sleep by day, whenever occasion required.—Id. quod gerendis rebus, etc. "That time (alone) which remained after the transaction of business." Literally, "Over and above things requiring to be done." The pronoun id here takes temporis understood, from what immediately precedes.—Superesse. The subjunctive again, denoting a repeated action.—Arcessita. "Was invited." He slept only when he was weary, and then he could find repose on a hard bed and in the midst of noise.—Custodias stationesque. "The guards and outposts." The custodie were the guards stationed at particular points along the walls; the stationes were the advanced posts, thrown forward in front of the gates.

30-37. Inter æquales. For inter æquarium vestitum.—Conspicebantur. "Were conspicuous," i. e., for beauty and excellence.—Idem. "At the same time."—Conserto praedio. "When the battle was once joined."—Ingentia vitia æquabant, etc. We must remember that this is the language of a Roman and an enemy, and must be prepared according to calumny and misrepresentation. The character of Hannibal is judged with less passion, and on the whole with great impartiality, by Polybius, who expressly contradicts the charge of inhumanity. In point of severity, indeed, and the harsh treatment of foes, Hannibal's conduct forms a favorable exception to that of other Carthaginian commanders; and, as for his faithlessness, not a single instance is known. Punica fides, after all, was no worse than Romana fides.—*Nihil sancti. "No conscientiousness."—Jusjurandum. "Regard for an oath."—Indole. "(Blended) character."—Quae agenda videndaque, etc. "Which might be proper to be done and seen to," by one destined to become a great commander.

CHAPTER V.

1–12. Ex quo die dux est declaratus. Hannibal entered on his command in the year 221 B.C., and devoted this year and the two following to the extension of the Carthaginian dominion in Spain, and the preparation of means for his invasion of Italy. As Hannibal was nine years old at the time of his father's departure for Spain, and as Hamilcar and Hasdrubal had governed in succession for seventeen years, he must have been twenty-six years of age when he assumed the command.—Saguntinis inferre bellum statuit. His object was to provoke the Romans to war by besieging Saguntum.—Quibus oppugnandis, etc. "And since the Roman arms would undoubtedly be set in motion by (his) attacking these." The ablative of the gerundive here takes the place of a conditional clause ("if he were to attack these").—Movebantur. The indicative, for moverentur, the reference being to an act which would certainly take place, and which is supposed therefore to be, as it were, already begun and proceeding. (Madvig, § 337, Obs. 1.)—Olcadum. The Olcades were a people of Hispania Bética, dwelling north of Carthago Nova, on the upper course of the Anas, and in the eastern part of the territory occupied at a later date by the Oretani.—*In parte. "Within the territory."—Rerum serie. "By the course of events," i.e., by natural consequence, and in regular order.—*Jungendoque. "And by contiguous junction," i.e., and by joining to one another contiguous lands. Supply finitimas gentes.

18–19. Cartalam. Many editions have Carteiam. Polybius names the place Althaea (Althaia). Its site is unknown. We must not confound this city, however, with Carteia, near Calpe, or Gibraltar.—Quo metu. For cujus rei metu.—Stipendio imposito. The ablative absolute is here employed to express a circumstance which does not precede, but follows the main action. (Madvig, § 481, Obs. 2.)— Carthaginem novam. Carthago Nova, now Carthagena, was situated on the Mediterranean, about equidistant from Valencia on the east and Malaga on the west, and was the capital of the Carthaginian possessions in Spain. It was famed for its fine harbor.—Stipendio proterito. "Their back pay." The reference is literally to pay, the time for discharging which has "gone by," and which remains still due. Observe here the military meaning of stipendium.—Vaccæos. The Vaccæi were a people in the interior of Hispamia Tarraconensis, to the west of the Celtiberi. Their chief town was Palantia, now Palencia, to the north of the Durius, or Douro.

21–28. Ab Hermandica profugi. "Those who escaped from Hermandica." Observe that profugi, though an adjective, has here a kind of substantive force.—Carpetanos. The Carpetani were a powerful people of Hispania Tarraconensis, on the rivers Anas and Tagus, in the modern Castile and Estremadura. Their capital was Tolletum, now Toledo.—Super ripam. The preposition super, with the accusative, answers to both questions, whither? and, where? the latter in the present instance, and hence is here the same as supra. (Zumpt, § 320.)—Cum prima quies, etc. "As soon as there was the first sleep and quietness on the side of the enemy." For the force of ab here compare Zumpt, § 304, b.—Valloque ita producto. "And his rampart having been extended only so far (towards the bank)." Observe the force of ita. (Zumpt, § 726.) Hannibal did not bring down the rampart of his new encampment to the water's edge, which he would have done if his object merely had been to render his position more secure in this quarter, but he wished to leave room for the enemy to cross the river, in order to fall upon them with more advantage.

32–37. Appendicibus. "The additional forces." Appendices here imply minor forces added, by way of completion, to greater ones.—Si aequo dimicaretur campo. "If the battle had been fought on level ground," i. e., in the open plain. The imperfect subjunctive is employed here (where we use the pluperfect) by a lively and rhetorical mode of expression, the past time being represented as present. The regular form would have been dimicatum esset. (Zumpt, § 525.)—Id morari victoriæm, etc. "Thinking that what of the river lay between (alone) delayed their victory," i. e., that victory was only delayed by the intervention of the river.—Ullius. "From any one." Taken substantively.

38–48. Et ex parte altera. Observe the employment of et for etiam. (Zumpt, § 335.)—Imnissa. By Hannibal.—Quippe ubi. "Since there."—Instabilis. "Not having a sure footing."—Equo temere acto. "His horse being merely impelled at random," i. e., without singling out any one of the foe, but merely driving right onward.—Liber.
That is, having full command over.—Stabil. "Moving steadily."—Verticis anni delati. "Carried away by the river full of whirlpools."—In hostes. That is, to the bank where the Carthaginian infantry were drawn up.—Postremi. To be construed with colligerentur, which last is to be taken in a reflexive sense.—Agmine quadrato. "With his army in battle array," i.e., in the form of a parallelogram. The agmen quadratum was not a square battalion, but a battalion in line, ready to meet the enemy on any side. Here, the moment they reach the opposite bank, they present a front in line to the enemy.

CHAPTER VI.

2–16. Certamina serebuntur. "The seeds of dissension were sown," i.e., between the Saguntines and their neighbors by Hannibal.—Quibus cum adesset, etc. "And when the same person, who was the originator of the quarrel, sided with these," i.e., with the Turdetani. By litis sator is meant Hannibal.—Certamen juris. "A contest about right."—P. Corneli Scipio, etc. Compare chap. xv. Livy here follows the annalists, who have led him into an error. The news of the beginning of the siege of Saguntum must have reached Rome in the year before, when Livius and Æmilius were consuls. That siege lasted, according to the best authorities, eight months, and Hannibal then placed his army in winter-quarters. Early in the spring he set out from New Carthage on his march to Italy, and took five months to reach that country, into which he came when Scipio and Sempronius were consuls, that is, in B.C. 218. The more correct view is taken by Livy in chapter xv., where he follows Polybius.—Rettulissent. From the reduplicated retetulissent, and hence the doubling of the t, when contracted. (Madvig, § 204, Obs. 1.)—Ad inspiciendas. "To look into."—Quibus si videretur, etc. For the more common Qui, si iis videretur... denuntiarent. (Zumpt, § 804.)—Spe. "Expectation."—Hac legatione decreta. The interrupted protasis is here resumed.

20–27. Decernentes. "Being in favor of decreeing." Decernere is often used in speaking of individuals, when it is meant to have the force of decernere velle.—Intendebant. "Were for directing." This is the earlier reading, and there can be no doubt of its superiority over the pluperfect intenderant, as given by some.—Temere. "In a hurried manner."—In panem fæderis rupti. "For punishment on account of the violated treaty."

CHAPTER VII.

1–9. Parent consultantque. The former word refers to the embassy; the latter to the deliberations respecting the manner and means of Ultra. “Beyond,” i.e., below.—Oriundi a Zacyntho, etc. There is no truth in this legend. It turns merely on an accidental resemblance between the name of Saguntum and that of the Greek island. Zacynthus lay off the western coast of Peloponnesus, opposite the promontory of Chelonatas in Elis, and to the south of the island of Cephalenia. The modern name is Zante.—Mistique. For admixtique.—Ab Ardea. Attributive to Rutulorum. Consult note on bk. i., chap. ii., line 2.—In tantas opes. “To so great power,” i.e., as they then possessed, at the time of this war with Hannibal.—Seu maritimis, etc. “Either by their gains from the sea or from the land.” Under the former of these would be included the profits arising from an extensive commerce and rich fisheries; the latter refer to the successful cultivation of the soil.—Multitudinis. “Of their numbers.”—Disciplina sanctitate. “By the integrity of their principles.” Disciplina here refers to the principles that regulate both public and private life.—Fidem socialen. “Their faith with their allies.”

11-17. Tripertito. “In three different quarters.”—Vergens. “Sloping.”—Quam cetera circa. “Than the other places round about.”—Vineas agere institut. “He resolved to move forward the vineas.” The vineas, as before remarked (bk. ii., chap. xvii., line 2, note), were a species of sheds or mantlets, under cover of which the assailants advanced to beat down with the battering-ram (aries) or to undermine the walls.—Admoveri. “Be brought up to.”—Ut . . . ita. “Although . . . still.” (Zumpt. § 726.)—Procul muro. Livy and Tacitus frequently employ procul in this way, with the omission of ab, and procul must then be regarded as having the force of a preposition. (Zumpt, § 321.)—Ad effectum operis. “To the performance of their work,” i.e., to the accomplishment of their object.—Succedebat. Used impersonally.

17-28. Immunebat. “Overlooked it.”—Ut. “As was natural.”—Ceterae. Livy employs in the singular all the forms of this word, except the nominative masculine, which last indeed is found in no writer.—Munientibus. “For those engaged in the works.” More literally, “who were working at the wall.” Observe that munire is here applied to the Carthaginians as employed in strengthening their approaches to the city.—Non pro manibus modo, etc. “Not only did the weapons (of the townsmen) flash forth from the walls and the tower.” We have given pro here the force assigned to it by Weissensborn and Heerwagen. Fabri, however, makes it mean “in defence of.”—Tumultuaris. “Disorderly.”—Subit. “He approaches.”—Adversum femur. “On the front part of the thigh,” i.e., the part turned towards the enemy. Accusative of nearer definition. (Zumpt, § 458.)—Tragula. “By a barbed javelin.” This was a very formidable missile, requiring to be cut out of a wound. It was used chiefly by the Gauls and Spaniards.—Opera ac vineae. "The works and (in particular) the vineae." Strictly speaking the vineae are comprehended in the opera, which last is the general term.

CHAPTER VIII.

2–16. Dum vulnus ducis curaretur. "While the general’s wound was being cured." The subjunctive is here employed with dum, because a design or purpose is expressed, that something may be done in the mean time. (Madvig, § 360, Obs. 2.)—Apparatu. "The preparation."—Bellum. "Hostilities."—Accipientibus. "Admitting of."—Multifarium distineri. "To be kept employed in many different quarters."—Una continentibus ruinis, etc. "One part (of the wall) had, by reason of continuous breaches, laid the city bare," i.e., in one part the breach in the wall was so extensive that the city was laid bare.—Crediderant. Observe the force of the pluperfect. They had believed the city to be taken until the vigorous opposition of the Saguntines convinced them of their error.—Qua. "Upon which fall." Supply ruina.

19–27. Per occasionem partis alterius. "By a favorable opportunity on the one side or the other." Alter has here the force of alterutus.—Justae acies. "Armies drawn up in regular order." In opposition to tunmultaria pugna. Literally, "Armies which could justly be so called."—Si paulum adnitetur. "If he make a little additional effort."—Confertim. It is more customary with Livy to employ the adjective confertus with pugnare and other verbs.—Varro. "Without effect."

28–36. Falarica. Less correctly Phalarica. This was a peculiar kind of spear, of the largest size, and thrown by the aid of twisted ropes. It had an immense iron head, three feet long according to Livy. The shaft was a strong one of fir, weighted near the top by a circular mass of lead. It was sometimes, as in the present instance, made to carry flaming pitch and tow. A representation of it, from an ancient monument, is given by Alstorp (de Hastis Veterum, p. 178).—Hastili abiegno, etc. "With a shaft of fir, and otherwise round."—

Id, sicut in pilo quadratum. "This part, four-cornered as in the (Roman) pilum."—Longum. The common text has in longum.—Habeat. The subject of this is falarica, but that of posset is ferrum. In English, however, both subjects are merely indicated by "it."—Medium accensum. "After having been set on fire in the middle." Medium in the sense of in medio.—Conceptum. "Produced."—Nudum. "Unprotected."—Insequentes ictus. "Subsequent blows," i.e., of the falarica.
CHAPTER IX.

2–5. Quia resisterent. The subjunctive, as referring to what the Saguntines thought. So immediately after, quia non vicisset.—Pro victo esset. "Were in their own opinion as good as conquered." Observe again the force of the subjunctive.—In ruinas muri. "Back upon the breach." The Carthaginians previously had the breach in their rear, having advanced beyond it into the town.—Inde. The Saguntines next drive them from the breach itself; and finally chase them back in confusion to their camp.

8–15. Ab Roma. In place of the more regular ablative Roma, without the preposition. (Zumpt, § 398, Obs. 1.)—Qui dicerent. "To inform them." Observe that dicere, not negare, is here employed, since the latter would imply the denial of some assertion.—Inter tot, etc. The more common form of expression would be inter tot tamque, etc., the conjunction being added to make the second clause more prominent.—Effrenatarum. A better reading than effaratarum.—Arma. "Armed bands."—Opera esse. Equivaleut to vacare. [Opera esse. This phrase is usually found with a negative. The absence of any epithet, or any substantive like aliud, nihil, etc., the use of esse, not fucere, and the parallelism with the nominative and accusative, make it probable that opera is, like cura in curae esse, a dative case. "It is not a matter of attention" = non commodum est. Roby, Lat. Gr., ii., § 1283.]—Apparebat. "It was obvious."—Ad principes factionis Barcinae. According to Polybius (iii., 15, 8), Hannibal sent despatches home before the siege commenced, and not to the leaders of the Barcine party, but to the Senate itself.—Ne quid pars altera, etc. "In order that the opposite party might not be able to do anything in favor of the Romans." The common construction is gratificari alicui, but here pro Romanis is used instead of the dative.

CHAPTER X.

2–12. Irrita. "Fruitless."—Adversus senatum. "In opposition to the rest of the Senate." The common text has adverso senatu.—Autoritatem suam. "His weight of character."—Egit. "Pleased."—Monuisse, prædictisse se. "(He said) that he had warned, that he had told them beforehand." Observe the asyndeton, marking earnest and animated discourse.—Donec. "As long as."—Quietura Romana fiedera. "Would any treaties with Rome continue undisturbed." Literally, "remain quiet."

12–19. Juvenem flagrantem, etc. Livy often changes, as here, from the oratio obliqua to the oratio recta, for the purpose of a more urgent or energetic appeal.—Ex bellis. The preposition is here employed to denote continuous and uninterrupted succession.—Succinctus. "Surrounded." Literally, "Begirt."—Per quos. "Through whose aid."—Ulti. Agreeing with Romani as implied in Romanae legiones, this last being the same as Romanorum legiones.

21–24. Bonus imperator vester. Ironical. "That worthy commander of yours."—Unde ne hostium, etc. "After having been repulsed (from that quarter) from which," etc. Ruperti makes unde equivalent here to a quo, scil. Hannibale. Better ab illo aditus, i. e., the presence of the commander of the besieging army.—Resa repetuntur. "Satisfaction is demanded." Literally, "Things are demanded back." The thing demanded was that the Seguntines should not be molested, and that repARATION should be made for injuries already done. Publica fraus absit. "Let any fraudulent evasion of the treaty, on the part of the state, be far away." Hannibal, on the contrary, should suffer, since he has been guilty of privata fraus.

25–30. Segnius. Supply quo.—Ægates Insulas. Three islands off the western coast of Sicily, between Drepanum and Lilybæum. The Carthaginians were defeated near these in a naval battle, which led to the peace that ended the First Punic War (242 B.C.), and to the evacuation of the town of Eryx, near Drepanum, as well as of the other cities which had hitherto held out.—Quæ. "Whosoever things in fact," i. e., all that. What grammarians term an Asyndeton summativum.—Quattuor et viginti annos. The period of the First Punic War.—Mars alter. Ironical.—Isti. Intended to express contempt, and meaning the Barcine faction.

30–34. Tarento. When Tarentum was besieged by the Romans, after the departure of Pyrrhus, a Carthaginian fleet appeared off the harbor, and its commander offered assistance to the Tarentines. This compelled the Romans to grant the townsmen more advantageous conditions of surrender than they would otherwise have done. Hanno makes this affair to have been the occasion of further hostilities between the two nations, and the original ground of the First Punic War.—Vicerunt ergo dii hominesque. The gods had been outraged by this violation of good faith on the part of the Carthaginians.—Et id de quo. "And, as regarded that, about which."—Unde jus stabat. "On whose side justice stood."

34–51. Carthagini. "Against Carthage in reality."—Habendum est. "Will have to be continued."—Scio meam lewem esse, etc. "I know that in what relates to him my authority is of little weight, on account of my enmities with his father," i. e., feelings of emnity towards his father. Observe the force of the plural in inimicitias.—Eo . . . quod. "On this account . . . because."—Nec dedendum, etc. "Nor do I think that he ought merely to be given up as an atonement for the violated treaty," etc. With dedendum supply illum esse censeo. The common text has id piaculum, which is inferior.—Unde nec ad nos, etc. "Whence neither his name nor any tidings of him may be able to reach us," Becker and others give accedere, but all the MSS. have accedere.—Statum. "The settled condition."—Decerno. "Give my opinion."

CHAPTER XI.

3–8. Hannibalis erat. "Were on the side of Hannibal."—Infestius. "With a more embittered spirit."—Flaccum Valerium. The name of the familia is often put thus before that of the gens. This occurs, however, more frequently in later writers than in Livy. (Zumpt, § 797.)—Saguntinos. Brachyology, for Saguntinorum foedus.—Vetus-tissimae societati. The term societati is employed here merely for rhetorical embellishment. Treaties, not alliances, were concluded between Rome and Carthage in very early times. Polybius mentions one in the first year of the Roman republic (509 B.C.).

12–22. His. The plural, on account of the collective idea contained in miles.—Stimulando. Gronovius conjectures stimulanda, but Livy nowhere says stimulare iram. Fabri makes in hostes stimulando epexegetical of ira.—Pro contione. "Before an assembly of the soldiers." Observe the force of pro here, and compare Zumpt, § 311. The speaker is not only "before," but actually "in" the assembly, and forming part of it.—A praefis. "After battles." (Zumpt, § 305.)—Cessaverant. Observe the force of the frequentative.—Aliquanto atrocior. "Considerably more violent." Aiquanto strengthens, as paulo weakens.

25–29. Turris mobilis. A tower made of wood, covered with iron, raw hides, or stuffed mattresses, to break the force of the blows directed against it, and placed upon wheels, by means of which it could be driven close up to the enemy’s walls. It was divided into several stories or platforms, tabulata, the lower one of which contained the battering-ram, and those immediately above it catapultae, engines throwing lances, darts, and other missiles in a horizontal direction, while the uppermost floor, which was open, had ballista mounted upon it, for throwing stones archwise.—Agebatur. "Was urged forward."—Occasionem ratus. "Having deemed this a fit opportunity."—Dolabris. "Pickaxes." The dolabrum, strictly speaking, was a hatchet and pickaxe combined. It had a long handle and double head, one end of which was furnished with a sharp cutting blade, and the other with a crooked pick.
30 82. Quod cimenta, etc. "Because the rough quarry stones had not been firmly set by lime, but (merely) filled in their interstices with clay," i.e., had not been united into one hard mass with lime. Such walls as these were commonly called muri cimenticii. The interstices were commonly filled in with chippings and clay combined. The literal translation of interdita will be, "Were daubed between."—Antique genere. They are now commonly called Cyclopean walls.—Itaque latius, etc. "It fell in ruins therefore more widely than it was struck." Some editors give quam qua cederetur, i.e., quam ea pars muri qua ex casa fuerat."—Perque potestia ruinis, "And through the spaces lying open by reason of the falling of the wall."

34-46. Capiant. "They seize upon."—Castellam. "A stronghold."—Vehut arcem imminentem. "Like a citadel overhanging it."—Ab nondum capta, etc. "In front of the part of the city not yet taken." Compare Zumpt, § 304, b.—Interiora tuendo. "By defending in succession the inner parts."—Cum tam procul, etc. "Since the Romans, their only hope, were so far away, while all places around were in the power of the enemy." Observe that circa is here used adverbially.—Adfectos animos. "Their discouraged feelings."—Oretanos. The Oretani occupied the country lying between the sources of the Batis and Anaes, and to the south of the Carpetani. The latter have been already mentioned in chap. v.—Acerbitate. "By the severity."—Conquisitoribus. "The recruiting officers. These were persons sent out to exact the levy.—Omisunt mota arma. "Laid aside the arms that had been taken up."

CHAPTER XII.

11-17. Temptata est. "Was tried (to be realized)."—Aliquid moturum. "That he will effect something." Observe the omission of se, which is often the case with the future infinitive active.—Postquam movebant. Observe here the employment of the imperfect, where we should have expected the pluperfect. A long-continued effort is indicated. (Madvig, § 338, b, Obs. 2.)—Tristes. "Gloomy," i.e., harsh, severe.—Ferebantur. "Were offered." For offerebantur.—Oratore. "From an advocate."—Sub conditionibus iis. "Under the odium of these conditions." The simple ablative, though much more common, will not do here, as sub is meant to be emphatic. He means that the Saguntines would instantly put to death the man who should be the bearer of such terms, that is, who should incur the odium of presenting them, though in the name of another.

17–28. Postulabatur autem. "Now it was demanded." The objectionable terms are recited.—Cun singulis vestimentis. "With a single suit of clothing." Not "with a single garment," as some erroneously render it. Hannibal's object in imposing these severe terms, was not merely to supply himself with the sinews of war, in the wealth of the Saguntines, but also to leave no enemy in his rear sufficiently powerful to co-operate to his injury with the Romans. (Polyb., iii., 17.)—Vinci animos, etc. "That the minds of men are (at length) subdued, when all things (else) are subdued," i.e., when all other means of opposing the foe have failed.—Interpretem. "As the proposer."—Hospes. The relations of hospitality sometimes existed between an individual and a whole community.—Prætorem Saguntinum. "The chief magistrate of Saguntum."—Senatus. "An audience of the Senate."

CHAPTER XIII.

4–16. Quo nec orator, etc. "On which I would have come neither as an ambassador of Hannibal nor as a deserter," i.e., since I would have come, etc. The subjunctive with the relative as assigning a reason or cause. With quo supply itinere.—Ille. Alco.—Vestra, si periculum, etc. "Through yours, if there is danger among you to those who tell the truth."—Pro vetusto hospitio. "In consideration of the ancient tie of hospitality."—Nec ulius alterius. Alluding to Hannibal.—Velea fides sit. "Let even this be the proof." (Zumpt, § 372.)—Vestris viribus. "Through your own resources."—Postquam . . . est. An unusual construction, since est is not here the historical present, which often stands after postquam eo ventum est, ut . . . sit, for which Livy gives a more concise one.—Æquam. "Fair."

16–27. Ita. "On these conditions." (Zumpt, § 281.)—Audiatis. "Be inclined to listen to." A latent wish that it may be so is implied in the mood.—In damno. "In the light of a loss."—Pro. "Really as." Observe the change of preposition.—Ex magna parte. Livy more usually has magna ex parte.—Cun binis vestimentis. "With two suits of clothing each." Observe the employment of the distributive numeral with vestimenta in the plural, as having in that number a different meaning from the singular. (Zumpt, § 119.) The reading binis, however, has given rise to some difficulty, since we have singulis vestimentis in the previous chapter. Commentators generally regard the term binis as an error on the part of the copyist, and Lipsius, therefore, proposes to read prīcis, but the term is too unusual a one. It is possible that Hannibal, finding Alco so averse to the original terms, permitted Alorucus to propose less rigid conditions. Döring, however, thinks that Hannibal meant to allow the Saguntines to take a suit of clothes with them, besides that which they were wearing at the time.—Fortuna vestra. "Your present condition."

CHAPTER XIV.

2–16. Senatus. The ablative would have been more usual.—Secessione. "A withdrawn."—Senet ipsi. Stress laid on the subject, and hence ipsi, not ipso. (Zumpt, § 696.)—Pavor ac trepidatio. "The dismay and agitation." Trepidatio properly denotes a state of confused hurry or alarm, a running to and fro.—Per ruinam. "Through the breach." The singular here is unusual in this sense.—Cum signum imperatoris dedisset, etc. They gave a signal that, so far as could be seen from their lofty position in the citadel, the lower part of the city was left unguarded. This had been occasioned by the thronging of the people to the forum to hear Alorucus.—Momento cepit. Usually, when momentum is employed in this sense, we find added to it temporis or horae, to make the meaning more definite.—Signo dato. "A brief command having been given," i. e., an order passed from rank to rank.—Quod imperium crūdele, etc. A zeugma. Supply fuit after crūdele.

CHAPTER XV.

3–8. De industria. "Purposely."—Vix ulsum discrimen aetatis, etc. Although Hannibal had given orders to kill only adults, yet many impuberes were also slain.—Militum prāeda. The Romans usually sold the captives for the state.—Aliquantum pecuniae. "A considerable sum of money."—Vestem. "Articles of raiment."

9–22. Quam caeptum est. Observe the omission of post before quam. (Zumpt, § 477.)—Quidam scripsere. Among these is the Greek historian Polybius.—Hiberna. He allowed the whole of the winter for his troops to rest.—Fieri non potuit, etc. Livy's reasoning is correct. Saguntum must have been taken towards the beginning of B.C. 218, when Scipio and Sempronius were consuls, the year in which the battle of Trebia was fought. Compare notes on chap. vi.—Nam excesisse, etc. "For the battle at the Trebia cannot have reached into the year," etc., i. e., cannot have belonged to or fallen in it. This would make the battle in question to have been fought, not in B.C. 218, but in B.C. 217.—Ariminum. Ariminum was one of the most important cities of Umbria, on the coast of the Adriatic, about nine miles south of the Rubicon.—Creatus. That is, Sempronius presided at the comitia where he was elected.

CHAPTER XVI.

1–9. Qui redierant, etc. The ambassadors would seem from this to have spent considerable time in Carthage, since the siege of Saguntum lasted some time after their arrival, and Hannibal even undertook his expedition against the Carpetani and Orestani in the interval. —Hostilia esse. "Wore a hostile appearance."—Sociorum peremptorum indigna. "For allies undeservedly destroyed."—De summa rerum. "For the safety of the entire commonwealth," i.e., the very existence of the state.—Consulent. "Deliberated." The verb is here employed absolutely.

9–18. Nam. Supply dicebant. A usual omission of Livy in an animated narrative.—Acriorem. "A more spirited."—Tam desiderem. "So sunk in sloth." The natural exaggeration of excited feelings. —Sardos, Corsosque, etc. The allusion is to the wars that had taken place between the first and second Punic conflicts.—Histros. Histria or Istria was a peninsula at the northern extremity of the Adriatic. The inhabitants were a warlike Illyrian race, subjugated by the Romans B.C. 177.—Et cum Gallis, etc. "And that with the Gauls it had been a tumult more truly than a regular warfare." The Romans were accustomed to call their wars with the Gauls on the Po by the name of tumultus, from the suddenness of the attacks made by these warlike tribes, and the constant state of watchfulness in which they, the Romans, had to be.—Militia durissima. "During the hardest service."—Recentem. "Fresh."—Excitam. "Already aroused."—Conciturum. "Was about to summon in a body to his standard."

CHAPTER XVII.

1–9. Nominatae jam ante, etc. That is, the countries in which the consuls were to act had already been marked out by the Senate, but no casting of lots for them had as yet taken place.—Socium. Livy varies, in this chapter, between socium and sociorum as forms of the genitive.—Ipsi. The consuls.—Quattuor et viginti, etc. Each of the six legions therefore contained 4000 infantry and 300 horse.—Mille octingenti equites. The cavalry were but few in number comparatively, being all from among the wealthiest men in the state.—Celoces viginti deducti. "Twenty swift-sailing vessels were launched." The celoces were vessels of a particular class, in which each rower handled a single oar on his own side, in contradistinction to those in which each man worked a pair, and those in which more than one man labored at the same oar. The term is properly an adjective, meaning "swift," and having navis understood. The larger description had many oarsmen, and were sometimes fitted up with a mast and sail, but had no deck, and in consequence of their fleetness were much used by pirates.

10-14. Vellent jubenter. "That they should will, should order."—Elsewhere Livy has rellent jubenterue, "whether they willed, ordered." In the present case, however, we must supply ut. This was the ordinary form of proposals made to the Roman people, with two nearly equivalent words. Usually, in the case of direct applications, we have velitis, jubeeatis, Quirites, where we must supply rogo ut.—Supplcatio. Synonymous here with obscratio. Both were made at the beginning of a war to propitiate the gods.—Eveniret, quod bellum. That is, bellum eveniret, quod bellum.—Ea quaterna milita, etc. Observe the employment of ea, agreeing with milia coming after, instead of ex, referring back to legiones. (Zumpt, § 372.)

16. Naves longae. "Vessels of war." So called from their length, in contradistinction to the naves omerarie, or "merchant vessels," which were broader of beam. Strictly speaking, the expression navis longa is a generic one, and includes vessels not only of one, but of several banks of oars, because, in reality, they were all laid down upon the long principle; with a sharp keel, and lengthened line from stem to stern, instead of the short round bottoms adopted for the commercial marine.

18-29. Ita . . . si. "Provided that," i.e., in case it should be found that.—Et ipse. "Also." (Zumpt, § 698.)—Maxime. "In particular."—Ea parte belli. "In that sort of war." More literally, "On that side of the war," i.e., on the sea. Observe that pars in connection with belli, virium, etc., is frequently employed by Livy, and derives its general meaning from the context.—Cum suo justo equitatu. "With their regular (complement of) cavalry," i.e., 300 each, as before stated.—Nondum versa. "Not yet changed (in its allegiance)," i.e., which had not yet gone over to the Carthaginians, as it afterwards did when Hannibal entered Italy. This is the conjectural emendation of Gronovius, adopted by Becker. The early editions generally read, without MSS. authority, eodem anno versa. Many modern editors, however, prefer eodem versa, "turned in the same direction," i.e., as Scipio, towards the war with Hannibal. But this wants clearness. Nor is it any better if, with Heusinger and Herwagen, we refer versa, taken as a neuter, to the forces just enumerated. —In Punicum bellum. "For the Punic war."
CHAPTER XVIII.

1–8. Omnia justa, fierent. "All just formalities might be observed," i.e., all the formalities established by law or custom.—Q. Fabius. Fabius Cunctator. — M. Livium, L. Æmiliium. The consuls of the previous year.—Bœbium. He had been sent before (chap. vi.) as an ambassador to Hannibal and to Carthage.—Publico consilio. "By public resolve."—Id quod facturi videbantur. "What they appeared likely to do."—Ac defenderent. "And should state, in defence (of the conduct of Hannibal)."—Ut indicerent, etc. Observe the change of construction, where we should expect ad indicendum bellum.

11–20. Unum, quod mandatum erat. "The one thing which had been given them in charge."—Proœps vestra, etc. "Even your former embassy, O Romans, was a precipitate one." They had then demanded the surrender of Hannibal; and now they made the question of peace or war to turn upon the simple fact of Hannibal's being publicly authorized to act as he had done, without allowing any justification or exculpatory statement on the part of Carthage.—Ceterum hæc legatio. "Your present embassy however." Observe the force of ceterum. Your present embassy is like the former, with this point of difference, however, etc.—Adhuc. "As yet," i.e., as far as you have yet spoken.—Exprimitur. "Is sought to be extorted."—Ut a confessis. "As from those who have confessed," i.e., as though we had confessed. An imitation of the Greek construction of ὅς with a participle. (Matth., Gk. Gr., § 568.)—Censeam. "Am inclined to think." Observe the ironical employment of the subjunctive.

21–26. Quæstio atque animadvertior. "Inquiry into the conduct of, and also inflicting of punishment upon."—Quid nostro, etc. The common text omits quid.—Disceptatio. "Point of discussion."—Per fidus. "As far as the treaty is concerned." (Madvig, § 255, Obs. 1; Zumpt, § 301, extr.)—Fidus est. "There is a treaty (let me tell you)." Observe the omission of the apodosis here after the protasis with quoniam. (Zumpt, § 772.) This is often done in an animated speech or narrative.—Cum caveretur, etc. "Though provision was made for the allies of both parties." Observe the construction of caveo. Thus caveo te, "I avoid thee;" but caveo tibi, "I provide for thy safety," etc. (Zumpt, § 414.)

28–33. At enim. "But then (it may be alleged in reply)." Compare the Greek ἀλλά γάρ, and consult Zumpt, § 349. Used very often in anticipating an objection on the part of another, and hence employed by Livy only in speeches, never in a running narrative.—Excipiuntur. "Are specially excepted," i.e., there is a special clause in their favor, by which their safety is guaranteed against any attacks from Carthage.—Quod C. Lutatius, etc. “As regards the treaty which C. Lutatius, the consul, first made with you,” etc. The regular construction would have been, negastis co fiderere teneri quod C. Lutatius . . . fecit. The best MSS. both here and lower down have iecit, out of which the common text has made icit, but feci is a more probable conjecture.—Itaque aliud de integro, etc. The argument of the Carthaginian speaker is not a sound one. When the stipulations of the treaty of Catulus were submitted to the Roman people, they did not meet with their approbation, and ten commissioners were despatched to examine into the state of affairs, who, when they arrived, insisted upon certain changes to the disadvantage of the Carthaginians. On the other hand, the Carthaginians had never in any way protested against the treaty concluded by Hasdrubal.

37-41. Et quod diu parturit, etc. Evidently borrowed from Cicero (Phil. ii., 46, 119).—Sinu ex toga facto. This would be done by catching up one of the sides of the toga, and throwing the end over the opposite shoulder, so that it would hang down behind.—Sub hanc vocem. “Immediately upon this speech.” (Zumpt, § 319.)—Iterum. Referring neither to sinu effuso nor to dixisset, etc., separately, but to both combined, that is, to the repetition of the symbolical use of the toga.

CHAPTER XIX.

2-9. Ex dignitate populi Romani, etc. Livy has here culled from Polybius all that favors the Roman cause; while he disingenuously suppresses all that tells against his countrymen. The Greek historian allows that the Carthaginians were in the wrong if we are to look no farther back than the siege of Saguntum, but fully justified if we trace the origin of the war to the dishonorable conduct of the Romans as respected Sardinia and the 1200 talents.—Sagunto excisa. Observe that Sagunto here is the ablative of Saguntus, feminine, not of Saguntum, neuter.—Nam si verborum disceptationis, etc. “For if the matter fell within the limits of a verbal discussion,” i. e., were a fit subject for one.—Quid. “In what respect.”—Diserte. “Expressly.”—Ita . . . si. “Only if.” (Zumpt; § 726.)—Censisset. “Should have sanctioned it.” Censere is commonly said of the Senate, and jubere of the people; here, however, censere is employed, since populus is here equivalent to senatus populusque.—Ita. “To such a degree.”

13-18. Et si priore fiderere staretur. “Even if the former treaty were adhered to,” i. e., that of Lutatius, ratified by the Senate. Literally, “Even if it were stood by the former treaty.” (Zumpt, § 452.)—Satis cautum erat Saguntinis, etc. “Sufficient provision had been made for the Saguntines, by the allies of both states having been excepted,” i. e., from the number of those against whom war might be carried on, or who might be incorporated with the empire of either nation.—Additum erat. “Had there been added to it.”—Itis, i. e., sociis.—Aut ob nulla, etc. “Either that no one should be received into friendship on account of any services (rendered), or that those who had been received under protection should not be defended.” (Zumpt, § 709.)—Tantum ne. “Provided only that . . . not,” etc. Equivalent in reality, however, to tantum caveretur ne.

22–33. Et in societatem perecerent. The editions have ut in societatem, etc., which is so inelegant and clumsy after ut adirent that we have not hesitated to give the conjectural emendation et.—Bargusios. The Bargusii were situated in the neighborhood of the Pyrenees, to the north-east of the Ilorgetes.—Quia taedebat imperii Punic. As the Bargusii, from what appears in chap. xxiii., were not yet subdued by the Carthaginians, these words cannot, of course, apply to them, but belong to what follows, and furnish the ground for erexerunt, as regards the tribes beyond the Iberus.—Volcianos. Only mentioned here. They were neighbors of the Bargusii.—Celebre. “Having become widespread.”—Quae verecundia est. “What sense of shame have you?” i. e., are you not ashamed?—Cum, qui id fecerunt, etc. “When you, their allies, have more cruelly betrayed the Saguntines, who did this,” etc., i. e., who preferred your friendship to that of the Carthaginians.—Censeo. Equivalent here to suadeo. Supply ut with quæratis.—Insigne. “Striking.”

CHAPTER XX.

1–19. Itis. That is, Gallis, as implied in Galliam, which precedes. —Bellum Italicum inferent. “Intending to bring war upon Italy.” Hannibal’s plan is here supposed to be known to the Roman ambassadors.—Tantus cum fremitu risus. “So much laughter with (an accompanying) yelling,” i. e., so much laughter and yelling.—Juventus. So, in chap. xxxi., the Juniores form a separate party, opposed to the Senate and elders.—Censere, ne in Italian, etc. “To propose (naily) that the Gauls turn the war upon themselves, in order not to let it pass through to Italy.” Literally, “in order not to send it through,” etc. The term censere here is too mild after postulatio, and is rightly deemed spurious by Gronovius.—Romanaorum. “On the part of the Romans.”—Ob quae. For ut ob ea.—Contra ea. “That, on the contrary.”—Gentis suæ homines. Especially the Senones. They were driven from their territory between the Roman colonies of Ariminum and Sena, on the Adriatic, in consequence of an agrarian law, passed on motion of the tribune Flaminius, in 225 B.C.—Et "cetera indigna pati. "And were suffering the other indignities of that kind."

20-30. Hospitale pacatumve. "Friendly or pacific."—Massiliam. The modern Marseilles. This city had long been connected with Rome by a league.—Ibi omnia ab sociis, etc. "There all things carefully and faithfully inquired into by their allies became known to them."—Proeoccupatos. "Prepossessed."—Satis mitem. "Sufficiently tractable."—Subinde. "From time to time."—Haud ita. The Ciceroonian formula is always non ita.—Erectam. "On tiptoe."—Satis constante fama. "The rumor being sufficiently persistent."—Tranmisisse. "Had crossed." Taken absolutely. For transmisisse. (Zumpt, § 326.)

CHAPTER XXI.

1-19. Sagunto capto. The narrative recommences from chap. xv. —Queque. The pronoun is repeated because the subjects are different.—Causam. "The occasion." Referring to his conduct in the case of Saguntum.—Nihil ultra differendum. "That there must be no further putting off."—Et ipsos. "Your own selves also," i. e., as well as I. Opposed to ego after credo. Omnibus Hispaniae populis. All those, namely, on the other side of the Iberus.—Ita enim. And this latter course will prove the more pleasing to you, "for thus."—Hae gentes. "The nations here."—Commentum. "Leaf of absence." A furlough.—Futurum. "About to be one."

20-31. Et jam desiderantibus, etc. "Both already longing to behold their friends, and seeing before them a longer absence for the future." Desiderium is properly "a longing to see the absent," and hence is figuratively employed, as here, to denote "absence" itself.—Jam exhaustos. "Already undergone."—Ad edictum. "According to command." (Zumpt, § 296, extr.)—Gades. Now Cadiz. An early colony of Tyre, afterwards possessed by Carthage. It was famed for the worship of Melcarth, the Tyrian Hercules, or the Sun. Many editions have Gadis, old form for Gades.—Si cetera. "In case his remaining projects."—Partiens curas, etc. "Dividing his cares at the same time between," etc.—Gallias. The plural indicates the various subdivisions of this country, such as Gallia Cisalpina, Transalpina, etc.—Ab Sicilia. "On the side of Sicily." An attack might naturally be expected from this quarter.

32-42. Pro eo. "For this purpose."—Jaculatorum. The Libyans and Mauri were particularly noted for their skill with the javelin.—Futurus uterque. "Likely to prove each."—Pigneribus. The reading of some of the best MSS. Compare Madvig, § 41, nota m.— CHAPTER XXII.

1–12. Atque id eo minus. "And the less on this account." The MSS. give haud before minus, which we have omitted with Bekker, and which had been previously condemned by Gronovius. They also read ideo for id eo. If the MS. reading be retained, the meaning will be, "And that it was therefore not less to be cared for"—the positive curandum being mentally supplied from the preceding non negligendum. But this makes the proximity of the second haud in the succeeding clause extremely inelegant.—Circumitam. Spain lying to the west of the Iberus is meant. Compare chap. xix., line 21.—Quingentis. This and quinguginta farther on are wanting in the MSS., and are supplied from the narrative of Polybius (iii., 33).—Libyphoenices. Those subjects of Carthage who had sprung from marriages between the immigrant Phœnicians and native Africans. They ranked next to the Carthaginians proper, the ruling Phcenician citizens of the capital.—Numidae. Between the territory of Carthage and Mauretania. Their country formed the largest portion of the modern Algeria.—Mauri. Between Numidia and the coast of the Atlantic. Their country corresponds to the modern Fez and Morocco.—Ad mille octingenti. Observe that ad is here an adverb, with the force of circiter, and governs no case. (Zumpt, § 296.)—Ilergetum. The Ilergetes were situated between the Iberus and the Pyrenees, in the modern Catalonia. Their capital was Ilerda, now Lerida.

15–18. Qua parte belli. Observe that parte here indicates the "mode" or "manner," and compare note on chap. xvii., line 23.—Vicerant. Scil. Romani.—Credi poterat. "It might be supposed."—Aptae instructaeque remigio. "Were fitted out, and manned with rowers." Observe that remigio is put here for remigibus, the abstract for the concrete.—Triginta et duex. "Only thirty-two." Supply solum. Only a part of the fleet left to Hasdrubal was fitted out and manned.

21–33. Eitovissam urbem. What city is meant cannot be determined; probably, however, Etobesa, which Ptolemy places in the territory of the Edetani, to the east of the Celtiberi.—Maritimamque oram. The true reading here is rendered very doubtful from the corrupt state of the MSS. We have given what appears the simplest and most natural. Many editors, however, prefer maritima ora, which they place after Iberum. — Ibi fama est, etc. The same story is given, with some alterations, by Cicero (De Divin., i., 24), on the authority of the Greek historian Silenus.—In quiete. “In his sleep.”—Neque. For neve.—Cura ingenii humani. “Through the (innate) curiosity of the human mind.”—Respicere. “To look back upon.”—Temperare. “To restrain.” (Zumpt, § 414.)—Ferri. “To be borne along,” i. e., to move with a violent and rapid motion.—Moles. “Monster.”—Porro ire. “To go on.”

CHAPTER XXIII.

4-7. Nonaginta milia peditum, etc. Of these troops, according to Polybius (iii., 35, 51, 56, 60), there were left with Hanno 10,000 foot and 1000 horse. The same number (tria milia supra septem milia) were sent or returned to their homes. The army before it passed the Pyrenees had suffered a further reduction of 20,000 foot and 1000 horse. In the passage of the Alps Hannibal lost 18,000 foot and 2000 horse; so that, on descending into the plains of the Po, he had remaining 20,000 foot (viz., 12,000 Africans and 8000 Spaniards) and 6000 horse.—Ausetanos. Their capital was Ausa, now Vique.—Lacetaniam. This name is uncertain. Polybius makes no mention of the country. The MSS. all give Aquitaniam. Sigonius conjectured Lacetaniam. The chief town of the Lacetani was Solsona, still so called, in the middle of Catalonia.

11-22. Ad præsidium obtinendæ regionis. “For the defence of the region to be occupied by him.”—Iter avtreverunt. “Turned away their march,” i. e., separated themselves from Hannibal’s army.—Anceps. “Hazardous,” i. e., questionable policy.—Et ipse. “He himself also,” i. e., he himself as well as others not mentioned here. Some editors, without any necessity, alter ipse here to ipsos.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1-8. Sollicitaret. “Might unsettle.”—Iliberri. Many names of towns in Spain are neuter, and end thus. Compare Illiturgi and Inthibili (bk. xxiii., chap. xlix.). Some have two terminations, namely, a feminine in is (accusative in in). So we have a little farther on Iliberrim. The town is now Elne, on the river Tech, which in ancient times had the same name as the place. Constantine restored Iliberri, and gave it the name of Helena, whence the modern appellation.—Ad arma consternati. "Roused tumultuously to arms." — Ruscinonem. Ruscino is now La Tour, in the neighborhood of Perpignan. Hence comes the modern name Roussillon.—Aliquot populi. In apposition with Galli, and added for more precise definition.

11—21. Colloqui semet, etc. The accusative with the infinitive depends on the notion of speaking implied in oratores misit. (Zumpt, § 620.)—Lactum. "Gladly."—Nec cunctanter. "And without any hesitation."—Hospitem...hostem. Observe the play upon the words. Livy is very fond of this.—Gravanter. Formed after the analogy of cunctanter, festinanter, etc. This is the MS. reading. The editions have commonly gravate.—Cum bona pace. "Without any opposition." Compare Hand, Tursell., vol. ii., p. 157.—Transmiserunt. In the sense of "to allow to pass."

CHAPTER XXV.

1—7. In Italian. Defined more precisely immediately after by Romani.—Nil utra. "Nothing farther."—Cum...defecerunt. As a particle of time cum takes here the indicative. (Zumpt, § 579.)—Boii. A powerful Gallic race between the Po and the Apennines.—Insurbibus. In Gallia Transpadana. They were, next to the Boii, the most powerful and warlike of the Gallic tribes in Cisalpine Gaul.—Placentiam Cremonamque. Two powerful Roman colonies, which had been planted in the previous year in the country on the Po as a check upon the Gauls, and in the territory which had been given up by the latter to the Romans. Placentia (now Piacenza) was on this side of the Po, at the place where the Trebia fell into it; and Cremona, on the other side of the river, some miles farther down. These became eventually two important military stations for the protection of the Roman settlements in Cisalpine Gaul.

9—19. Agrum. The colonial territory.—Agrestis multitudo. The Latin colonists.—Triumviri. The colonial commissioners were generally three in number. The law fixed the quantity of land that was to be distributed, and how much was to be assigned to each person.—Mutinam. Now Modena, on the high-road from Mediolanum to Southern Italy. It was the first place which the Romans took away from the Boii, but was not made a colony until B.C. 183.—Confugivint. Compare note on bk. i., chap. iii., line 22.—Legati. The doubt in this case arose from the conflicting statements of the Annalists. Polybius mentions no embassy, but that the triumvirs, having demanded a conference, went out from Modena, and were seized by the Boii in violation of good faith. Zumpt regards the legati here and triumviri as the same persons, looked upon in different relations.
ambassadors had been sent from Rome, they certainly would have gone at once to the enemy.

23–27. Pigerrima eadem, etc. "And at the same time very slow at military operations."—Segnis. "Inactive."—Simulari captum, etc.
"It was pretended by them that proposals for peace were begun to be set on foot." More literally, "that it was begun to be treated (among themselves) concerning peace."—Violata etiam, etc. "The pledge of personal safety, which had been given for that occasion, having also been violated."

31–33. Effusum agmen ducit. "Leads his army not in close order of march," i. e., not carefully kept together. — Plerisque incultis.
"Most of the country being uncultivated." Supply locis.—Inexplorata. "Without having (previously) explored his route," i. e., without having detached reconnoitring parties.

35–46. Ad temptanda ea. "For trying to get possession of it."
On the form temptare for tentare, consult Zumpt, § 12.—Ad quingentes.
Observe that ad has here of the force of "to the number of," i. e., nearly.
(Zumpt, § 296.)—Ademere. On the termination ēre for erunt, consult Zumpt, § 163. It is very frequently used by the historical writers.—
Tanneum. A small town of Gallia Cispadana, between Regium Lepidum and Parma. Nev Taneto, a village near Sant' Iario.—Brixionorum Gallorum. A branch of the Cenomani. On a later occasion also, when the greater part of the Cenomani were in arms against Rome (Liv., xxxii., 30), they remained faithful to the latter.

---

CHAPTER XXVI.

1–5. Tumultus repens. "Sudden disturbance." Tumultus was the technical word for a rising in Italy or Gaul, during which exemptions from military service were not allowed.—Insuper . . . auctum. A pleonasm; compare insuper addita, bk. ii., chap. ii., line 42.—C. Ati-lum. The prætor peregrinus.—A consul. Levied by Scipio for Spain.

9–15. Et. Here et loosely connects different facts. For a similar use of que, see chap. lvi., line 23, tantque vis, etc.—Sexaginta longis novibus. The ablativeus modi of the force with which anything is undertaken in war, as omnibus copiis pugnare. Observe that cum must be used when no adjective or numeral accompanies the noun.—Satis-vidum. Genitive plural. (Madvig, § 257, Obs. 4.)—Vixdom. To be taken with satis credens, opposed to animadvertit in the following sentence. Weissenborn seems to prefer taking it with superasse.

Volcarum. The Volcae were a powerful tribe, dwelling between the Pyrenees, the Cevennes, and the Rhone, divided into the Volcae Tectosages near the Spanish frontier, and the Volcae Arecomici, near the Rhone. —Ceteris. It is difficult to see what ceteri and ceteros (line 27) refer to.—Ceteriores. "The hither bank," from Hannibal’s point of view, was the western.

28-36. Eorum ipsorum quos, etc. "Those of the Volcae themselves whom," etc. —Sedes sue tenuerant. "Their own homes had kept back," i. e., "love of their own homes." —Temere. "Without design," they were not built on purpose to transport the troops, but for use in the neighborhood. —Galli inchoantes cavabant, etc. "The Gauls made a beginning by hollowing," etc. The participle, in such phrases as the above, stands in place of an adverb or adverbial phrase, by which, or by a finite verb co-ordinate with the leading verb, it requires to be translated. Compare bk. ii., chap. xlvii., line 24, incursantes issent. Sall., i., 22, maturantes veniunt. —Nihil dummodo. "Caring for nothing else, provided that they were able to float." Usually nihil nisi ut.

CHAPTER XXVII.

3-8. Equites virique. "Cavalry and infantry;" to be taken with obimentes, so as to be equivalent to the more common expression equus virisque obimentes. —Iter unius diei. The cognate accusative is here qualified by the genitive. An adjective or pronoun is generally added to this accusative. (Madvig, § 223, c, Obs. 4.) —Opus est facto. (Madvig, § 266, Obs.) See bk. i., chap. lviii., line 20.

8-11. Ad id. "For this purpose." —Ducis. "Guides." —Inde. From Hannibal’s position.—Supra. Adverb, "above." —Parvae insulae. An island in the Rhone above the mouth of the Ardèche seems to be meant. Hannibal probably crossed the Rhone at Roquemaure, to the north of Avignon, above the mouth of the Durance. —Transitum ostendere. "Showed that a passage was practicable." —Ibi. At the place indicated.

14-25. Superpositis, etc. "On their shields, which they placed on the skins." —Aedes exercitus. "The other part of the army." —Ratibus junctis. Jungere ratem is to build a raft by joining trees or pieces of timber together. —Postero die. The third day; the second having been spent in crossing the river. —Prodito funo significat. "They signal by sending up a column of smoke." This meaning of proditus is not found elsewhere, and therefore some editors read edito, and join it with loco. —Naves. This is Madvig's reading for the common one, nantes.—Fere. Compare the statement three lines below, magna pars, etc.—Pars magna . . . nantes. See Madvig, § 300, a; Zumpt, § 366.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1-12. In ripam. The Gauls ran from their camp to the bank where the enemy was threatening to cross.—Et qui nitebantur . . . et qui. Both refer to militum; the first qui to those crossing the river, the second to those still on the bank.—Adverso. "In front."—Adortus. The word adorior is used of a secret or unperceived and unexpected assault, as opposed to aggressus, an open attack.—Et ipse. "Hanno himself," in person, as opposed to clamor.—Vim facere. "To force a way."

20-24. Refugientem. Supply rectorem.—Nantem. Marked by Madvig as a doubtful reading. As the action expressed by refugientem commenced before that expressed by nantem, the latter cannot be regarded as adverbially qualifying the former. Weissenborn, to avoid an asyndeton, inserts inde before nantem.—Ut quemque . . . rapiente. "The very violence of the stream hurrying each one, though fearing the deep water, when ground failed it, to the other bank."—Id. "This method" of sending them over on a raft.—Ante rem. Here equivalent to cum nondum esset facta.—Foret. "Would be under the circumstances."—Acta re. "When it was effected, is more easy to believe."

26-42. Secunda aqua. "Down the stream."—Pluribus. "Many," without any notion of comparison.—Altera. "A second raft."—Tamquam viam, for tamquam per viam, the preposition being omitted before the second noun. In Cicero a second preposition is omitted only after a copulative conjunction.—Donec agerentur. "While they were being driven." Donec (a word not found in Cæsar, and only thrice in Cicero) is in the earlier writers used with an indicative mood in statements of facts; in Livy and the later historians with a subjunctive. Here the subjunctive agerentur is due to the causal connection the sentence is intended to express; in line 40, donec fecisset, the subjunctive expresses the result; but see Madvig, § 360, c.—Ibi urgentes. "Here, crowding one another, as those on the outside shrank from the water, they exhibited some confusion, till fear itself produced tranquillity when they saw water all around them."—Pondere ipso stabiles. Livy and Polybius thought that the elephant could not swim.—Quærendis radis. Ablative of manner.
CHAPTER XXIX.

1–14. Dum traiiciuntur...miserat. Dum, when used to denote what happens while something else is happening, is usually joined with a present tense, even when the leading proposition has a perfect tense, or, as in this case, a pluperfect.—Alae. In Roman military language ala denoted the cavalry of the allies, as distinguished from the legionarii equites, and is here used of the Numidian troops as distinguished from the Carthaginian.—Atrocius quam pro numero. “Fiercer than one would expect from the number of the combatants.”—Præter multa vulnera. “Setting aside many wounds.”—Caedes. “The number of the slain.”—Fuga. Not “flight,” but “confusion.”—Pars Gallorum. These Gauls were the troops mentioned in chapter xxvi. as being in the pay of the Massilienses.—Hoc, etc. “This skirmish, at once the beginning and the omen.”—Summae rerum. “The war as a whole.” See, for summa, chap. i., line 2, of this book.—Ut...ita. These words, implying comparison, may be conveniently translated by “indeed...but,” implying contrast; similarly, ancipitis certaminis is added to haud sane incruentam by the conjunction que, where we would have a contrast introduced by “but.”

18–28. Nec Scipioni, etc. “Neither could Scipio form any determination.” Scipio seems only now to have discovered Hannibal’s plan, and to have thought that the army of the Carthaginians would perish in crossing the Alps.—Et Hannibalem. The et corresponds to the preceding nec.—Qui primus obtulisset. “Which had been the first to present itself.” (Madvig, § 300, b.)—Manus consereret. This is only Livy’s view. Hannibal’s plan had always been to invade Italy, and it was now too late in the season for him to waste time and men in Southern Gaul.—Integro bello. “The entire war,” i.e., without a single battle elsewhere; the words nusquam ante libatis viribus being added as an explanation.—Consent. Historical present in a relative clause; the relative clause here representing a principal clause.—Magis iter immensum Alpesque. Henadi dys for iter per Alpes.—Rem. In apposition to iter immensum Alpesque; “awful, by report at least, to troops who knew nothing about it by experience.”—Metuebat. “Apprehensive (of the future danger),” while timebat implies fear and despondency in front of the enemy, and horrendam the uneasy feeling experienced in presence of unknown perils, very nearly “awe.”

CHAPTER XXX.

8–11. Varie militum animos versat. “Attempts to work on the spirits of his soldiers by different means, namely, by reproving and exhorting.” The castigatio (a stronger word than reprehensio) continues down to line 20.—Gentesque et. The conjunctions que . . . et connect words only, not propositions. (Madvig, § 435, a, Obs. 1.) This use is not Ciceronian, but is common in Livy when he wishes to add an explanation or further definition. Compare bk. i., chap. xliii., line 8, tela hastaque et gladius, “weapons, namely, both spear and sword.”—Duo maria. The Atlantic and the Mediterranean.—Carthaginensium essent. See Madvig, § 281.—Quicunque obesissent. An exaggeration for the purpose of rousing his hearers. The Romans had asked for the surrender of Hannibal alone. See chap. vi., in fin.—Velut ob noxam. “As though they had committed a crime.” Noxa is a legal term for a misdemeanor or delictum; not in Cicero.—Ad delendum nomen Romanorum. “To destroy the whole Roman race.” So nomen Latinum, the Latin race.—Orbem terrarum. An expression more appropriate to a contemporary of Livy than to Hannibal. See below, line 31, caput orbis terrarum.

14—19. Cernant. Not the historical present, but the present used to designate a present condition as the result of past conditions (see chap. xiii., line 13, postquam . . . est). Rare after postquam.—Inter. “In the midst of.”—Trajectum. Trajectio is, in military narratives, used with two accusatives, of the place crossed, and the things transported; hence we may have either flumen trajectum, as here, or exercitus trajectus, as in chap. livi., line 32.—Italica sit. “Is part of Italy.” The partitive genitive is rare after words not involving a partitive notion.—Quid Alpes, etc. The English order is credentes Alpes esse quid alud, etc. This clause marks the transition from the castigatio to the adhortatio.

20—36. Fingerent. “They might imagine.” In the original oratio recta, the imperative or present subjunctive would have been employed.—Pervias paucis esse, exercitibus invias? “Passable by small numbers, by armies impassable.” The ordinary reading is et exercitibus without invias.—Pinnis sublime elatos, etc. “Borne proudly on pinions through the air.” A poetical form of expression. See Virg., G., iii., 108, elati sublime videntur Aera per vacuum ferri.—Sublime. Adverb, “through the air.”—Advenas. Verbal substantives are often used as attributives to mark the action rather than the characteristics of the other substantive. So bk. ii., chap. i., line 14, plebs transfuga; bk. xxxiv., chap. iv., exsule advena.—Liberis ac conjugibus. The children are here purposely placed first, as in bk. iii., chap. xlv., in liberis quoque . . . conjugesque.—Migrantium modo. “In the fashion of emigrants;” namely, with all their worldly goods.—Tuto. Adverb, “safely.”—Transmississe. Used as a neuter verb, “to cross.”—Caput orbis terrarum. See above, line 11.—Ea. “Rome, and all that was Rome’s.” In the mouth of a Roman, hæc (neut. pl.) means the whole Roman empire. (Cic., Attic., xii., 19.) Si modo hae stabunt. "If the empire continues." Compare Livy, bk. xxxii., chap. xxiv., and Cic., Cat., i., 8.—Cederent. A rhetorical command; sperent, an expression of a wish or prayer.—Interjacentem Tiberi, etc. Livy and the later historians use the dative thus of local relation where a preposition with its case might have been expected.—Campum. Namely, the Campus Martius.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1–22. Corpus curare. "To refresh themselves."—Adversa ripa. "Up the bank," like adverso flumine.—Mediterranea Galliae. The adjective in the neuter plural used substantively is especially employed to designate localities, and is followed generally by a partitive genitive.—Credens. "Because he believed."—Minus. Without tanto corresponding to quantum.—Quartis castris. "Four days' march."—Diversis ex Alpibus. "From different parts of the Alps."—Incolunt. "Dwell." This verb is often used by Livy without an object expressed.—Inde. "From that time onwards." An allusion to the Allobrogian war mentioned in epitome of bk. lxi.—Major. "The older."—Pellebatur. The imperfect is used, because the matter was not yet ended.—Ad Hannibalem rejecta. "Referred to Hannibal." Rejicere aliquad ad aliquem is the legal phrase for referring a matter to some officer or constituted body. See bk. ii., chap. xxviii., line 12, where is found the common expression ad senatum rejicere.—Vestis. Used in a collective sense. "Clothing," as in chap. xv., line 8.

25–27. Recta regione. "In a straightforward direction," Regione, "in the line or direction of," is used with both adjectives and genitives, and without a preposition.—Ad levam. That is, along the Isère in a north-eastern direction. From this point Livy takes Hannibal by quite a different route from that given by Polybius; the latter makes the march to be along the Isère, over the Mont du Chât and the Little St. Bernard; and most modern authorities hold this to be the route really followed by the Carthaginian army. Livy, after the above-mentioned march to the north-east, makes Hannibal turn to the south-east, and cross by Mont Cenis, a route which all French authorities and Gibbon consider the one actually taken.—Tricastinos. A tribe separated from the Allobroges by the Isère.—Tricorios. A tribe lying east of the Vocontii.

28–36. Et ipse. That is, the Durance itself also, as well as the Isère and Rhone.—Difficilimum. In the masculine gender agreeing with annis, instead of being in the neuter to agree with flumen, implied in fluminum. (See Madvig, § 310, Obs. 1.)—Nova semper vada. "Ever new fords." Vada and gurgites are objects of probet.—Et
fum. "Moreover the fact that at that time it had been swelled."— Incertis. That is, the meaning or cause of which was unknown.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1–15. Postquam movit. Postquam is rarely put with the pluperfect unless to denote that an action had taken place after the lapse of some time.—Quadrato agmine. "In order of battle."—Violet. This word, by a kind of zeugma, refers both to munimenta and progressos.
—Ita. "Thus," that is, by giving up the pursuit and returning by sea.—Genuam. Scipio’s landing at this port has not been previously mentioned.

17–29. Alpes. The higher Alps. The term campestre iter does not apply to the route intended by Livy, but to that through the territory of the Allobroges described by Polybius.—In majus vero. Here majus, although used substantively, retains its power as a comparative, and is followed by the ablative. —Inanimaliaque. This is the reading of the MSS., for which Weissenborn reads inanimaliaque. Inanimalis is post-classical.—Inminentes tumulos insidentes. "Posted on elevations overhanging the road."—Ingentem fugam stragemque.
"Vast confusion and loss."

31–43. Transitum ea non esse. With ea supply via or regione. "That there is not a passage in that direction."—Inter confagosam omnia praéruptaque. Here omnia is the substantive element of the phrase, and confagosam and praerupta attributives. "In a spot where nothing but broken ground and precipices surrounded him."—Cidabi, quemque.
Quemque is in apposition to omnes, or some similar word implied before dilabi. "They dispersed each to his own hut."—Luce. Like nocte, the ablative of the time "when."—Ut vinum facturus. "As if intending to force his way."—Simulando. The gerund is used without any clearly implied subject, and is nearly equivalent to a verbal substantive in -tio. Compare bk. xxv., chap. xxxviii., Reliquam diei expediendis armis et curatione corporum consumtum.—Laxatas. "Were far apart." Laxare aciem or manipulos (Cæsar, Bell. Gall., ii, 25) is "to open out the files."—Quam pro numero munentium. See chap. xxix., line 7.—Acerrimo quoque viro. A limiting apposition to expeditis.
Quoque is the ablative from quisque. "All his most spirited men."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1–11. Mota. Supply sunt.—Conveniebant. "Were assembling;" "began to assemble."—Caput. Collective for plural. "Above their heads.”—Via. “By the road below.” Ablative of route.—Inminentes... transire. For a similar arrangement of participle and infinitive, see bk. xv., chap. x., primos superasse, postrenos appropinquantes viderunt.—Inmolem... defixit. “Struck them motionless.”—Videre. Third person plural of perfect indicative.—Trepidationem.
“Confused hurry.”—Miseri. “Was thrown into confusion.”—Terroris. Genitive after quidquid.—Perversis. The reading given in the text is that of the MSS., but it seems corrupt. Madvig conjectures transversis.—Juxta invia ac devia adsueti. With the punctuation in the text invia ac devia are accusatives after adsueti—a construction found in Virgil, Æn., vi., 833, assuescite bella. Some editors prefer to take invia ac devia with decurrunt, comparing Catullus, lxiv., 6, vado decidire; some again insert by conjecture per before invia.—Devia. “By-roads.”

12-23. Ab iniquitate oppugnabatur. The iniquitas loci is personified, and consequently the construction of the agent, i.e., the ablative with the preposition ab.—Sibi quoque tendente. “Each struggling for himself;” quoque being ablative of quisque.—Infestum faciebant.
Repercussae is properly applicable to the sounds reflected, but is here transferred to what reflects the sounds. —Multosque. “Many of the baggage-train.”—In immensum altitudinis. These phrases, consisting of an adjective used substantively in the neuter singular, and followed by a partitive genitive, seem to have been formed on the analogy of multum dies. They are used almost exclusively to express relations of quantity and of degree.—Sed ruinae maxime modo. “In the fashion of some fall (of a building);” “as if some building fell down.”—Quae quamquam, etc. It might have been expected that Hannibal would send assistance; but, instead of doing so, he halted and kept back his men.

26-34. Exutum. Equivalent to si exutus esset.—Incolunem traduxis-set. Here the pluperfect subjunctive after periculum esse, ne marks the result as future. Compare bk. xxii., chap. xiv., line 38, Vereor ne ser-vaverint.—Liberata. “Had been left open.”—Montanis. The ablative of the person is here used without the preposition a, to assimilate the construction to that of loco, the montani being regarded not as agents, but as instruments.—Primo. “In the very first engagement.”

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1-18. Frequentem culturibus. “Crowded with inhabitants.” Fre-quens is generally used of places, and populus here seems, like the Greek δήμος, to mean “a district.”—Ut inter montanos. “Considering it lay among mountaineers.”—Suis artibus. “His own artifices,” “artifices like his own.” The standing Roman sneer at Punicæ fides.
NOTES.

—Magno natu. “Of advanced age.” Natu being ablative of verbal substantive.—Ad fidem promissorum. “For a guarantee of their promises.”—Obsidibus quoque dabant, etc. Observe the force of the imperfect. “Having received the hostages whom they offered.”— Negququam ut inter pacatos. Supply fieri solet, or some equivalent phrase, and sed before composito.

of an adverb with circumspectans, “looking around with anxious care.”
—Parte altera. “On the one side.”—A fronte ab tergo . . . comminus eminus. The conjunction is left out when two single words embracing the whole idea are opposed to each other. (Madvig, § 434.)—Putunt.
The object requires to be supplied from the context.—In eos versa, etc. “The fact that the infantry had to turn and fight, made it clear that,” etc.—Extrema aemina. Neuter plural of adjective and partictive genitive. See chap. xxxi., line 8. Accipienda fuerit. Fuerit because the apodosis itself is dependent on quin. Without such dependency the conditional apodosis would be accipienda fuit, the participle expressing the conditional relation.

24, etc. Agmen. Here the body of infantry in the rear; in line 27, agmine seems to mean the whole column. Weissenborn suggests that these details, especially the improbable separation of the infantry and cavalry by an attack of the mountaineers, are additions by Livy himself.

CHAPTER XXXV.

5–12. Latrocinii magis, etc. “More like freebooters than soldiers,” “more in the fashion of a raid than of an operation in war.”—Daret.
The subjunctive of repeated action. (Madvig, § 359.)—Progressi.
“Any, having advanced before or fallen behind the main body.”— Artas praecipites vias. Here artas is the attributive to the combine substantive and adjective, praecipites vias denoting a kind or class.
(Madvig, § 300, c, Obs. 5.)—Insuetis. To be taken absolutely; adeundi is dependent on metus. “Those who were unaccustomed were afraid to come nearer.”

14–22. Nono die. Polybius also gives nine days for the length of Hannibal’s march from the crossing of the first pass near Chambey the Little St. Bernard. Livy, however, does not tell whence he reckons, or where Hannibal was on the first day.—Jugum Alpium.
Mont Genève.—Invia pleraque. See chap. xxv., line 33. Pleraque is used substantively.—Inita valles. “The circumstance that valleys were entered at random." This is to explain how nine days were consumed in reaching Mont Genèvre, a point so much nearer than the Little St. Bernard.—Vergiliiarum. The Pleiades, setting on October 26th. Livy here lays on his colors too thick; from the middle of October to the battle of the Trebia, about the time of the winter solstice, is too short an interval, especially as Sempronius’s army had to come from Sicily. Polybius brings Hannibal to the summit by the end of September.

23–38. Per omnia oppleta. See chap. xxxii., line 81.—Pigritiaque, etc. "When disgust and despair were conspicuous in every face."—Promontorio. "A projecting peak." Between the Little Mont Cenis and La Grande Croix there is a view into the valley of the Po.—Italian ostentat ... maniaque eos tum transcendere. Either a verb of speaking can be supplied before the infinitive and accusative, or it may be dependent on ostentat by zeugma.—Summun. Adverbially used. "At the most."—Furtia. "Stealthy attacks."—Ab Italia. "On the Italian side."—Huere adflicti vestigio suo. "Could they, when dashed down, remain on the spot where they fell."—Occiderent. Madvig reads succiderent; "fell down the cliffs." Occidere in the sense of "to fall" is rare. See bk. xxiii., chap. xxiv., ut momento levit occiderent.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1–18. Ventum. Supply est.—Angustiorem. "Much narrower than the rest of the pass."—Rupes ... saxis. "Cliff," "rocks." See bk. xxxii., chap. iv., saxo undique absicso rupibus imposita est.—Ut aegre, etc. "So that, with difficulty, could an unnumbered soldier, by feeling about and grasping," etc.—Stirpes circa eminentes. A Græcism. Livy very frequently inserts an adverb, especially circa, in place of a relative clause. See bk. i., chap. xvii., line 12, multarum circa civitatum.—Natura locus, etc. "The place, already precipitous by nature, had been broken off by a land-slide to the depth of nearly a thousand feet." The statement of Polybius, that the land-slide had carried away a thousand feet of the road, is more probable.—Quæ res, etc. "What was detaining the column."—Dignissus. Namely, from the place where he stood.—Haud dubia, etc. "It seemed to admit of no doubt that he must conduct the column," etc. Circa = quæ circa erant.—Intactam. Literally, "Untouched," that is, "which had remained from the previous year unthawed."—Mollis nec precalta, i. e., niri.—Nudam infras, etc. "The bare glacier which was beneath, and streams of melting snow." Tabes, like lues, is snow melting and trodden into soft paste—"slush." (Chase.)

19–26. Via lubrica glacie. "The road slippery by reason of the ice." Glacie is the ablative of the cause. The MSS. read ut a hu-brica, "as might be expected from the slippery ice, not," etc. — In pronos. "On a downward slope." — Ad miniculis. "Supports," i. e., hands and knees; they had already lost their footing. — Ad quas. "By supporting themselves on which," etc. A different state of affairs from that described in the beginning of the chapter, where bushes, and such like, were in reach. — Levi tantum glacie. "Nothing but smooth ice," for they could not rise by using their limbs, and had nothing to lay hold of. — Etiam tamen. Perhaps corrupt. Weissennbronn brackets tamen, and suggests for these two words, et in tæbe. — Jumenta. "The baggage animals at times cut into even the lowest layer of snow as they trod upon it; and at times broke entirely through when they slipped." — In commiendo. "In their struggles to rise."

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1–10. Jugo. The place whence they commenced their unsuccessful detour. — Muniendam. "To make passable." The phrase is equivalent to per rupem viam munere. — Arboribus. This mention of trees does not agree with the account in chap. xxxvi., line 22, and the expression nuda cacmina in line 16 of the present chapter. — Aceto. "Vinegar," not the mixture of vinegar and water, called posca, carried by soldiers. Compare Plin., bk. xxiii., chap. i., 3, § 57, acetum saxa rumpit infusion, qua non ruperit ignis antecedens. It is difficult to see where such a quantity as would be required for the operation could come from, and how in such a short time the rock could be heated so thoroughly. The story is often alluded to in writers of all ages. Compare Juvenal, x., 153, Diducit scopulos et montem rumpit aceto.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

In this chapter Livy expresses his own opinion respecting the number of Hannibal's troops and the route by which he crossed the Alps. The author first mentioned, L. Cincius Alimentus, had been Praetor A.U.C. 548, and afterwards Praetor in Sicily. He wrote, in Greek, a history of Rome from its foundation to his own time. He is quoted here by Livy as his authority for three statements: (1) that Hannibal's army when he reached Italy amounted to 80,000 foot and 10,000 horse; (2) that he lost between his passage of the Rhone and his arrival in Italy 36,000 men; (3) that he came down into the country of the Taurini. Cincius had been taken prisoner by the Carthaginians, and passed some time at Hannibal's headquarters, where he heard from Hannibal himself full accounts of the army and the route. No man could, therefore, have better information. Such information, so communicated, ought not to be discarded except on the strongest possible grounds; and it is little likely that a man of Cincius's high official position and practical knowledge either misunderstood or was deceived by Hannibal. It is more probable that Livy, with regard to the first statement, misrepresents or misunderstands Cincius, and describes him as saying "into Italy," instead of "set out for Italy." With regard to the second statement, Cincius agrees with Polybius, who says that Hannibal crossed the Rhone with 50,000 foot and 9000 horse and reached Italy with 20,000 men. The third statement, that the first people on the Italian side of the Alps visited by Hannibal was that of the Taurini, was believed by many who did not think that Hannibal crossed by Mont Cenis.

1-13. Maxime. "In the main."—Auctores sunt. "Relate." This phrase is used as if it were a transitive verb, and is followed even by a neuter pronoun. Compare bk. xxiii., chap. xvi., quod quidam auctores sunt. (Madvig, § 229, b, Obs. 3.)—Quinto decimo. In chap. xxxv. we find nine days occupied in the ascent, two days in rest, one day in a march through the snow, four days at the cliff (chap. xxxvii.), three days in the descent; total, nineteen days. Livy seems to have deducted the days in which no advance was made.—Qui plurimum. "Who give the highest number."—Maxime auctor moveret. "Would especially influence me as an authority."—Nisi confuderet. "Did he not get his numbers into confusion by the addition of Gauls and Ligurians."—Magis. This word belongs to veri simile.

18-24. E Taurinis. A people on the upper course of the Po, extending from the Alps to Turin, called by Pliny a Ligurian, by Polybius a Gallic tribe. —Quanam. "At what point."—Vulgo credere. Supply a subject to the infinitive, "people commonly believe."—Pe- nino. Ablative, signifying in what way or direction a movement takes place. The Pennine Alps extend from the Great St. Bernard to St. Gothard.—Inde. That is, from the passage of the Pœni.—Cre- monis jugum. At present called Cramont, the portion of the Graian Alps extending from the Little St. Bernard towards Mont Blanc. The historian here quoted, C. Cassius Antipater, lived at the end of the sixth century of the city, and wrote a Roman history in a rough but vigorous style. See Cicero, De Orat., ii., 12.—Salassi. A tribe living to the east of the Graian Alps, along the Doria Baltea.—Montanos. "Who inhabited those mountains."—Liberi Galli. In bk. v., chap. xxxv., the Libii are said to dwell at Brixia and Verona: they were probably a Ligurian rather than a Gallic tribe.—Deduxerint. The subjunctive, as expressing a milder assertion.

25-29. Patrisse itinera. These passes were little used till Augustus made a road through the district of the Salassi to Gaul, the remembrance of which fact has led Livy to write ad Galliam, instead of e Gallia.—Utile. "At all events."—Seduni Veragri. "The Seduni and Veragri." See Cæsar, Bell. Gall., iii., 1, "In Veragros Sedunorum." He describes them as lying between the Lake of Geneva and the Rhine on one side, and the summit of the Alps on the other.—Ab eo, etc. "From that deity."—Sacratum. "Possessing a shrine consecrated to his worship."—Pennisas. This Gallic god is mentioned in later inscriptions, and identified with Jupiter. Probably the name of the god and the name of the mountains are not derived one from the other, but come from the same stem. (Weissenborn from Th. Mommsen.)

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1-17. Ad principia rerum. "For his first enterprises."—Proxima genti. "The nearest tribe," as in the preceding chapter.—Armare. Generally, "to equip;" here, "to call to arms."—Parti ateri. "To one party or the other as he might choose." An erroneous notion on the part of Livy, for Hannibal had already come to an understanding with the Insubres.—Contracta ante mala. See, on circa, chap. xxxvi., line 4.—Ex. This preposition is often used to mark the transition from one condition to another.—Varie. "Differently," i.e., favorably in some instances, in others unfavorably.—Exercitus tirome. "Army of recruits," tirome is here subjoined almost like an adjective to exercitus. See note on advenas cultores, chap. xxx., line 26. Exercitus tirome is used by Ciceron, Fam., vii., 3, 2.—In novis ignominis. In, as in in re subita, marks the circumstances in which anything occurs, and therefore the cause. "On account of their late disgraceful losses." See chap. xxv. Scipio had come too late to occupy the Alpine passes through which Hannibal debouched; he therefore hastens to attack him before the moral of his army is restored.—Ex stativis, i.e., castris. Situated to the west of Turin.—Unam urbem. The Roman Augusta Taurinorum, now Turin.—Juxisset. "Induced to join."—Voluntate. Scil. eorum. "By their own free will."

22-33. Inter se. "One to the other."—Sicuti and ita. See chap. xxix., line 14. "Not yet indeed sufficiently well known the one to the other, but each already imbued,” etc. — Et apud Romanos.

“Among the Romans as well as among the Carthaginians and Spaniards.” — Eo ipso. “By the very fact that,” etc. — Inter se opinionem. “Their mutual high opinion,” etc. — Obvius fuerat. Equivalent to obvius factus est. — Conatu...effectu. Livy increased very much the number of these verbal substantives, and uses with great frequency effectus. — Occupavit transire. “Was the first to cross.” — Talem. “Such a speech as follows.”

CHAPTER XL.

2–10. Supersedessem. “I would have refrained from speaking.”

Supersedere is used with the ablative case as well as an object-clause. — Apud vos. A slight confusion of expression. The thought is, “I would have refrained from speaking to them, but as they are not here, and you are, I must address you.” — Qui viciissent. “Seeing that they had conquered.” The subjunctive gives the reason why it would have been superfluous to address them; the indicative habui, in line 7, states simply the fact. — Cum quibus. To be taken with habui, i.e., both my soldiers and I. — Confessionem, etc. “The confession he made by retreating and declining battle.” — Hispanice scriptus. “Enrolled for Spain.” — Meis auspiciis. The legati had the auspices of the general-in-chief. — Vuluit. The words Senatus populusque Romanus always have the verb in the singular. (Madvig, § 213, a.) Consulem. “A consul for your leader.”

16–22. Viginti. The period of twenty years was first agreed on for payment of the indemnity at the end of the First Punic War; it was afterwards reduced to ten. — Sicilian ac Sardiniam. See chap. i., line 21. — Audent. After this word and necessa est, supply pugnare, from pugnarii. — Nisi creditis. Ironical. — Duabus partibus. “Two thirds.” — Cum phures perierint, etc. “Have acquired more hope since more have perished,” etc. Weissenborn reads quia—the subjunctive being due to a partial obliquity. Scipio ironically suggests that this fact is the reason professed by the Carthaginians for their higher hopes.

23–35. At enim. Used by Livy only in speeches, to introduce a supposed objection. See chap. xviii., line 28. — Possit. For the subjunctive, see Madvig, § 364: qui conveying the signification of talis ut. — Effiges immo umbrae. “Forms—nay, shadows of men.” The former have some bodily substance, the latter none. — Prexisti. Prex, because the extremities were frost-bitten. — Artus. “The larger limbs.” — Pugnaturi estis. “You are going to fight.” — Ac. This conjunction adds a new and more extended thought. — Ruptore.
"Habitual breaker." See note, chap. xxx., line 26, on advenas cultores.—Secundum deos. "Next to the gods."—Profigare. "To dash down," i. e., "to break the force of."

CHAPTER XLI

1-15. Vestri adhortandi. The genitives neuter singular of the possessive pronouns are used instead of the genitives of the personal pronouns, when the pronouns would be in the objective genitive. See Zumpt, § 660; Madvig, § 297, b.—Ad famam. "At the news."—Qua parte. As if, instead of equestri, the substantive equium had preceded.—Regressus ad naves. The MSS. read neque regressus, etc., evidently corrupt. Most editors have atque...ad naves erat.—Quantum maxime. So in bk. ix., chap. ix., quanta maxime vi, for which quantum maximus is more common.—Timendo hosti. "This terrible enemy." The gerundives, especially those of verba affectum, are often mere attributives equivalent to adjectives in -bilis. So tremendus, optandum, etc.—Fui. See chap. xxxix., line 28.

15-29. Utrum, etc. "Do I seem to have fallen in with them unexpectedly while I was trying to avoid an engagement?" After incidisse and occurrere, supply in eum and ei from the preceding hosti.—In vestigiis occurrere, on the analogy of in vestigiis perseveri.—Ad decernendum. Supply acie or ferro.—Per viginti annos. "In the course of twenty years." Really twenty-three years had elapsed.—Ægates insulas. See chap. x., line 27.—Duodevicens denariis. "For eighteen denarii apiece."—Emulus...Herculis. Hercules was said to have crossed the Graian Alps on his return from Spain. See bk. v., chap. xxxiv.—Veticallas, etc. Veticallas are taxes on produce, such as corn, oil, etc.; stipendium is a fixed payment or tribute. The stipendium imposed by Lutatius Catulus and the additional one thousand talents were paid in ten years.—Quem. The relative put in the protasis.—Agitaret. "Haunted him."—Leges. "Conditions of peace;" namely, to evacuate Sicily and the islands between it and Italy, to refrain from attacking Hiero or his allies, and to restore all Roman prisoners without ransom.—Pactus est. The verb paciscor is generally followed by ut, etc.

30-39. Velim. Compare Madvig, § 350, b, Obs. 1.—Ultimo. "The greatest of human punishments." Supply suppliciorum.—Delere. "Wipe out," "utterly destroy." Compare Delenda est Carthago, so often in the month of Cato.—Tutela, etc. "Treated them as if they were under our protection." Possessive genitive.—Pro his imperitis. "In gratitude for these benefits." Imperitia is here used as a substantive.—Oppugnatum. Supine.
40–52. Utinam esset. The imperfect tense is used, because the wish cannot be fulfilled. — De possessione. "About the possession of;" while pro Italia is "on behalf of" or "for the protection of Italy." — Nisi nos, etc. More usual is si nos non, etc. — Obsistat. "Opposes." — Quas dum. Equivalent to ut, eas dum. — Non corpus sum, etc. "Not (merely) his own person, but (also)," etc. — Reputet. "Think again and again," "keep thinking." — Romani imperii. The adjective put before the substantive for the sake of emphasis, the usual arrangement being imperium Romanum. (Madvig, § 466, a, Obs. 1.)

CHAPTER XLII.

3–14. Circumdato. "Drawn up in a circle to see the spectacle." — Victor. "If victorious." — Ad unum omnes. "All to a man." — In id. "For this object." — Ubi dimicarent. Ubi, like cum, is used with the imperfect subjunctive in historical narrative. "But as soon as they were fighting there was such a state of feeling, not merely among those of the same condition (i.e., prisoners), but likewise among the crowd of spectators (the army), that the fortune of the conquerors was no more praised than that of those who died bravely."

CHAPTER XLIII.

1–10. Sic. To be taken with affectos. — Aliquot paribus. "A few pairs." — Contione. "A regular meeting," after the ring was broken up. — Habueritis. Future perfect. — Vicinus. "We have conquered," i.e., "we are already conquerors." — Ac. This conjunction lays a greater stress than et on the appended clause. — Nescio an. The expression implies a suspicion that the thing is. — Necessitates. The plural of abstract nouns is used to denote the existence of a quality in different objects. — Dextra levaque, etc. "Right and left, two seas enclose us, while we have not a single ship, not even for flight." — Claudunt. Used as in bk. xxii., chap. v., line 22, without expressed object. — Habentibus. Dative case, from influence of the preceding and following vobis and integris vobis. — Contra. The MSS. give circa, but as we have dextra, leva, and a tergo, we are led to expect a fronte or contra.

14–21. Et. Introduces a new notice. "Moreover." — Victoribus. "If you are victorious." — Quidquid Romani. The connection in thought is, "But it is not merely Sicily and Sardinia that we shall recover; no, whatever the Romans," etc. — In hanc mercedem. Compare the common expression in spem. In, "for" here marks the object to be gained, and the motive for exertion. — Agite, cum diis, etc.
Thus the MSS. Madvig reads agite dum, diis, etc., where dum is intensive, and usually written as an enclitic. Agedum is frequent; for agite dum, see bk. v., chap. iii.; bk. iii., chap. lxii.

23-39. Consectando. Gerundive almost equivalent to the present participle, consectantes. See bk. ii., chap. xxxii., line 16, quieta . . . rem nullam sumendo. (Madvig, § 416, Obs. 1.)—Tempus est, etc. The infinitive is used, as the phrase has acquired the force of an impersonal verb. (Madvig, § 389, and § 417, Obs. 2.)—Divit. Neuter plural from dives,—Opera presta. See Praef., line 1.—Emeritis stipendiaris. “When your term of service is completed.”—Nec ex-istimaritis. “And do not,” etc. For mood and tense, see Madvig, § 386.—Illa. “That well-known and celebrated.”—Vincentes. “Conquering,” i.e., in an unbroken series of victories.—Exercitus tiron. See chap. xxxix., line 10.—Ignoranti. Ablative case. The participle sometimes, when not used as an adjective, forms its ablative in i.

40-52. An. This particle introduces the second member of an alternative question, the first being left to be inferred from the context. (Madvig, § 453.) “Am I not right in thus describing Scipio and his army, or shall I compare,” etc.—Pratorio. “The general’s tent,” “headquarters.”—Semenstri. From the Ides of March.—Ignoraturum, etc. “I am sure he could not tell by looking at them, of which army he is the consul.”—Facinus militare. “Some exploit of a soldier.”—Decora. “His glorious deeds of arms.”—Laudatis donatisque. “Praised and rewarded.” See bk. v., chap. xlvii., and bk. vii., chap. xxxvii., describing the dona given to P. Decius.—Inter se. Connected with both ignotos and ignorantes.

CHAPTER XLIV.

4-9. Equites infrenatos. The Numidians, who guided their horses with a wand.—Socios. The Libyan and Liby-Phoenician troops are included in this term, as distinguished from the Carthaginian forces, the Paei proper.—Ob patriam. “For your fatherland.” But ob is wanting in the best MSS. Some editors read pro patria.—Infestis signis. A common expression in Caesar (Bell. Gall., xxxvi., 7), who also has infestis pilis procurreere, where it seems to refer to the manner in which the weapon was held by the soldier when charging, “with point against the foe.” See Virgil, Æn., v., 582: Convertere vias infestaque tela tulere.—Pugnaturi. In the older writers the future participle stands in combination with sum to express relations of time; the later authors, Livy, Curtius, etc., use it to express the purpose of motion (Madvig, § 424, Obs. 5), or the circumstances in which the person will be placed when the principal action occurs.—Dolor, injustitia, indignitas. "Pain on account of injustice and ill-treatment."

13-20. Sui arbitri facit. "Makes dependent on her will." Like dicionis facere. (Madvig, § 281, Obs.)—Modum imponere. "To prescribe."—Quos non excedamus. Not a sentence of design. "Which we may not pass."—Ne transieris Iberum. The Romans are here introduced as speaking.—Ad Iberum est Saguntum. As Saguntum is not on the Ebro, Madvig reads non ad, etc., and takes the words as a reply to the Roman command.—Ne transieris... ne quid sit... ne moveris. Observe the tenses and persons: the second person of the perfect subjunctive, the third person of the present subjunctive. (Madvig, § 386.) "Cross not the Ebro. Have no dealings with the Saguntines! Stir not from the spot!"—Parum, etc. Hannibal's answer.—Veterrimas. "Most ancient." Sardinia was conquered by Carthage towards the close of the sixth century B.C., and at a still earlier date her influence had superseded the yet more ancient influence of Phœnicia in Western Sicily.

21-23. Et inde cessero. "Well, I shall have evacuated the two provinces of Spain;—you will cross into Africa—will cross, do I say?—the two consuls of this year they have sent, one into Africa, the other into Spain!" Cessero. The future perfect is here used of an action the completion of which is anticipated. (Madvig, § 340, Obs. 4.)—Illis timidis esse licet. See Madvig, § 393; Zumpt, § 601.—Respectum. "A refuge."—Sua terra. Emphatic position of sua. "Their own."—Vobis necesse est fortibus esse. This construction is not found elsewhere with necesse est.—Omnibus inter victoriam mortemque, etc. "Everything that lies between victory and death," i.e., everything except.—Dubitabit. "Shall hesitate."

CHAPTER XLV.

1-7. Utrimque. "On either side."—Ponte Ticinum jungere. So again in chap. xlvii., line 8, "Ratibus junxerat flumen." The usual phrase is pontem jungere.—Castellum. An outwork to protect the bridge.—Opere occupato. The usual construction in Livy for in opere. —Sociorum. Hannibal had now left the Taurini, and had marched into the territory of the Libici.

12-25. Revocato. In the singular; the phrase being equivalent to "Maharbal with his cavalry."—Vocatis. Scil. militibus.—In spem. See note on chap. xliii., line 21.—Velit. Present subjunctive, because the historic present promuntiat is treated as an actual present, while vellent and mallent are in the imperfect, because it is regarded as a past tense. — Potestatem facturus. "Would give them an opportunity."
— Secum. Here equivalent to cum sua fortuna. — Bina. "Two apiece."

28–32. Jovem. Here, of course, Baal. — In spem suam quisque acceptis. The quisque is to be taken strictly with auctoris acceptis, and the phrase regarded as equivalent to si dce auctores in spem suam quisque acciperisset. The ablative absolute with a perfect participle passive sometimes takes a word in apposition, as if the construction were active, and contained a perfect participle active in the nominative case. The Greek would be ὅπερ τοὺς ἱππας ἐκατος τῆς ἰλπίδος λαβόντως ἠγγητας. Compare bk. iv., chap. xliii., "causa ipsa pro se dicta." Nägelsbach, Stilistik, § 97, b.— Auctores. "Sureties." — Sperata. Participle used substantively, like imperita in chap. xlii., line 38. — Ad potienda. In classical Latin potior is followed by a genitive or ablative; but as it originally admitted an accusative, it is used in the gerundive like a common transitive verb, governing the accusative. (Madvig, § 265, Obs. 2.)

CHAPTER XLVI.

2–11. Super cetera. "In addition to the other dispiriting circumstances." — Obviis. "Those who came in his way." — Arbore pretorio imminente. "A tree overhanging the general's tent." — Procuratis. The verb procuro, when connected with omens or prodigia, means "to expiate by due rites." — Ad castra, etc. The words ex propinquuo refer to both castra and copias. "For the purpose of reconnoitring, close at hand, the camp and forces of the enemy, (and seeing) how numerous and of what kind they were." — Et ipsi. As in chap. xxviii., line 9, "who also in person." — Circa loca. "The country round about."

12–25. Densior orinis pulvis. "The dust rising in thicker clouds." — Consistit . . . expediēbant. "Halted, and the men began to prepare," etc. Agmen as a collective takes the latter verb in the plural. Consistit historical present. For tense of expediebant, see Madvig, § 337, Obs. 1.— Gallos. The national name used as an adjective, as in bk. xxii., chap. xxxix., line 53. "Paenus imperator." — Romanos, etc. "The Roman cavalry, and the heavy cavalry of the allies." The Gallic horsemen were light cavalry. — Numidis. The ablative by itself is usual in military descriptions, the soldier being regarded simply as an instrument. — Inter subsidia. "Between, or through the intervals between, the supports;" hence, intermixti in line 28. — Quia turbabant, etc. To be joined with labentibus, as ubi . . . vidissent with desilientibus. Translate, "Many falling from their horses because the internixture of the infantry was disturbing the horses; or, dismounting whenever they," etc. — Vidissent. The iterative subjunctive. Compare chap. l, line 7.—Ad pedes pugna iverat. "The fight had come to those on foot," i.e., "the fight became a fight on foot."—Donec. Before donec, supply "and was progressing favorably for the Romans till the Numidians," etc.

28–37. Intercursu . . . propulsatum. These words are added to introduce the next paragraph, and, strictly, do not belong to auxit.—Hic erit. Madvig reads erat; but erit is equivalent to "we shall find him hereafter to be."—Est. "Is forever."—Jaculatorum maxime. "Especially of the javelin-men."—Alius equitatus. Alius, like álloς, is often used with the species instead of the genus to which the species belongs. "The rest of the troops, namely, the cavalry."—Cedendo. Equivalent to dum sedunt.—Célius. The historian Célius Antipater, already mentioned in chap. xxxviii.—Natione. The ablative of the point of view. (Madvig, § 258.)—Malin. "I would rather believe," etc.—De filio. For quod de filio traditur.—Fama obtinuit. "Has held its ground by general report." Fama is in the ablative case.

CHAPTER XLVII.

4–15. Bello gerendo Romanis. Both nouns are in the dative.—Vasa colligere. "To pack up the baggage."—Moratus. Participle from moror. They had been left to guard the bridge.—Ratem. The raft which, when fastened to the bank, made the pons.—Extrema. "The ends."—In secundam aquam. "Down the stream."

16–33. Auctor est. "Asserts."—In ordinem. "So that they formed a line."—Peritis amnis ejus. "To those who are acquainted with that river." Livy here speaks from his own experience.—Fecevint. Future perfect specifying a future result. (Madvig, § 341, Obs. 4.)—Ut jam. "Even supposing that."—Fuerint. Instead of an indicative corresponding to veri simile est, the subjunctive is used as conveying the writer's opinion more modestly.—Qua. "By which way."—Rate jungendo fluminum. "For bridging the river with pontoons."—Ea. Compare qua in line 25.—Circa flumen. "In the neighborhood of the river."—Castra communicat. Hannibal's camp was probably on the east side of the Trebia; his object being to compel Scipio to fight.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1–16. Insequenti nocte. Ablative of time when.—Tumultu quam re major. "More important through the confusion it created, than through the actual loss."—Ad duo militiae peditum. Observe that in expressions of number ad loses, sometimes, its effect on the case, and the whole phrase is treated as declinable. Bk. xxii., chap. xli., line 6, “ad mille et septingenti caesi.”—Signum deflectionis. “Was the signal for the revolt.”—Tamen. Refers to the preceding clause, “although he was suffering from his wound.”—Tacito agmine. “Without having given the usual signal to march.”—Loca altiora. As opposed to the campi patentes near Placentia.—Fefellit. “Escaped Hannibal’s observation.”

20–36. Loca omnia. “All the parts.”—Dum terrae . . . emissus est.
See chap. xxix., line 1.—Moratorum. See chap. xlvii., line 12.— Citrum flumen. On the side next Placentia; the east side or right bank of the Trebia.—Recusat. He had been recalled on receipt of the news that Hannibal was in Italy.—Procul inde. About five Roman miles.—Anezis inopia. Polybius states that his army was lavishly supplied.—Clastidium vicum. Clastidium lay on the west of the Trebia, which, however, was generally easy to cross; it is described as being in Gallic or Ligurian territory.—Numerum. Like numerum vini, a “quantity.”—Mittit. Namely, “troops.”—Nummis aureis. The gold nummus of Livy’s time was worth about $5. Gold was first coined in Rome A.U.C. 536.—Dasio. The Dasii were the leaders of the national anti-Roman party in Brundium.

CHAPTER XLIX.

tres. In partitive apposition to viginti.—Tenuerunt. “ Held their course.”—Æstus. “The current.”—Consulam Romanum opperieris.
“Waiting to receive the Roman consul.” Hiero would receive such a high dignitary with more than usual state: the governors of Sicily being only prætors.—Messanam in portum. “Into the harbor of Messana.” See chap. lxii., line 37, “Tarraconom in hiberna reditum est.”—Propter viginti naves, etc. “Besides the twenty ships forming the fleet to which they (the prisoners) themselves belonged.”—Lilybœum.—The port opposite to Carthage.—Credere. “That they (the prisoners) believed,” etc.—Disjecti. “Driven away from the rest.”
—Dejecti. “ Driven down.”

28–30. Extemplo et circa. “At once and in all directions,” but the reading seems corrupt. Weissenborn has extemplo a prætor et circa ad civitates. Sauppe conjectures et circa civitates.—Suos. Not the inhabitants, but the Roman garrisons.—Intenderent. The imperative sentence put in the imperfect subjunctive, in oratio obliqua; “they must incite,” etc. Some editors insert qui before suos, and translate, “to incite.”—Lilybœum. Nominative case before the historic infiniative. The prætor was in Lilybæum, the seat of the Roman administration.—Socii navales. “The sailors.”—Cocta cibaria. “Biscuit;” not flour or corn.—Ut deferrent. The complimentary final sentence after edicto.—Qui...prospicerent. Repeat missi from line 24.

32-43. Morati. Haenisch conjectures moderati, “regulated.”—Sublatis armamentis. “With their sails and yards up.”—Erant. “Were at once.” For the plural, see Madvig, § 215, a.—Demendis armamentis. Demere armamenta means to furl the sails, take off the yards, and lower the masts, as a preparation for battle; for in battle the ears only were used.—Et memoria circa ea loca. “Trusting to the recollection of their exploits in that very neighborhood.”—Fretus. This adjective retains its participial nature so far as to be construed with the ablative. (Madvig, § 268, e.) The allusion is to the battle off the Ægates. See chap. x., line 27.

CHAPTER L.

3-16. Velle. Historic infinitive: so eludere, etc.—Eludere. A fencing term, meaning to swerve so that the blow goes past the body.—Ut...ita. A comparison, where we use a contrast, “indeed,” “but.”—Sicubi navis consenta esset. “Wherever a ship came to close quarters.” The subjunctive in iterative sentences is found chiefly in the later historians, and then only in the imperfect and pluperfect.—Perforata. “Pierced by the rostrum of the enemy.”

18-33. Secundum. “Immediately after this engagement.”—Non-dum gnaris, etc. “Those who were in Messana—not being as yet aware of it.”—Transgressusque...gratulatus precatusque. The three participles are not co-ordinate; “and having, after he had gone on board the admiral’s ship, congratulated,” etc.—Conata. Participle used substantively. “Attempts.”—Quibusdam volentibus. Perhaps the ablative absolute; the construction is generally explained as a Græcism, the case being the dative, βουλομενοι μοι λοι; a construction found in Sallust and Tacitus.—Profecti. Masculine predicate of rex regiaque classis. (Zumpt, § 376.)

only part of depopular used in good writers in a passive sense. Vibo, on the west coast of Bruttiam.—Urbem. The said town of Vibo.

20–29. Primo quoque tempore. "The very first opportunity." In such phrases the superlative always precedes quisque.—In naves imposuit. "Embarked on his ships." Polybius relates that he made his infantry take an oath to be at Ariminum in a certain number of days, each man finding his way as best he could.—Mari supero. The Adriatic.—Quinquaginta navium classem explorat. "He fitted up for him a fleet of fifty ships." He detached from his own fleet of 160 ships as many as raised the number under Æmilius to 50.—Legens. "Coasting along."—Conjungitur. "Unites himself." Unfortunately Livy does not tell us how this junction was effected, while Hannibal's cavalry had the command of the whole plain.

2–10. Oppositum and declarabat are attracted in number to quidquid, although, of course, they belong to consules as well. The participle and the substantive express the action performed on the subject considered in itself substantively. "The fact that both consuls, and whatever Roman forces there were, stood confronting Hannibal sufficiently declared," etc.—Spem nullam aliam. Like quidquid virium, a rhetorical exaggeration: there was an army in Spain, and plenty of raw material for new levies.—Uno. The skirmish at the Ticinus. He had been successful with his cavalry in Gaul.—Recentis animi. Characteristic genitive.—Potiebatur. "Would endure," "was for enduring."—Per ambiguum favorem. "By showing friendliness to both sides." (Andrews's Dict.) "Neutrality."

26–36. Ut alia. "Even if."—Continendi in fide sociis. "In keeping their allies loyal." Dative of gerundive, where the common construction is ad continendos socios, or, ut contineret.—Primos defensores. "The defence of the first who had needed assistance."—Consebat. This word, like placetbat, is a formal expression, "gave his opinion." The question was discussed in a council of war.—Mille, peditem jaculatoribus ferme. Ferme is to be taken with the numeral mille, which belongs to jaculatoribus, on which the partitive genitive peditum is dependent.—Sparso. The light Gauls and Numidians.—Ad hoc graves. "Laden besides with booty."—Varia inde pugna, etc. "When, after this, pursuing and retiring as the fortune of the battle changed, they had at last made the struggle even, yet the Romans had a greater report of victory than the report of the enemy." Madvig objects to this comparison of two famae, and to the omission of fama before hostium, and conjectures major tamen hostium cædes, penes Romanos fama victoria fuit.

CHAPTER LIII.

1–15. Ceterum, etc. "But to no one did the victory seem greater or more complete," etc. Compare justum prælimum.—Qua parte. From here down to Romanos, in line 16, is in oratio obliqua.—Foret. This use of forem in a compound tense, instead of essem, is found in the historians; otherwise forem, in the same signification as essem, is used chiefly in conditional propositions, or propositions of purpose. (Madvig, § 377, Obs. 2.)—Militibus. The dative is never equivalent to the genitive. The dative is the person interested in the possession, hence the possession is emphatic; the genitive characterizes the possession by the possessor, hence the possessor is emphatic. (Gildersleeve, Lat. Gram., § 349, Rem. 2.) "The soldiers had their courage restored and refreshed."—Dilatam diminutionem. "The final struggle (to be) delayed."—The perfect infinitive passive after verbs of will and desire generally omits esse. (Madvig, § 407, Obs. 1 and 2.)—Acier. Object of horrere used transitively.—Aut teri. "Or, rather, wasted."—Cis Iberum Hispaniam. "Cisiberian Spain."—Terraque in qua geniti fovent. "Their mother country."

16–22. A change to oratio recta.—Ingemiscant. Present subjunctive used rhetorically for the imperfect. See Madvig, § 347, b, Obs. 1.—Dicions. Possessive genitive with facio. See Madvig, § 281, Obs.—Prætorio. The open place in front of the headquarters, used as a meeting-place for the soldiers.—Tempus propinquum comitiorum. "The approach of the time for the elections." At this period the consuls entered office on the Ides of March.

27–41. Cerneret. "Clearly saw."—Haud diffidebat. The negative haud is rare in model prose before a verb, except in the phrase haud scio an.—Dum... esset, etc. The subjunctive, as giving Hannibal’s reasons for desiring a battle.—Cessaretur. Impersonal. Cesso implies blamable remissness or cowardly delay.—Insidiis. Dative of object for which.—Pænus. The national name is introduced close to insidiis to suggest Punica fides. "He, being a Punic, began to look about for a place for an ambuscade"—Φοίνιξ ὄν, not ὁ Φοίνιξ.
CHAPTER LIV.

3-15. Inculta. See chap. xxv., line 33.—Equites tegendo. The dative gerund with an accusative. Madvig on the passage remarks, "I do not know a single undoubted instance in prose where the dative of the gerund governs an accusative." For the case of tegendo, see again, Madvig, Gr., § 415.—Magoni ait. Observe dative after ait.—Centenos. "A hundred from each class of troops."—Prætorium. "His staff," which accompanied him on his reconnaissance.—Singularis vobis novenos. "Nine apiece for each of you."—Similes vestri. Similis governs the genitive and dative. (Madvig, § 290, f.)—Quem insideatis. "For you to take post in."

17-23. Magoni. "For Mago's use." Dative of advantage.—Transgressos...obequitare jubet. "Orders to cross the Trebia and ride up to," etc.—Injerto certamine. "When a battle had been brought on."—Ceteris ducibus. That is, Mago and his officers.—Instratis. "Saddled."

—Ad destinatum, i. e., ad id quod ante destinaverat.—Brumae. Literally, "Of the shortest day."—Ad hoc. "In addition to this," namely, the bad state of the weather.—Quidquid...appropiiquadant. "With every step they took towards the breeze of the river." So quidquid progradior.—Ut vero, etc. "But when, in pursuit of the retiring Numidians," etc. Refugientes is accusative with Numidas.—Tum utique. "Then certainly."—Ut vix, etc. "So that they scarcely had the power of holding their arms."—Et simul, etc. "And at the same time they were faint with fatigue and, as the day was now advancing, with hunger."

CHAPTER LV.

6-14. Locat. Namely, Hannibal.—Quod virium quod roboris erat. "Which was the strength and flower of his army."—In cornibus. "On the wings."—Et ab cornibus, etc. "And placed his elephants at intervals in each direction from the wings." They seem to have been stationed before the cavalry.—Resistentibus subito. "Suddenly halting."—Receptui. Dative of the object for which.—Socium. Genitive plural. (Madvig, § 37, Obs. 4.)

18-27. Leves armaturae. "Bodies of light troops." The Balearices ceased their attack on the legions, and drew off at great speed to the wings.—Equis. Here it is the horses that are demoralized by the elephants; in the epitome of the thirteenth book we read that Lævinus lost a battle with Pyrrhus from the consternation of his soldiers at the sight of these beasts.—Pedestrīs pugna. "The infantry battle." After the Balarions and cavalry had crushed the Roman horse, Hannibal advanced his heavy infantry against the legions, on which, as we have seen, the slingers had made little impression.—Contra. "On the other hand."

31–37. Simul latebras... præterlata est. "As soon as the army had, without suspecting danger, been carried past their ambush."—Vēltīs. Light troops in general, who fought in detached parties.—Avertere et insecuti aversos. "Forced them to turn, and then following them up," etc. (Madvig, § 424, Obs. 2.)—Molē cute. "Owing to the thinness of the skin."

CHAPTER LVI.

1–18. In suos consternatos. "Rushing in wild confusion on their own soldiers;" in suos, sc. milītēs.—Media acie aqī. "To be driven from the middle of the line." Acie is the ablative of the place whence.—Eoque. "And thereby."—In orbem. "So as to form a circle;" or perhaps "in all directions." They had to oppose enemies on all sides.—Media Afrorum acie. "At the centre of the African line." The ablative without a preposition signifying in what way or direction movement is made (so ire publica via), being the designation of place regarded as means or manner.—Gallicis auxiliis. As at the battle of Canna, Hannibal had stationed his weakest troops in the centre.—Interclusis flumin. "For them cut off by the river."—Præ imbrī. "Being hindered by the storm."—Placentiam. Names of towns, as the objects of motion, are in the accusative without a preposition. "They proceeded straightforward to Placentia."

15–32. Eruptiones. "Sallies."—Inter cunctationem ingrediendi. "During their hesitation to enter the river."—Timor hostium. Objective genitive. "Fear inspired by the enemy."—Prope omnes. Seven elephants are mentioned as lost in the attempt to cross the Apennines (in chap. Iviii., line 80); the sole survivor carried Hannibal to the Trasimene lake. (Bk. xxii., chap. ii., line 31.)—Reliquum ex magna parte milītum. That is, "et ex magna parte quod milītum reliquum est." "What was left of the army, for the most part."—Trajicerent... sensere. Observe the change of the subjects of the verbs, trajicerent Romani; sensere Pāni.—Tacito agmine. See chap. xlviili., line 13.—Pado. See note on media acie, line 8, above. "Having crossed (by) the Po."
CHAPTER LVII.

1–16. Romam. A mere local designation, while urbm Romanam is the object of their patriotic pride and love.—Quos altos duces, etc. The accusative and infinitive in oratio obliqua represent rhetorical questions put in the indicative in oratio recta.—Falleret. "Escape detection."—Id quod. Weissenborn remarks that Id quod cannot begin a period, and that therefore we ought to place a comma only after transgressus, and write id without the capital letter.—C. Flaminius. This was his second consulship.

19–31. Ut quæque, etc. "Where the country was too rough for them."—Emporium. The port of Placentia.—Plurimum. This word is to be taken with spei. "As he had placed most of his hope with regard to success in the concealment of his enterprise." Hannibal had no siege-train, and avoided sieges in consequence.—Consul Scipio.—Quadrato agmine. "In regular order of battle."—Presidium. "The post;" that is, the castellum of line 23.

33–48. Romanis munitorum. "Fortified by the Romans." For this dative of the agent, see Madvig, § 250, a; Zumpt, § 419.—Frequentaverant, etc. "Immigrants from the neighboring tribes around had filled or crowded the place."—Agmina ... acies. "Detachments on the march rather than a regular line of battle." The reference, of course, is only to the inhabitants of Victumvæ.—Ex altera ... in altera. These two expressions do not differ in meaning.—Scribentibus. "Historians."—Adeo. "To such an extent."—Exemplum. "A display of all licentiousness, cruelty, and inhuman insolence exhibited towards the wretched inhabitants."

CHAPTER LVIII.

2–12. Prima ac dubia. "At the first doubtful signs of spring."—Adjuncturus. "For the purpose of uniting." (Madvig, § 424, Obs. ü.).—Aut vi aut voluntate. "By exerting force or persuading them to join him voluntarily."—Ut Alpium, etc. "As to surpass even the storms of the Alps in founlessness."—Aut arma, etc. "Either their arms had to be dropped, or, if they struggled against it, they were dashed to the ground, whirled round by the eddy (of the wind)."—Vertice. The vortex. The diversity of meanings of vortex leads the grammarians to consider the two forms of it as two distinct words. An eddy, the summit of a mountain, the human head, can be all called vertices. (Quinctilian, viii., 2.)—Nec reciprocare animam sineret. "And did not permit respiration."—Ingenti. Much more than magnus, "prodigious," "monstrous."
18-27. Explicare nec statuere. "To unfold their tents, or erect the poles."—Percindente vento. "The wind tearing into ribbons," namely, the canvas or skins forming the tents.—Aqua. "The rain."—Strage. "Prostrate mass."—Agitando, etc. "By shaking their limbs." Supply coeperunt, from captus est, before movere et recipere.

Polybius does not mention this expedition, in which Hannibal sought to annex Etruria before the Romans could raise a new army. —As a piece of composition, this description of a tormento in the Apennines is worthy of careful study, both for the skill with which the climax is worked up, and for the arrangement of the words and clauses.

CHAPTER LIX.

CHAPTER LX.

1-15. Dum... geruntur. Madvig, § 336, Obs. 2.—Emporius. A colony of Massilia.—Lacetani. Perhaps an error for Laletani; the former were in the interior.—Romane dicionis fecit. See note on chap. liii., line 20.—Ad maritinos. Ad is equivalent to apud, "among."—In mediterraneis ac montanis. "In the interior and the mountains." See chap. xxxi., "Mediterranea Gallia."—Ad ferociores jam gentes. Compare chap. xxxviii., line 21. Jam is to be taken with the comparative, and marks a distinction from the tribes previously alluded to.—Societas. "An offensive alliance."—Ad presidium. Equivalent to ut presideret.—Obviam eundum. "That he must meet the enemy."
"That might be used against the consul."—Privatus. "Not having entered on his office."

25-39. Non cum senatu, etc. From these words down to sumpturm, in line 39, the sentiments of the senators are expressed in oratio obliqua.—Consulem ante inauspiciato factum. "Having been on a previous occasion made consul without due auspices."—Ex ipsa acie. The recall reached Flaminianus on the eve of battle; he refused to read it till the affair was over, and then pointed to the issue of the fight as a proof of his being duly created.—In Capitolium, etc. The passage gives a summary of the ceremonies which the consul on taking office had to go through. He left his house clad in the praetexta, and proceeded to the Capitol, where, in the temple of Jupiter, he made solemn vows for the state; he then held a meeting of the Senate, in which the time for the feriae Latiae was appointed.—Optimi maximi. A white bull was offered to Jupiter Opt. Max.—In monte. "On the Alban mount," where the temple of Jupiter Latialis stood.—Auspiciato profectus. This is in reference to a second visit to the Capitol, whither the consul again proceeded after taking the auspices, to vow certain gifts in case of success, and assume the paludamentum, or purple military cloak of a commander. He then marched away, preceded by his lictors, in full pomp and circumstance.—Profectus. "Having marched from his house."—Clam. "Without any one knowing it."—Furtim. "Like a thief."—Solum vertisset. "Changed his country.” A technical term for going into exile: Cic., Pro domo; chap. xxx., "vertendi, hoc est, mutandi soli causa."—Magis pro majestate. "In a manner more befitting the majesty," etc. Magis is used because the words pro majestate contain an adverbial conception.—Videlicit. Ironically, "forsooth."—Apud penates suos. "At the altars of his penates.”

40-52. Retrahendumque. "Brought back," in case of his not obeying the recall.—Procul. "At a distance," i. e., among those who stood at a distance from the sacrifice.—Quid trepidaretur. After ignorant. "Who knew not why there was any alarm."—Terroris. "Terrible occurrence."—A. C. Atibus praetore. These were Scipio's legions. Scipio had returned to Rome.—Exeritus duci est caecus. An anacoluthon for consul exercitum ducere caepit.
BOOK XXII.

CHAPTER I.

1–16. Cum Hannibal. The so-called cum inversum with the indicative connects an event with circumstances previously mentioned. (Madvig, § 358, Obs. 1.)—Ex hibernis. His winter-quarters were on the Po, whither he had gone from Liguria.—Nequidquam. To be taken with intolerandis frigoribus. "In vain through the intolerable cold." Ablative of cause why the attempt was made "in vain."—Ante. See bk. xxi., chap. lviii., for this previous movement.—Moratus cum periculo. "Having stayed there with immense danger;" or, "his stay being attended with danger," etc.—Pro eo ut, etc. "Instead of themselves carrying off and driving away plunder from the lands of others."—Suas. Emphatic position. "Their own."—Utriusque partis exercitum. "The armies of either party."—Viderent. Subjunctive after postquam is rare in oratio recta. Here it indicates causal as well as temporal relation.—Ipsorum inter se fraudem. "By their treachery to each other."—Tegumenta. Polybius more accurately says false hair. "Wigs."—Errone. "By producing mistakes as to his identity."—Maturius. "Sooner than he otherwise would."

18–24. De re publica retulisse. "Made a motion about (the state of) the republic." See Cæsar, Bell. Civil., i., 1.—Duos se. From these words down to posse is in oratio obliqua, and hence the question, Quod enim, etc., is in the accusative and infinitive. (Madvig, § 405.)—Id. Namely, the right of taking auspices.—In monte. "The Alban mount." See bk. xxi., chap. ixiii., line 33.—A domo. The magistrates by their creation obtained the auspicium, but it was the rule that they should take the auspices for the first time on the day of their entrance upon office, and in Rome itself; so that they might take to the scene of their duties this right, as derived from the tutelary gods of their households and their country.—Nec privatum. Opposed to magistratus in line 21. "The auspices did not follow a man who had no official character."

27–42. Militibus. Namely, Roman soldiers.—Equiti. In the field the posts were visited by an eques; "a knight," not a trooper.—Solis orbem minui visum. A partial eclipse of the sun took place.—Cælo. "From heaven."—Prænesti. Ablative case.—Aquas Cæretes. "The medicinal springs at Cære."—Fontem Herculis. One of the springs at Cære.—Attematas. See bk. xxi., chap. lxiii., line 15.—Ita scriptam. "With the inscription."—Appia via. "In the Appian Way." When the road denotes place only, the preposition in is more usually employed.—Minoribus dictu. "Too small to be mentioned."
47 48. Exspectus. Namely, by the omnia.—Procurator. “Be expiated.”—Lavo. The speculum bossa.—Curdi case diris. “Pleasing to me.”—Conclusio. Ablative case.—Preferentur. Supply fornix in sunt lect and translate—prescribed.” These Sibylline books seem to have contained only formulae of expiation, which were read aloud by the decemvirs.

52 64. Pando quasi seuista. See bk. xxii. chap. xii„ line 21.—Quanta. Namely, posse.—Quin et. “Nay, even.”—Foramie. The goddess of freemen.—Decemviri. Livy enumerates in this chapter the various ceremonies which took place during the year.—Saturales. The Saturales had long been in existence, and the passage must therefore mean that new ceremonies were introduced, or a more solemn proclamation to observe them made.

CHAPTER II

1-18. Dilecta. The dative case.—Arretium. Livy thus makes Flamininus march from Ariminum to Arretium; Polybius sends Flamininus direct from Rome to Etruria, and Servilius to Ariminum, to cover the two great routes leading to Rome which we know as the Cassian and Flaminian roads.—Solito magis. “More than usual.” Solito, ablative neuter.—Necubi. With a subjunctive of purpose; necubi is equivalent to ut nusquam.—Gallos. Whom he had enrolled during the winter.—Equites. Heavy cavalry.—Cogere aegmen. “Bring up the rear.”—Mollis. In bk. x., chap. xxvii., Livy describes the Gauls as being physically and morally indisposed for long exertion.—Dilaborentur. Imperfect. “Should attempt to struggle or halt.”—Qua. Namely, via.—Pratals. “Abrupt,” not deepening gradually.—Hauti pene; etc. “Although almost swallowed up in the mud... yet,” etc.

30 35. Oculus. Ablative of the part affected.—Elephanto vectus... tumen. “Although riding on the elephant... yet.”—Capitur. “Receives an injury.” The eye affected was the right, and the sight was permanently impaired. The notion that he became blind of one eye seems derived from Juvenal’s line, Cum Getula ducem portaret bellum luscam.
CHAPTER III.

Facilities for providing supplies."—In rem. "Of use."—Summa.
Is to be taken with cura.—Inquirendo exsequebatur. "He thoroughly investigated."—Italico. Genitive dependent on in primis.—Feesulas inter. Prepositions of more than two syllables follow relative pronouns only in the earlier writers; Livy sometimes, and Tacitus often, employ this inversion with substantives in imitation of the poets.
—Frumentii ac peroris. Genitive after opulentus as an adjective of fulness, which, however, still retains a trace of its participial nature, and therefore admits of copia in the ablative.

13-16. Consul ferox. "The consul was," etc.—Ab. "In consequence of."—Non modo. For non modo non. If the predicate is common to both clauses, but stands with the latter, the non after non modo is often omitted, the negation in ne...quidem being referred to the whole.—Civilibus. In his agrarian law for dividing the ager Gallicus Picens.—Bellicis. His victory over the Gauls.

19-36. Læva. "On the left hand."—Feesulas petens. This is scareely reconcilable with læva, and Weissenborn suggests a Feesulis Senam petens. Polybius describes him as retiring from near Fæsulae.—Medio agro. Ablative of the way. See bk. xxi., chap. xxxviii., line 20.— Prædictum. "Absolutely used, "for booty."—Ferri agique. "Car-rried off and driven away;" like rapere et agere in chap. i., line 6.— Sumum deditus. "A disgrace to him personally."—Ceteris omnibus.
"All the others in the council of war;" namely, the Legati, Tribunes, and Primipili. —Collegam. From here down to cohibendum are remarks made in the council. The other consul was in Ariminum.— Auxilis levium armorum. "Light-armed auxiliaries." Genitive of quality.—Signum. The signal for marching was given by the trumpet; for battle, by a purple or scarlet flag on the pretorium, or general's tent.—Moverimus...acciderint. Generally taken as future per-feccts. Observe the asyndeton in this speech.

38-48. Signa convelli. "To pluck up the standards and decamp." (Andrews’s Dict.)—Omni vi, etc. "Although the standard-bearer tried with all his might to pluck it up."—Num litteras, etc. "Have you a letter too prohibiting me," etc. Some editions have qui retent. "to prohibit."—Primiobus. The same persons as the ceteri in line 27.— In vulgus. "In general."—Militis. "The private soldier." We must remember that Flaminius was dear to them as a Plebeian, an enemy of the Patricians, and the proposer of an agrarian law. So great was the enthusiasm among the populace that the army was ac-companyed by crowds, carrying chains and handcuffs for the prisoners they hoped to buy cheap.
CHAPTER IV.

The traveller from Cortona has on his left and in front of him a ridge of hills bending down towards the lake of Trasimene, called by Livy "montes Cortonenses," and now named the Gualandra. These hills he approaches at Ossaja, where the road begins to rise a little, but does not pass into the roots of the mountains until the sixty-seventh milestone from Florence. The ascent thence is not steep but perpetual, and continues for twenty minutes. The lake is soon seen below on the right, with Borghetto, a round tower, close to the water; and the undulating hills, covered with wood, among which the road winds, sink by degrees into the marshes near the tower. Lower than the road, down to the right, amid these woody hillocks, Hannibal placed his horse; above the road to the left is a ruin called the tower of Hannibal. The traveller soon finds himself in a vale enclosed to the left and in front by the Gualandra hills, bending round in a segment larger than a semicircle, and running down at each end to the lake, which forms the chord of the arc. A small stream called the Sanguinetto flows from the Gualandra into the lake, and an open spot between it and the hills is still pointed out as the principal scene of slaughter.—(Hobhouse.)

3–10. Hosti. Dative. See bk. xxi., chap. liii., line 4. — Perven- rant. Hannibal and his army.—Nata. "Destined by nature for," etc.—Subit. "Comes close under the hills."—Ubi . . . consideret. "To encamp in person, with," etc. A sentence of design, and therefore with the verb in the subjunctive. Livy's account of the scene differs widely from that given by Polybius, who places the field of battle not between the lake and the mountains, but in a narrow pass with mountains on both sides and the lake in the rear.

15–28. Inexplorato. "Without reconnoitring." See Madvig, § 429, Obs. 1, for this use of the ablative of the participle. — Ex adverso. "In front of him."—Ab tergo ac super caput insidiae. "The ambuscades in his rear and overhead escaped his notice." — Clausum habuit. "When he had the army shut in," etc. See Madvig, § 427. —Campo . . . montibus. Ablative of the place where, without preposition. See Madvig, § 273. Compare bk. i., chap. xxxiv., carpento sedenti.—Inter se conspicuta. "Mutually visible;" visible to each other, not to the Romans.—Clamore prius. The word prius belongs to sensit, not to orto. "The Romans perceived by the shouts from all sides that they were surrounded, before that they clearly saw (the surrounding enemy)."—Expediri arma. The soldier had to bring in front his shield, suspended on the march behind his left shoulder; put on his helmet, which hung by a strap behind his right shoulder; lay down the stakes he carried to form palisades with, and grasp his pilum.
CHAPTER V.

1–6. Ut in re trepida. "Considering the confusion."—Vertente se quoque. "As each turned at the varied shouts:" quoque is ablative of quisque.—Nec enim...periculi esse. Oratio obliqua without the introductory word of saying.

11–17. Tantum aberat ut. In this phrase abest is impersonal. (Madvig, § 440, Obs. 1.)—Signa denotes the maniple; ordines, the century; locum, the place in the ranks.—Ad genitus. "At the groans," i.e., on hearing, etc.—Vulnerum. "On account of, or caused by the wounds." A very free use of the genitive; or, vulnerum may be the abstract for the concrete, "wounded."—Strepentium pavientiunqve. "Of the shouting assailants and the terror-stricken defenders."

20–30. Impetus capti, not facti; because a special exertion is meant. "Charges were hurriedly and desperately made."—Claudebat. The imperfect, as the tense of continuance, between the perfects capti and apparuit. "Were still confining them."—De integro. "Afresh."—Non illa ordinata. "Not that well-known duly arranged."—Principes, hastati, triarii. The army was formed in three lines, the hastati in the first, the principes in the second, the triarii in the third line. Livy puts the principes first, because that was their position when a battle was recommenced after the defeat of the first line of hastati.—Cohorte. A tenth part of a legion, consisting of three manipuli.—Eum motum terrae. The story of the earthquake "that reeled unhedged away" is from Cælius Antipater. As the names of the cities overthrown by it are not given, we have no means of judging whether the line of the shock was likely to pass through the Trasimene lake.

CHAPTER VI.

3–16. Robora virorum. "Picked troops."—Insuber. One of the Gallic tribe which Flaminius had conquered in his first consulship.—Ducario. "His name was Ducarius." In the expression...nomen est, the name itself may stand either in the nominative in apposition to nomen, or in the dative by attraction, as is more often the case. Here supply ei.—Manibus. "To the Manes."—Infesto. Infestus implies hostile attack, infensus hostile disposition.—Triarii. "Some triarii."

18–33. Per omnia arta, etc. Compare bk. xxi., chap. xxxii., line 31: "per confragosa omnia." "Through nothing but deserts and precipices."—Fuere quos...impulerit. The characteristic relative; for the mood, see Madvig, § 365.—Capessere. Infinitive after impulerit, a poetical conclusion; the ordinary prose form being ad with the gerundive. — Ac is used, not et, because stress is to be laid on the following phrase. — Sine spe. "Hopeless." — Cum incalescente sole dispulsa, etc. "Where the scattering of the mist by the increasing heat of the sun," etc. — Perditas res. "The utter ruin and foul overthrow of the Roman army." Facta is to be taken with stratum.

37-40. Extrema belongs to fames. Nägelsbach (Stilistik, § 23, 4) takes it with cetera, and translates, "in addition to their other afflictions." — Punica religione. The usual sneer at Punic faith. See bk. xxi., chap. iv., line 34. — Atque. Like ac in line 28. Hannibal at once stated that his subordinate Maharbal had exceeded his commission in making such a promise.

CHAPTER VII.

2-15. Inter paucas memorata. "Especially memorable." Inter paucas does not refer to the number of the Roman defeats, but to the degree in which this one was remarkable. — Multiplex. "Many times the number given above." — Haustum ex vano. "Drawn from an untrustworthy source." — Scribentium. "Historians." — Fabium. Fabius Pictor. See bk. i., chap. xliiv., line 10. — Potissimum auctorem habui. "I have regarded as the best authority." — Dimissis. Before captivorum supply iis, the antecedent to the relative clause qui ... essent. — Flaminii corpus. Hannibal, in his care for his dead opponents, exhibits a marked contrast to Nero in his treatment of Hasdrubal's corpse. After the battle of Cannae, the body of Æmilius was, according to some accounts, duly buried by the Carthaginians. — Magna cum cura. Cum is added to the ablative of manner when reference is made to something accompanying the action. (Madvig, § 257.)

19-25. Repens is to be joined with adlata, and translated as if an adverb. "Unexpectedly reported." — Curiam. The edifice in which the magistrates were assembled. — Domos. "Home." See bk. xxi., chap. lxi., line 30. — Alius ... impetis referunt. A partitive expression involving a notion of plurality is often joined with a plural predicate. Cicero alone avoids the construction.

28-46. Quot casus exercitus victi. Namely, death, wounds, imprisonment, flight. — Meruerant. "Had served." — Deinceps. An adverb, used as an adjective to diebus, coordinate with postero. "Following days." — Major multitudo. The women were more numerous, as most of the men were with the army. — Circumfundeantur. The imperfect of continuance. — Cerneres. The ideal second person. — Gaudia. The plural of abstract nouns denotes a repetition of the thing, or, as here, its existence in different objects.—Resisti posset. "Resistance could be made."

CHAPTER VIII.

1-13. Repens. See previous chapter, line 19.—Ducere ... aestimare. Historic infinitives.—Quamvis levis causa. "A sickness however slight."—Quam valido. For quam in valido. The preposition is generally, in Cicero always, repeated after disjunctive conjunctions.—Inciderit. The future perfect from the speaker's point of view. Madvig reads incideret.—Non rerum, etc. "Not by the magnitude of the events, but by the weakness of its powers."—Magnitudine. The ablative of measure. The preposition ex and ab are generally used in the earlier writers.

16-25. Dictatorem dicendum. "To the appointment of a dictator." Preposition ad is omitted. A dictator was appointed, on the order of the Senate or people, by one of the consuls; and during his continuance in office, other magistracies, except the tribuneship of the people, were subordinate to him, and the consuls were not allowed to display any ensigns of authority before him. As the office was held for six months, and as Fabius laid it down in autumn, this creation must have been made in April. The battle at Lake Trasimene must, therefore, have been fought in early spring, although, from the confusion in the Roman calendar, Ovid, in his Fasti, gives as the date the 28th of June. M. Minucius had been consul four years before he became magister equestrium.—Dimicandum esse. Infinitive in oratio obliqua, after a word of saying implied in negotium dat.

CHAPTER IX.

1-7. Recto itinere. Hannibal after the battle marched eastward, till he reached the road which had been built by his unfortunate opponent, Flaminius, during his censorship, and followed it through Umbria.—Perpopulato. Perfect participle in a passive sense.—Moles. "The size and strength, and the difficulty of storming the city."—Romanus urbis. Emphatic position.—Copia ... praeda. The former is "provisions;" the latter, "plunder to be carried off."

10-19. Aliquot dies. This time was occupied in arming the troops in Roman fashion.—Hibernis itineribus, etc. Ablatives after adfectus.—Ad eventum. "With reference to the event."—Levi. "With light loss."—Facili. "With small exertion."—Satis quieti datum. "When he had satisfied the longing for repose of soldiers who delighted in," etc. Gaudentibus sc. miliibus may either be a second dative after datum, or, as Fabri takes it, an ablative absolute of the reason why the halt was so short.— Marsos, Marrucinios, Pelignos. Names of the peoples put for names of the territories.— Apulia. Dative after proximan. — Præliis actis. After the analogy of bellum agere.

23–38. Dictator. Livy and the other historians call him so, in spite of the statement in the previous chapter.— Iterum. Fabius had been dictator four years before, for holding the comitia for the election of consuls.— Inscitia. “Inexperience.”— Quæque, etc. “And that the gods themselves must be consulted as to what means of expiating,” etc.— Adire libros. This expression, like adire oracula, means “to approach for the purpose of consulting.”— Quod ejus beli, etc. “That, as the vow which had been made to Mars on account of this war had not been rightly performed, it must be performed afresh,” etc.— Faciundum esse. Infinitive in oratio oblique after rettuleraunt.— Erycinae. A Phœnician goddess identified with Venus, whose temple was at Mt. Eryx, in Sicily. She is mentioned in connection with Anneas, in Virgil, Æn., v., 759.— Bellatum esset... permansisset. The pluperfect in oratio oblique representing the future perfect in oratio recta: see the formula in chap. x., line 9.— Ex collegiis sententiae, etc. “That all these things be rightly done according to the directions of the college of Pontifices.”

CHAPTER X.

2–4. Consulente collegio prætorum. This seems an erroneous reading, as Æmilius alone was commissioned. Weissenborn approves Lipsius’s reading, consulente collegium prætorum; collegium being the college of Pontiffs, in whose name the pontifex maximus replies.— Injussu. “Without the command.”

6–22. Velitis jubeatis. With these words the form of proposing a law in the comitia began; and ended with hæc vos, Quirites, rogo. The mood, therefore, here is the subjunctive of indirect interrogation.— Populus Romanus Quiritium. The legal style and title was either the above, or Populus Romanus Quirites, with et omitted, or Pop. Rom. Quiritæque.— Duellis. Livy uses this archaic form of bellum only in ancient formulas.— Duit. Old present subjunctive of do. Observe the alliteration here.— Profana. “Not yet dedicated to any god.”— Fieri. “To be offered.” Zumpt regards the clause from id fieri as in apposition to donum. Weissenborn makes it dependent on jussirit.— Jussirit. Singular, as senatus populusque are regarded as constituting one idea.— Lege. “Rites.”— Facito. The future or second imperative, third person singular. This imperative looks forward to contingent fulfilment, and occurs in laws and the like.— Fœcit. Old perfect subjunctive of facio. The performance is assumed to have taken place, while faciet would denote simple futurity.—Neque. Here equivalent to et ne.—Rumpet. “Injure.”—Clepsit. Perfect subjunctive from clepo.—Cui cepsum erit. “From whom it shall have been stolen.”—Atro die. A day on which some calamity had befallen the state, and on which sacrifices were forbidden.—Anteidea. Old form of antea.—Ac. An equivalent toquam.—Faxitum. Perfect subjunctive passive. These forms, occurring in old laws, and in Plautus, seem to arise from adding s to the stem, as in the Greek future. See Roby’s Grammar, § 619; Madvig, § 115; Zumpt, § 161.—Solutus liber. The conjunction et is omitted, as in Patres conscripti and other old phrases.

23–36. Aëris. Supply assium. In the dictatorship of Fabius, the as had been reduced to an ounce in weight, but in religious affairs the original pound as was meant.—Bubus Jovi. Supply fieri, with which verb the ablative of the thing offered is most common.—Iere. Plural predicate, with collective noun as subject.—Agrestium. Supply s antecedent to quos contingebat cura.—In aliqua fortuna sua. “In concern for any prosperity of their own;” as opposed to publica cura, “anxiety for the state.” The gods here named are the twelve Divi maiores or consentes, and are all genuine Italian deities with the exception of Apollo, whose worship was early introduced; he seems here to be in the place of Dianus or Janus.—Cujus ... esset. In oratio obliqua, as being a quotation from the books of fate.

CHAPTER XI.

2–21. Rettulit. “Made a motion.” He brought the question before them by asking each, Quid de ... censes?—Scriberet. “Enrol.”—Ere publica. “For the interest of the state.”—Duceret. Subjunctive, as dependent on the subjunctive ageret. “As he thought.”—Tibur. Accusative of the place to which the troops had to proceed, for the purpose of being embodied.—Qua. “Through which.” Ablative of the way.—Ne cujus. After ne and si, quis has the meaning of aliquis.—Flaminia. The celebrated Flaminian Way from Rome to Ariminum, built by the late consul during his censorship.—Viatorem. An official attached to a magistrate, “an apparitor.”—Dictatorem. Not se, because the respect was due to him only in the character of dictator.

23–32. Vetustate. The last dictator, rei gerundæ causa, not merely for holding the comitia, had been appointed in the First Punic War, after the defeat of Drepans, thirty-two years before Fabius’s appointment.—Cosanum. A harbor on the coast of Etruria.—Ad urbem Romanam. Namely, those which were in reserve in the dock-yards at the city.—Quibus liber esset. "Those, that is, who had children," and therefore a stake in the country.—In verba juraverunt. "Took the oath" to proceed to the rendezvous. See chap. xxxviii., line 5.

CHAPTER XII.

6-19. Sannae cum cara. See chap. iii., line 9, and note there.—Commissarum. "Determined not to put himself in the power of fortune." (Madvig, § 424, Ob. 5.) In the older writers, the future participle is generally used with some part of the verb sum, and expresses relations of time only.—Quo primum die. "Immediately on the day when," etc.—Ediceret. "Drew out his forces."—Debellatum et concessum esse. The perfect infinitive passive used impersonally. "That the war was over, and that there was clearly a withdrawal of all claims to valor or glory."—Esset ... quaessisset. Subjunctive with quod; as giving Hannibal's reasons in the form of an indirect quotation from his thoughts.

21-38. Exemplo. "From the very first."—Modo ... modo. These words are to be taken with abibat and subsistebat. The imperfect implies repetition of the action.—Occultus. "In secret."—Usus necessario. Here only pabulum et ligna had to be sought, for provisions were carried by the troops.—In subitos tumultus. "Against sudden attacks."—Univero periculo. That is, in a general battle on which everything was staked.

39-45. Nihil aliud quam. "Nothing else than the fact that he was subordinate to the dictator."—Mora. Dative after habuit.—Pro. "Instead of."—Isquendoque. "And, by disparaging his superior, sought to raise himself."

CHAPTER XIII.

1-17. Ex Hirpinis. "From the territory of the Hirpini." This tribe is mentioned as distinct from the Samnites; the confederation of the Samnite tribes being broken up by the successes of the Romans. Samnium lies north of the Hirpini. This detour and the story of the Capuan equites are omitted by Polybius.—De industria. "Purposely."—In aquam certamen. "A battle on level ground;" so in aqua in chap. xii., line 26.—Copiam fore. "There would be an opportunity for gaining possession of Capua."—Res major quam auctores. "The matter was too great to be undertaken on the assurances of these men." Literally, "greater than the vouchers."—Alteris. Adverbially, "by turns."—Etiam atque etiam. The words etiam atque etiam are to be taken with monitos.—Principum. "Of the senators." The aristocracy in the Italian towns was, as a body, in favor of Rome; if, therefore, any of its members could be gained, the movement would assume a national character.

CHAPTER XIV.

1–7. Castra. Hannibal's camp.—Fabio ducente. "When Fabius was leading his army."—Soltio. "Than usual." Compare chap. ii., line 7.—Prohibendum populationibus. The usual construction with prohibere is to put the hostile person or thing in the accusative. (Zumpt, § 469.)

11–51. Speech of Minucius. Livy puts into the mouth of the magister equitum the sentiments of the influential party who undervalued Fabius, and clamored for a quick and decisive engagement.—Ut rem fruendum oculis. "As a thing pleasant to be looked at."—Alterius. Here alter = alius quis.—Pro. An interjection. "Alas!" "This is, perhaps, not an imitation of a natural sound, but a word" (Roby, Gram., § 999).—Ut praeter quam. "That coast of theirs along which they thought it a disgrace for Punic ships to cruise."—Qui modo, etc. "We, who just now, in our indignation that Saguntum was stormed, were invoking," etc. Observe the gerund nearly equivalent to a present participle active.—Romane. Emphatic position.—Strepunt aures. "Our ears ring."—Invocantium. To be joined with sociorum; "invoking us often more than the aid of the gods."—Æstivos saltus. The woody highlands, to which the cattle are driven in summer.—Devias. "Sequestered paths."—Gallorum. "In the possession of the Gauls."—Hannibali. "For Hannibal," etc.—Cum esset. "Although Janiculum was a high enough spot for him to sit down in and look abroad at the enemy."—Qua nunc busta sunt. When a preceding word is explained by a substantive with esse, the relative takes the gender and number of the explanatory substantive.—Debellari posse. "That the war can be concluded."—Armari oportet deducendas. Weissborn, after Heerwagen, reads armari oportet et descendas . . . et vir cum viro congregiaris. If this reading is adopted, observe the change of construction: oportet, signifying "duty," takes the accusative with the infinitive; signifying "it is necessary," the subjunctive without at. (Madvig, § 378, Obs. 1.)
NOTES.

54, 55. Militaris suffragii esset. Compare for this use of the genitive with the verb sum the frequent dicionis esse.—Ferebant. "The soldiers affirmed."—Duces. This reading is a conjecture by Gronovius, "as their leader."

CHAPTER XV.

2-17. Prius ab illis invictum. A preferable reading is ab aliis.—Reliquum aestatis. See note on bk. xxi., chap. xxxiii., line 21.—Ab spe, etc. "The hope of the battle which he had sought for with all his power."—Summa ope. Ablative of manner, qualifying petiti.—Circumspectaret. "Was looking about for."—Presentis copiae. "Affording supplies for the present, not for the whole year."—Arbusa. In free apposition with regio.—Sciret. Namely, Fabius.—Intraverat. Sc. Hannibal.—Dixempta. "Cut in two by the River Vulturnus."

20 85. Qui ex turba, etc. "Who being one of the crowd of young men."—Vagos. "Roaming."—Occatus certamine. "Seized with a longing for an engagement."—Eccidunt. Namely, animo. Compare Virg., Æn., i., 26.—Quantum tuto posset, etc. "Having advanced as far as he safely could."—Ipsum cum fatigatione equorum. "The commander himself with his tired horses and men." The abstract fatigatio is used for the concrete fatigati.—Summa, etc. "The supreme command of the cavalry."—Avertisset hostes. "Had compelled the enemy to turn."—Omni parte virium. Not only were his men and horses exhausted, but also inferior in number.

41-44. Appice. Supply via. Limes here means the same as the usual agger. "By the embankment of the Appian Way."—In viam. Polybius states that the road was occupied by 4000 men, while the dictator with the bulk of his forces took post on the hills to the right. —Duo milia. Supply passuum. "Two miles."

CHAPTER XVI.

3-9. Æquiore loco. "In a more advantageous position."—Carptim. "Piecemeal." Adverb, from carpere, "to pluck at." Repeated attacks on different sides were made to cut off stragglers or detached bodies of troops.—Ex voluntate. "In accordance with the wish."

10-26. Videri. Historic infinitive.—Tantum sociorum. "So many wealthy allies."—Subveheret is in the singular, as the various places named are considered as forming one idea.—\textit{Suis artibus}, defined in bk. xxi., chap. xxxiv., line 3, by \textit{fraude et insidiis}.—\textit{Necubi \ldots ad-gredeteretur}. To be taken with \textit{superandum}. "Callicula had to be crossed in order that the Romans might not attack," etc.—\textit{Oculorum}. The objective genitive. "A trick for their eyes."—\textit{Hasdrubali}. According to Polybius, this officer was at the head of his baggage-train.—\textit{Accensis cornibus}. "Their horns set on fire." By hypallage for "the fagots on their horns set on fire." Compare Samson's stratagem, Judges xv., 4.—\textit{Super saltus}. "Over the passes occupied by the enemy."

\section*{CHAPTER XVII.}

5–26. \textit{In adversos montes}. "Up the mountains," by the sides of the pass.—\textit{Ad vivum}. "To the quick."—\textit{Silvis}, etc. "As though the woods had been purposely set on fire, all the bushes around burst into flame."—\textit{Presidio}. "Their post."—\textit{Tutissimum iter}. Polybius assigns as the reason of their ascending to the heights their belief that Hannibal was crossing there.—\textit{Levi armature}. "The light-arme troops."—\textit{Neutros incipientes texit}. "Kept them so that neither began." A kind of prolepsis.—\textit{Hostium}. Genitive after \textit{quibusdam}.

\section*{CHAPTER XVIII.}

3–13. \textit{Munimentis}. Like \textit{castris tenere}; the ablative of place being regarded as manner or means.—\textit{Campestrem}, etc. "An enemy accustomed to the plains, heavily armed, and in regular order of battle."—\textit{Elusit}. See note on bk. xxi., chap. l., line 3.

22–35. \textit{Jugis}. Like \textit{via}. The ablative of the way.—\textit{Agens cum magistro}. "Endeavoring to move the master of the horse."—\textit{Ut \ldots imitetur}. These words are dependent on \textit{agens}, while \textit{ne censaret} is the subjunctive representing the direct imperative. "He must not hold the opinion."—\textit{Proficere}. Infinitive in \textit{oratio obliqua}; a word of saying being implied in \textit{agens}.—\textit{Hae præmonito}. As \textit{moneo} admits in the active an accusative of the person, and also a neuter pronoun in the accusative denoting the advice given, it admits the latter as an object in the passive.

The chapters from the nineteenth to the twenty-second inclusive contain the accounts of the struggle in Spain, continued from bk. xxi., chap. lxi.
6-13. Carthaginae. That is, Carthagina now. Cartagena. The ablative of the place whence.—Necum. The instrumental ablative, usual with verbs denoting military actions.—Quamque parte. His sea or his land forces.—Ideas consulit. "The same determination," that is, to be ready to fight either by sea or by land.—Ad maers. To be taken with delecto, "chosen to serve on board the ships," and in maers supplied before imposita.

18-32. Speculatorius. Namely, mares.—Stere. "Were riding at anchor." A nautical term retained from the old times when the ships were drawn ashore.—Multas et positas. "Many towers placed," etc. The et is pleonastic, as in multa et maxima res.—In terris et castris. A bennidiums, "the camp on land;" while the repetition of ad before mare and asvis implies that some of the sea-forces were on shore ad mare, some left on board.—Aperientibus. "Disclosing to view."—Nihil minus. "Anything rather."—Classem...esse. Oratio obliqua after word of saying implied in jubeat.

28-47. Oris. "The hawsers being unloosed." The hawsers running out from the stern were made fast on shore, the cables were the ascorathia.—Exceatur in. "Ran foul of their anchor."—Teneat. "Keep," i.e., delay them.—Incipit. "Cut," from incidere.—Apparatus. Compare bk. ix., chap. vii., "auxilius apparatu."—Prohibes tecum capere. Prohibere regularly takes the infinitive, instead of the subjunctive with se or quaerimus. (See Madvig, §§ 375, 390.)—Non ab hoste magis quam. "Not so much by the enemy, as," etc.—Temptato pugna. Ablative absolute. The want of a perfect participle active compels the use of such phrases in place of a participle co-ordinate with the preceding one. "Having attempted rather than begun a fight."—Adversi annis. "Of the river with its contrary current."

CHAPTER XX.

19-30. Praevecta. Livy uses compounds with praev where we might expect compounds with præter. So bk. i., chap. xlv., præfuit. Praevési usually is "to ride in front;" translate here, "cruise along."—Transmissum. Impersonal. "A landing was made."—In spem irritam. See note on in mercedem, bk. xx., chap. xliii., line 21.—Cite.
riora. Compare bk. xxi., chap. xxxi., line 3, Mediterranea Gallicae.—Ultimae. "Farther Spain." Livy thinks of the later division of the country into Hispamia ulterior and citerior.—Populi. "States" or "communities."—Amplius centum et viginti. Quam is commonly omitted after plus, amplius, minus, etc.

CHAPTER XXI.

2-17. Per Pannon hostem. "As far as the enemy was concerned." Compare per me licet.—Ipsorem. "Of the Spaniards themselves;" without any interference on Hasdrubal’s part.—Auxiliis. Most probably Spanish.—Ut tumultuariam. "Seeing that they were," etc.—Cedentem. "Still on his retreat."—Alio. "Elsewhither." The power of Carthage in Spain must have been broken by these events, and those previously mentioned in bk. xxi., chaps. ix., lxi.

CHAPTER XXII.

1-18. In provinciam. "Into his province."—Ingens agmine. "Immense in consequence of the train of freight ships."—Oneriarum. Supply navium.—Portum tenuit. "Reached the harbor."—Gerebant. The imperfect of continued action.—Nec ullo. Equivalent to et nullo.—Saguntum. Accusative of place to which.—Ne hueretur. Supply from the context "through the fear," or some similar phrase.—Liberum. Genitive plural. (Madvig, § 87, Obs. 4.)

25-29. Unum atque infame corpus. "One single infamous person."—Id agebat. "He kept in view how he might be," etc. See Andrews’s Dictionary, s. v. ago, III., 7.—Potestatis ejus facere. Ejus is genitive dependent on potestatis, a possessive genitive dependent on facere, like dicionis facere. The clause being a simple relative one, from Livy’s point of view, ejus is used. The point of view of Abetor would require sue.—Unam ... maxime. Here unam strengthens the superlative.

35-43. Metum continuisse ... esse. Oratio obliqua after monet.—Continuisse. "Kept faithful." Supply in sīde here, and with teneat in line 38.—Bostari. Dative after inquit.—Quodnam id, etc. "What that can consist of which will produce suddenly so great an effect."—Nomen. "Reputation."—Credi. "That trust be reposed."

60–69. Ordine, quo, etc. "In the order in which they would have been done if the business were being done on account of the Carthaginians." — In re pari. "In a thing of equal value;" by whichever party it had been done.—Future fuerat. Pluperfect indicative rhetorically used, instead of the subjunctive, to imply the certainty of the result.—Graves, superbo. An asyndeton.—Expertos. In a passive signification; "known by experience."—Quoque. The Romans and Carthaginians also, as well as the Spaniards.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1–11. Hæc, etc. As the events denoted by hæc could not have taken place in any other place but Spain, quoque is out of place; and we can only explain its presence by assuming a confusion of two ideas. "As in Italy, so in Spain too the war went on, and the above-mentioned events took place in the second year," etc.—Ut...ita. As usual, the comparison is best represented in English by "indeed."..."but."—Cernentem. "As he (Hannibal) saw clearly."—Dixerim. Potential subjunctive. (Madvig, § 350.)—Pugnatum fuerat. The pluperfect after postquam generally denotes that some time had elapsed; but Livy uses it when this idea is absent.

12–27. Dictatoris. Objective genitive. "Odium felt for the dictator."—Dolo Hannibalis. To any but a Roman, Hannibal seems to have been actuated by a spirit of chivalrous courtesy.—Dubio. "Admitting a different judgment."—In eo, sc. facto.—Pondo. Indeclinable substantive; here in the accusative.—In militem. "For each soldier."—Rogaretur. A better reading is erogaretur. "Was too slow in being paid."—Publicam. Because he had made the agreement with Hannibal in his public capacity.

CHAPTER XXIV.

2–15. Præserat. Here used absolutely. "Was in command."— Ad urbem. "Having set out for the city."—Pro ingenio. "In accordance with the disposition."—Ferocius quam consistitius. "With more bravery than prudence." This attraction of the second comparative into the form of the first is in the main post-Ciceronian.—Crederet. The potential subjunctive. It was to be expected that he would keep all his men in camp, with such an enemy as Minucius in front of him.—Propius hostem. "Nearer the enemy." The adverb propius generally has this construction; Livy rarely, and Cicero never using it with the dative. With the adjective propior, however, the dative is the more common, Cicero never using the accusative.—Conspicuum. "Visible." Cf. note on bk. ii., chap. lv., line 12.—Intentum. Supply se.

16–22. Propior ei. "Nearer the enemy."—Ad quem capiendum si . . . quia, etc. "And since, if an advance to take it were made openly by day, the enemy," etc.—Contempta. "Contemptible."—Dijecissent. A common military term. "Dislodged."—Exiguum spatii. Accusative of extent.

30–43. Dimicatum auctores sunt. As auctor sum is equivalent to a transitive verb, it takes the construction of a transitive verb. Livy probably follows the history of Fabius Pictor, who depreciated the actions of Minucius. Polybius mentions an attack on Hannibal's camp which was saved by the arrival of Hasdrubal and his foragers.—Bovianis. The locative. "At Bovianum."—Unde erat. The indicative is commonly used by the historians in relative definitions, although they are parts of a quotation. (Madvig, § 369, Obs. 2.)—Toto Sannio. The ablative without a preposition, as totus is joined with it. (Madvig, § 273, c.) This account of Numerius Decimius is to explain how he came to be in command. The allied troops were under Roman officers when joined to the army, but came up from their districts under their own leaders.—Quinque admodum. "About five thousand."—Vanioribus. Livy uses the comparative, because in his opinion the fama victoriae was vana.

CHAPTER XXV.

2–16. Contiones. In the popular assemblies convened by the tribunes of the plebs.—Ut vera, etc. "Granting that," etc.—Id enim negat. "Says that this is not to be borne." As in the common sed enim, an ellipsis is to be supplied; "he must speak, for this is not to be borne."—Ac sedulo. "Ay, and that designedly."—Ducendo bello. "In protracting the war."—Quorum neutra provincia. "Neither of whose provinces." A better reading is quarum.

20–28. Quo jam tamquam, etc. "Out of which, as if from a trans-Iberian district, they had withdrawn before the Carthaginians." Paenis is the dative, quo the ablative of separation.—Legionibus. Ablative of means after tutante.—Tandem ut. "At length, as soon as," etc. —Ut obsidione. "As though freed from a blockade."—Si antiquus, etc. An unreal condition in oratio obliqua. "If the Roman people had retained their ancient spirit, he would have brought in," etc.
CHAPTER XXVI.

1-18. Ex eo genere. To be taken with pecunia relictæ. "The money made by this sort of trade and left to him by his father."—Proclamando. "By bawling." Cicero expressly contrasts a proclama-tor with an orator.—Honores. The smaller offices, such as those of the tresviri capite, deemviri stiliis judicandis, etc.—Dictoria. "Against the dictator."—Acceptavit latum. "Took it to have been passed." This chapter contains a studied contrast between Fabius as proud and unbending, and Varro as vain and courting popularity; and probably does great injustice to the latter. "We are not told that he was ever tribune, and it is without example in Roman history that a mere demagogue, of no family, with no other merits, military or civil, should be raised to such nobility. Even after his defeat at Cannæ, he was employed in various important offices." (Arnold.)
After Canne, his conduct at Cannusium was that of a brave general and a good citizen. He rallied the wreck of his army, and had that supreme courage, which the unfortunate Paulus confessed he had not, the courage to meet a disappointed people, and to bear whatever obloquy or punishment popular feeling and party animosity were likely to heap on him. "The fate of P. Claudius and L. Junius might have warned him of the dangers which threatened a defeated general; he was personally hateful to the prevailing party at Rome; and if the memory of Flamininus was persecuted, notwithstanding his glorious death, what could he look for, a fugitive general from that field where his colleague and all his soldiers had perished?" Nothing can speak more clearly in favor of the man whom historians have so vilified than the resolution of the Senate, composed as it was of bitter political enemies, which thanked him with such noble simplicity;
"because he had not despaired of the republic."
CHAPTER XXVII.

3-19. Hannibale victo. Ablative of cause.—Gloriari. Historic infinitive.—Parum. "Match for."—Tremere, etc. An allusion to L. Papirius Cursor, and his magister equitum Q. Fabius Maximus Rullianus. Fabius attacked the Samnites during the dictator's absence, against his express commands, and gained a brilliant victory. Papirius ordered his execution, and, turning a deaf ear to the entreaties of the soldiers, the Senate, and M. Fabius, the father of the culprit, was only induced by the supplications of the people to spare his life. See bk. viii., chaps. xxx.—xxxv. —Deorum hominumque. The judgment of the gods was shown by their having given him the victory; of the people, by their giving him equal powers.—Alius. Possessive genitive with esse.

24-32. Sibi communicatum cum. The dative is found with communi- care only when a second personal object with cum occurs.—Qua pos- set. Supply non cedere. Translate, "He would never willingly give up that part of the imperium which he could retain, namely," etc.—Consilio. Adverbially joined with gerendarum.—Exercitum. Supply sed.—Socium. Genitive plural.—Se separari. See Zumpt, § 610.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

19-41. Ducenos. "Two hundred apiece."—Deposcer. Historic infinitive.—Dimittit. "He detaches."—Laborantibus suis. "When his men were hard pressed in different places."—Inferiore loco. "From lower ground."—Justa, as opposed to tumultuaria; recta, "face to face," as opposed to ex insidiis.—Prosperae qualifies gesta, from which it is separated for the sake of emphasis.—Eum tumultum, etc. "Such confusion and terror by their attacks on both flanks and on the rear."

CHAPTER XXIX.

2-12. Ita est. "Yes, it is so." (Nägelsbach, § 197.)—Imperio. Ablative of measure or reference.—Hosti. "From the enemy."—Demissa is to be taken with ad auxilium.
14-21. Suos. Their fellow-soldiers. Here, the troops of Minucius. —Pœmus ... Hannibale. The rule that the ablative absolute cannot be used when the idea which forms its subject occurs as the subject in the main proposition is not violated here; Pœmus denotes Hannibal as the representative of his nation, the ablative absolute as simply a person. (Madvig, § 428, Obs. 1.)

CHAPTER XXX.

1-13. Ut colligantur vasa. "That the baggage be packed up."—Omnes qui circa erant. The legates and tribunes.—Tribunal. On the left of the praetorium.—Eius. Sc. of Fabius.—Agmen. The troops of Minucius.—Onereatus ... honoratus. "Which was rather onerous than an honor." For a similar play upon words, see bk. i., chap. Iviii., "hostis pro hospite;" bk. iii., chap. lx., "spreti aut non sperati." Generally in speeches.

14-18. Antiquo, to vote against a new law; abrogo, to vote for the repeal of an old one. In this case the latter is added to correct the former.—Servato ac servatori. "To the preserved and the preserver." —Magisterium. "The mastership." Weissenborn reads, magistrum equitum hos ordinibus suis quemque tenere, and translates, "Order me as master of the horse to retain these, each in his proper rank."

22-30. Perlata. Supply eo, "thither."—Maximum. The cognomen of Quintus Fabius.—Gloria. "His glory."—Sentire. Namely, Hannibal.—Biennio. The length of time within which is put in the ablative with or without in. The second year was not yet ended.—Eam fumam. Madvig omits eam. "In oratio recta in place of eam we should have illam." (Weissenborn.)

CHAPTER XXXI.

2-24. Centum viginti. This number is supplied by the editors from the statement of Polybius.—Utrinque. "From both islands."—Men- ninge. The islands Meninx and Cercina were situated in the Syrtis Minor, and were of importance on account of their harbors.—Juxta ... ac si. "Just as if."—Insulis cultorum egentibus. Ablative of place where without preposition. (Madvig, § 273.)—Ad mille. In these expressions of number ad loses its effect on the case, and the phrase is declinable.—Hominum. The genitive is less frequent with mille, which is, in the singular, generally an undeclinable adjective.—Amisse. Refers in sense to the words ad mille hominum as well as quae, store, but is attracted in form to the nearest word.—Pedibus. "By land." —Fretus. Ablative of the road by which. (Madvig, § 274.) —Exercitus. "The armie," i. e., of Fabius and Minucius.—Ab se. "From him," i. e., the dictator Fabius.

25–34. Omnium prope. "Of almost all writers."—Fabium dictatorum. "That Fabius as dictator."—Caelius. The historian Caelius Antipater.—Eum primum. "That he was the first who was made dictator."—Fugit. "Escapes the notice of."—Uni consul. "The consul alone."—Quam moram, etc. "And since the state could not wait so long," i. e., till the consul had returned.—Moram. A cognate accusative, like ire iter.—Augentes, etc. "His descendants adding to the style and title on his bust," by dropping the pro in pro dictator. The imago of any member of a Roman family who had filled a curule office, that is, the edileship, pretorship, or consulship, was preserved by his descendants in the atrium of their house, and carried in funeral processions, and the family was said to have the "jus imaginum."—Obtinuisse. "Had easily brought about." The clause from res gestas down to obtinuisse is dependent on fugit; quam moram... esse is a statement on the part of Livy.

CHAPTER XXXII.

3–11. Fabii artibus. "On Fabius's system."—Locis. The ablative of the place where without a preposition, as is usual when locus is accompanied by an attribute.—Opportuni. "At the right time and the right place."—Carpentes. "Plucking at," i. e., "harassing."—In casum. "To the uncertain chance of a general engagement."—Non veniebant. "They would not come." Imperfect of endeavor.—Nisi cum fugisse specie, etc. "Unless he had feared that his departure would look like a flight." Madvig reads ei fuisset in place of timuisset.

15–28. Constituisset. "Had come to a stand-still."—Ad Gereonium. "Before Gereonium."—Neapolitani. This circumstance is not mentioned by Polybius. The Neapolitans represent the feelings of the Greek commercial cities, who dreaded above all things the supremacy of Carthage.—Geratur. Supply bellum, from the preceding bello.—Ad subsidium fortune. "For their assistance in times of need."—In se. "In their persons," as well as their gold, Naples, by the terms of its agreement with Rome, had to furnish only ships and sailors.—Patres Romanos populumque. "The Senate and people of 6–13. Carthagina. That is, Carthagine nova. Cartagena. The ablative of the place whence.—Navibus. The instrumental ablative, usual with verbs denoting military actions.—Quacunque parte. His sea or his land forces.—Idem consilii. "The same determination," that is, to be ready to fight either by sea or by land.—Ad naves. To be taken with delecto, "chosen to serve on board the ships," and in naves supplied before imposito.

18–22. Speculatoriae. Namely, naves.—Stare. "Were riding at anchor." A nautical term retained from the old times when the ships were drawn ashore.—Multas et positas. "Many towers placed," etc. The et is pleonastic, as in multa et magna res.—In terra et castris. A hendiadys, "the camp on land;" while the repetition of ad before mare and naves implies that some of the sea-forces were on shore ad mare, some left on board.—Aperientibus. "Disclosing to view."—Nihil minus. "Anything rather."—Classem... esse. Oratio obliqua after word of saying implied in jubet.

38–47. Oris. "The hawser being unloosed." The hawser running out from the stern were made fast on shore, the cables were the ancoradia.—Evehatur in. "Run foul of their anchors."—Teneat. "Keep," i. e., delay them.—Incident. "Cut," from incidit.—Apparatus. Compare bk. ix., chap. vii., "auxiliarum apparatus."—Prohibentur capere. Prohibere regularly takes the infinitive, instead of the subjunctive with ne or quominus. (See Madvig, §§ 375, 390.)—Non ab hoste magis quam. "Not so much by the enemy, as," etc.—Temptata pugna. Ablative absolute. The want of a perfect participle active compels the use of such phrases in place of a participle co-ordinate with the preceding one. "Having attempted rather than begun a fight."—Adversi annis. "Of the river with its contrary current."

CHAPTER XX.

6–17. Religatas puppibus. "Towed them fastened to their sterns."—Ejus orae. Namely, the east coast.—Cepissent captamque. "Had taken and then plundered."—Carthaginem. New Carthage.—Injuncta. "Built close up to." The suburbs.—Sparti. "Esparto grass," used for making cordage.—Congesta. Supply erat. The omission of the copula is rare in relative sentences in model prose.

19–30. Prævecta. Livy uses compounds with praè where we might expect compounds with praeter. So bk. i., chap. xlv., praèstuit. Prævehi usually is "to ride in front;" translate here, "cruise along."—Transmissum. Impersonal. "A landing was made."—In specem irri-tam. See note on in mercedem, bk. xxi., chap. xliii., line 21.—Citeriors. Compare bk. xxi., chap. xxxi., line 3, Mediterranea Gallicae.—Ultima. “Farther Spain.” Livy thinks of the later division of the country into Hispamia ulterior and citerior.—Populi. “States” or “communities.”— Amplius centum et viginti. Quam is commonly omitted after plus, amplius, minus, etc.

CHAPTER XXI.

2-17. Per Pœnum hostem. “As far as the enemy was concerned.” Compare per me licet.—Ipsorum. “Of the Spaniards themselves;” without any interference on Hasdrubal’s part.—Auxiliis. Most probably Spanish.—Ut tumultuariam. “Seeing that they were,” etc.—Cedentem. “Still on his retreat.”—Allo. “Elsewhither.” The power of Carthage in Spain must have been broken by these events, and those previously mentioned in bk. xxi., chaps. lx., lxi.

CHAPTER XXII.

25-29. Unum atque infame corpus. “One single infamous person.”—Id agebat. “He kept in view how he might be,” etc. See Andrews’s Dictionary, s. v. ago, III., 7.—Potestatis ejus facere. Ejus is genitive dependent on potestatis, a possessive genitive dependent on facere, like dicionis facere. The clause being a simple relative one, from Livy’s point of view, ejus is used. The point of view of Abelux would require sue.—Unam . . . maxime. Here unam strengthens the superlative.

60–69. Ordine, quo, etc. “In the order in which they would have been done if the business were being done on account of the Carthaginians.” — In re pari. “In a thing of equal value;” by whichever party it had been done.—Futura fuerat. Pluperfect indicative rhetorically used, instead of the subjunctive, to imply the certainty of the result.—Graves, superbos. An asyndeton.—Expertos. In a passive signification; “known by experience.”—Quoque. The Romans and Carthaginians also, as well as the Spaniards.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1–11. Hæc, etc. As the events denoted by hæc could not have taken place in any other place but Spain, quoque is out of place; and we can only explain its presence by assuming a confusion of two ideas. “As in Italy, so in Spain too the war went on, and the above-mentioned events took place in the second year,” etc.—Ut ... ita. As usual, the comparison is best represented in English by “indeed” ... “but.”—Cernentem. “As he (Hannibal) saw clearly.”—Dixerim. Potential subjunctive. (Madvig, § 350.)—Pugnatum fuerat. The pluperfect after postquam generally denotes that some time had elapsed; but Livy uses it when this idea is absent.

12–27. Dictatoris. Objective genitive. “Odium felt for the dictator.”—Dolo Hannibalis. To any but a Roman, Hannibal seems to have been actuated by a spirit of chivalrous courtesy.—Dubio. “Admitting a different judgment.”—In eo, sc. facto.—Pondo. Indeclinable substantive; here in the accusative.—In militem. “For each soldier.”—Rogaretur. A better reading is erogaretur. “Was too slow in being paid.”—Publicam. Because he had made the agreement with Hannibal in his public capacity.

CHAPTER XXIV.

2–15. Praeherat. Here used absolutely. “Was in command.”—Ad urbem. “Having set out for the city.”—Pro ingenio. “In accordance with the disposition.”—Ferocius quam consultius. “With more bravery than prudence.” This attraction of the second comparative into the form of the first is in the main post-Ciceronian.—Crederet. The potential subjunctive. It was to be expected that he would keep all his men in camp, with such an enemy as Minucius in front of him.—Propius hostem. “Nearer the enemy.” The adverb propius generally has this construction; Livy rarely, and Cicero never using it with the dative. With the adjective propior, however, the dative is the more common, Cicero never using the accusative.—Conspectum. "Visible." Cf. note on bk. ii., chap. lv., line 12.—Intentum. Supply se.

16–22. Propior ei. "Nearer the enemy."—Ad quem capiendum si . . . quia, etc. "And since, if an advance to take it were made openly by day, the enemy," etc.—Contempta. "Contemptible."—Dijecis-

30–43. Dimicatum auctores sunt. As auctor sum is equivalent to a transitive verb, it takes the construction of a transitive verb. Livy probably follows the history of Fabius Pictor, who depreciated the actions of Minucius. Polybius mentions an attack on Hannibal's camp which was saved by the arrival of Hasdrubal and his foragers.—Bovi-ani. The locative. "At Bovianum."—Unde erat. The indicative is commonly used by the historians in relative definitions, although they are parts of a quotation. (Madvig, § 369, Obs. 2.)—Toto Samnio. The ablative without a preposition, as totus is joined with it. (Madvig, § 273, c.) This account of Numerius Decimius is to explain how he came to be in command. The allied troops were under Roman officers when joined to the army, but came up from their districts under their own leaders.—Quinque admodum. "About five thousand."—Vanioribus. Livy uses the comparative, because in his opinion the fama victoriae was vana.

CHAPTER XXV.

2–16. Contiones. In the popular assemblies convened by the tribunes of the plebs.—Ut vera, etc. "Granting that," etc.—Id enim negat. "Says that this is not to be borne." As in the common sed enim, an ellipsis is to be supplied; "he must speak, for this is not to be borne."—Ac sedulo. "Ay, and that designedly."—Ducendo bello.
"In prolonging the war."—Quorum neutra provincia. "Neither of whose provinces." A better reading is quarum.

20–28. Quo jam tamquam, etc. "Out of which, as if from a trans-Iberian district, they had withdrawn before the Carthaginians." Pax is the dative, quo the ablative of separation.—Legionibus. Ablative of means after tutante.—Tandem ut. "At length, as soon as," etc.
—Ut obsidione. "As though freed from a blockade."—Si antiquus, etc. An unreal condition in oratio obliqua. "If the Roman people had retained their ancient spirit, he would have brought in," etc.
Minucius's words in direct speech would be, Si antiquus animus plebi Romanæ esset, audaciter retulisset. See Caesar, Bell. Gall., i., 34: si quid opus esset, etc.

34-41. In actions minime popularis. Hypothetically, "since if he had gone to plead his cause before the people he would have been by no means well received." (Weissenborn.)—Dictum sum—"His order."—Bono imperatore. "If the general is good."

51-54. Auctoritas. "Weight," "influential support."—Patrem la- nium, etc. "His father had been a butcher, had in person peddled his goods, and had employed," etc.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1-18. Ex eo genere. To be taken with pecunia relictâ. "The money made by this sort of trade and left to him by his father."—Proclamando. "By bawling." Cicero expressly contrasts a proclama- tor with an orator.—Honores. The smaller offices, such as those of the tresviri capitales; decemviri stilitibus judicandis, etc.—Dictoria. "Against the dictator."—Acceperunt latam. "Took it to have been passed." This chapter contains a studied contrast between Fabius as proud and unbending, and Varro as vain and courting popularity; and probably does great injustice to the latter. "We are not told that he was ever tribune, and it is without example in Roman history that a mere demagogue, of no family, with no other merits, military or civil, should be raised to such nobility. Even after his defeat at Cannæ, he was employed in various important offices." (Arnold.) After Cannæ, his conduct at Canusium was that of a brave general and a good citizen. He rallied the wreck of his army, and had that supreme courage, which the unfortunate Paulus confessed he had not, the courage to meet a disappointed people, and to bear whatever obloquy or punishment popular feeling and party animosity were likely to heap on him. "The fate of P. Claudius and L. Junius might have warned him of the dangers which threatened a defeated general; he was personally hateful to the prevailing party at Rome; and if the memory of Flaminius was persecuted, notwithstanding his glorious death, what could he look for, a fugitive general from that field where his colleague and all his soldiers had perished?" Nothing can speak more clearly in favor of the man whom historians have so vilified than the resolution of the Senate, composed as it was of bitter political enemies, which thanked him with such noble simplicity, "because he had not despaired of the republic."
CHAPTER XXVII.

3–19. Hannibale victo. Ablative of cause.—Gloriari. Historic infinitive.—Parem. “Match for.”—Tremere, etc. An allusion to L. Papirius Cursor, and his magister equitum Q. Fabius Maximus Rullianus. Fabius attacked the Samnites during the dictator’s absence, against his express commands, and gained a brilliant victory. Papirius ordered his execution, and, turning a deaf ear to the entreaties of the soldiers, the Senate, and M. Fabius, the father of the culprit, was only induced by the supplications of the people to spare his life. See bk. viii., chaps. xxx.–xxxv. —Deorum hominumque. The judgment of the gods was shown by their having given him the victory; of the people, by their giving him equal powers.—Alterius. Possessive genitive with esse.

24–32. Sibi communicatum cum. The dative is found with communicare only when a second personal object with cum occurs.—Qua posset. Supply non cedere. Translate, “He would never willingly give up that part of the imperium which he could retain, namely,” etc.—Consilio. Adverbially joined with gerendarum.—Exercitum. Supply sed.—Socium. Genitive plural.—Se separari. See Zumpt, § 610.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

19–41. Ducenos. “Two hundred apiece.” —Deposcere. Historic infinitive.—Dimittit. “He detaches.”—Laborantibus suis. “When his men were hard pressed in different places.”—Inferiore loco. “From lower ground.”—Justa, as opposed to tumultuaria; recta, “face to face,” as opposed to ex insidiis.—Prospere qualifies gesta, from which it is separated for the sake of emphasis.—Eum tumultum, etc. “Such confusion and terror by their attacks on both flanks and on the rear.”

CHAPTER XXIX.

2–12. Ita est. “Yes, it is so.” (Nägelsbach, § 197.)—Imperio. Ablative of measure or reference.—Hosti. “From the enemy.”—Demissa is to be taken with ad auxilium.
14–21. Suos. Their fellow-soldiers. Here, the troops of Minucius. —Pannus . . . Hannibal. The rule that the ablative absolute cannot be used when the idea which forms its subject occurs as the subject in the main proposition is not violated here; Pannus denotes Hannibal as the representative of his nation, the ablative absolute as simply a person. (Madvig, § 428, Obs. 1.)

CHAPTER XXX.

14–18. Antiquo, to vote against a new law; abrogo, to vote for the repeal of an old one. In this case the latter is added to correct the former.—Servato ac servatori. “To the preserved and the preserver.” —Magisterum. “The mastership.” Weissenborn reads, magistrum equitum hos ordinibus suis quemque tenere, and translates, “Order me as master of the horse to retain these, each in his proper rank.”

22–30. Perlata. Supply eo, “thither.” —Maximum. The cognomen of Quintus Fabius.—Gloria. “His glory.” —Sentire. Namely, Hannibal.—Biennio. The length of time within which is put in the ablative with or without in. The second year was not yet ended.—Eam famam. Madvig omits eam. “In oratio recta in place of eam we should have illam.” (Weissenborn.)

CHAPTER XXXI.

2–24. Centum viginti. This number is supplied by the editors from the statement of Polybius.—Utrinque. “From both islands.” —Meninge. The islands Meninx and Cercina were situated in the Syrtis Minor, and were of importance on account of their harbors.—Juxta . . . ac si. “Just as if.” —Insulis cultorum egentibus. Ablative of place where without preposition. (Madvig, § 273.)—Ad mille. In these expressions of number ad loses its effect on the case, and the phrase is declinable.—Hominum. The genitive is less frequent with mille, which is, in the singular, generally an undecinable adjective.—Amisse. Refers in sense to the words ad mille hominum as well as questore, but is attracted in form to the nearest word.—Pedibus. "By land."—Fretum. Ablative of the road by which. (Madvig, § 274.)—Exercitus. "The armies," i. e., of Fabius and Minucius.—Ab se. "From him," i. e., the dictator Fabius.

25-34. Omnium prope. "Of almost all writers."—Fabium dictatorem. "That Fabius as dictator."—Caelius. The historian Cælius Antipater.—Eum primum. "That he was the first who was made dictator."—Fugit. "Escapes the notice of."—Uni consul. "The consul alone."—Quam moram, etc. "And since the state could not wait so long," i. e., till the consul had returned.—Moram. A cognate accusative, like ire iter.—Augentes, etc. "His descendants adding to the style and title on his bust," by dropping the pro in pro dictatore. The imago of any member of a Roman family who had filled a curule office, that is, the sedileship, praetorship, or consulship, was preserved by his descendants in the atrium of their house, and carried in funeral processions, and the family was said to have the "jus imaginum."—Obtinuisse. "Had easily brought about." The clause from res gestas down to obtinuisse is dependent on fugit; quam moram... esset being a statement on the part of Livy.

CHAPTER XXXII.

3-11. Fabii artibus. "On Fabius's system."—Locis. The ablative of the place where without a preposition, as is usual when locus is accompanied by an attribute.—Opportuni. "At the right time and the right place."—Carpentes. "Plucking at," i. e., "harassing."—In casum. "To the uncertain chance of a general engagement."—Non veniabant. "They would not come." Imperfect of endeavor.—Nisi cum fugce specie, etc. "Unless he had feared that his departure would look like a flight." Madvig reads si fuisse in place of timuisset.

15-28. Constitisset. "Had come to a stand-still."—Ad Gereonium. "Before Gereonium."—Neapolitani. This circumstance is not mentioned by Polybius. The Neapolitans represent the feelings of the Greek commercial cities, who dreaded above all things the supremacy of Carthage.—Geratur. Supply bellum, from the preceding bello.—Ad subsidium fortunae. "For their assistance in times of need."—In sese. "In their persons," as well as their gold. Naples, by the terms of its agreement with Rome, had to furnish only ships and sailors.—Patres Romanos populumque. "The Senate and people of Rome." Romane refers to both nouns, and the two nouns, forming one idea, have facturum in the singular, as usual.—Dignosse, etc. "Deign to receive an offering more valuable through the good-will of those who willingly were making it than in real intrinsic value."—Judicaverint, perfect subjunctive, representing the future perfect indicative in oratio recta, assumes the point of view of the speaker; dixissent, pluperfect subjunctive, the point of view of the writer.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

2-6. Fesellerat. "Had escaped detection."—Quod in campo Martio conjurassent. "For conspiring in the Campus Martius." The passage is apparently corrupt, some statement of the object of the conspiracy being lost. Madvig reads, in campo Martio, quod, etc. Zonaras describes the affair as an insurrection. Ussing suggests that the crime of the slaves was an attempt to obtain their liberty by mixing with the crowds of soldiers and taking the military oath.—Æris gravis. The reward was paid in asses librales, which were worth ten times as much as the ordinary as of later times.

8-16. Demetrius. Demetrius, a native of Pharus or Pharia, an island on the Illyrian coast, betrayed Corcyra to the Romans in the First Illyrian War, and was rewarded for his treachery by grants of some districts taken from the possessions of Queen Teuta. But, thinking the Romans were sufficiently occupied with the Gauls, who invaded Italy in B.C. 225, he commenced to make piratical descents on the Greek coasts, and attempted to seize some towns under Roman protection. Æmilins Paulus was sent against him in B.C. 219, and Demetrius took refuge with Philip.—Ex propino. "From near at hand." Compare bk. xxi., chap. xxxii., line 21.—Quae gererentur. "What was being done."—Pineum. Pineus was the son of Agron, the king of Illyria, whose widow, Teuta, had been rendered tributary to Rome in the First Illyrian War.—Dies. "The day of payment."—Proferre. "To put off."—Terrarum. Genitive after usquam.

17-22. In religionem. "Into their feeling of religious obligation."—Per. "On account of."—Locatam. "Been contracted for," "let out by contract to be built."—In arce. "On the Capitol;" there was already a temple to Concord in the Comitium.

23-31. Ex senatus consulto. "In accordance with a resolution of the Senate."—Consilibus. This is the reading of the best MSS., but the dative of the agent is here very likely to lead to misunderstanding, and therefore the reading a consulibus seems preferable.—Rescriptum. "An answer was sent."—Abscendi. Infinitive passive used impersonally.—_Vitio._ "With a defect," i. e., illegally. It is more natural to suppose that the ever-ready device of a fault in the auspices was here employed than that M'. Atilius was held to be disqualified for nominating a dictator because he had been created consul by a prodictator. There was evidently a contest between the aristocratic and senatorial party, and the liberal and plebeian party, as to which should appoint the returning officer at the ensuing _comitia._ A dictator was nominated by the consul, and he might be either a plebeian or a patrician; an _interrex_ was elected, not by the Senate, but by the patrician members of the Senate, and was in all cases a patrician, no plebeian being eligible. In the present case the majority in the Senate was liberal, and carried the resolution that a dictator be appointed; the patrician minority, under the plea of faulty auspices, annulled the nomination, and pushed in their _interrex._

CHAPTER XXXIV.

5–12. _Patrum._ "The patricians."—_Quem sui generis._ "Whom, a man of its own sort, endeared to the Commons by his attacks on the nobles, and by those arts which win popularity, conspicious through the odium he had excited against another (Fabius) after having shaken his influence and dictatorial power."—_Et extrahere ad consulatum._ "To drag up even to the consulship."—_Se insectando, etc._ "By attacking them, should be accustomed to raise themselves to an equality with them."

16–21. _Prohibissent._ Subjunctive in _oratio obliqua._—_Perficere._ Infinitive after _prohibere_ is the regular construction.—_Nobilius._ "Noble" includes both patrician and plebeian families having the _jus imaginum._ Compare note on chap. xxxi., line 32.—_Universis._ "If united."—_Pugnari._ Namely, _prospere._ "With four legions, if united, it was clear that it was possible for a successful battle to be fought."

26–37. _Id fecus._ "A covenant to this end."—_Id est._ This phrase is regularly used in _oratio obliqua_ without suffering any change of mood or tense.—_Novum._ A plebeian, none of whose ancestors had held a curule office, was a _novus homo._—_Apparere._ Infinitive in _oratio obliqua_ representing a rhetorical question.—_Ambos . . . morando._ _Ambos_ is to be taken with _morando._ With the gerundive in the ablative a subject is sometimes found as with a finite verb. Bk. ii., chap. xxxviii., line 25: "_instigandoque suos quisque populos effecerit._" "The consuls had sought to effect this by remaining, both of them, with the army."—_Expugnatum esse, sc. a consulibus._ "They violently obtained."—_Vitiosus, etc._ "That the dictator be declared by means of the augurs illegally elected.”—Liberum. Namely, consularum. “The people will keep it free to dispose of as they like, and will give it,” etc.

CHAPTER XXXV.

2-7. Petentibus. “Being candidates for election.”—Nobilibus jam, etc. “Already noble, but of plebeian families.” Jam is to be taken with nobilibus.—Unus. “Alone.” The aristocratic party scattered their votes so that they could not elect any one of their five candidates. As there were three patrician candidates, there must have been a split among the patrician nobles.—Rogando collegae. “For proposing his colleague.”

9-13. L. Æmiliium Paullum. He had been consul two years before, and, although there was a law that no one could be elected consul a second time till ten years were elapsed, he was eligible in virtue of a plebiscite that, as long as there was war in Italy, any consular could be chosen. Æmilius and Livius had been impeached for unfair distribution of the booty taken in the Ilyrian War. Livius was found guilty, Æmilius came off, as Livy says, “scorched.”—Par. “An antagonist,” “a match for.”

16-22. Juri dicundo. The dative of the gerundive is used with sors analogously with its use with comitia, or the names of dignities and officers.—Urbana. The prætor urbanus had jurisdiction between citizens, the prætor peregrinus between citizens and foreigners.—In Siciliam. “For Sicily.”—Absentes. “In their absence.” Claudius and Postumius had been already consuls.—Novus. “New to him,” “which he had not previously filled.”

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1-8. Multiplicati. “Increased many fold.”—Quantae . . . sint. These words are dependent on the following clause, adeo . . . variant auctores. “Authors state with such great variations . . . how many,” etc.—Alii. Supply affirmant from affirmare.—Gerentem. Namely, the consuls.

9-16. Miliibus. The distributive numeral, which might, according to analogy, be milleni, is not in use, and the cardinal is used for it. “A thousand foot-soldiers and a hundred horsemen being added to each.”—Pedites for peditum numerum. The words from septem down to Cannas est are probably an interpolation.—Illud discrepant. “There is no difference of opinion about this point, namely,” etc.—Majore conatu. This expression sufficiently indicates that the Senate had now determined to abandon the Fabian policy for bolder measures, and confirms the statement of Polybius that after the loss of their great magazines at Cannæ the Senate had ordered the consuls to de-lider battle. The Senate had despatched a larger force than Rome had ever sent into the field before; they had great confidence in the military skill and experience of Paulus, and they were goaded on by the taunts of the Plebeian party that they studiously prolonged the war for their own selfish interests.

The prodigies were not new in the sense of belonging to a new description of prodigies.—Cædiis. Cædiæ was in Campania, near Sinuesæ.—Lapidibus pluvisse. The ablative as after a verb of abundance; the cognate accusative is rarer. See note on bk. xxii., chap.
Ixxii., line 14.—Id quidem, etc. And the circumstance that it had repeatedly happened."—Pæsto. The ancient Posidonia in Lucania, celebrated in ancient times for its roses, which flowered twice a year; at present best known for its ruined temples.—Neapolitanis. See the account given in chapter xxxii.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

3-11. Cædem . . . adlatam. "That the news of the slaughter."— Ut nulla, etc. "That he could not have been more moved by any calamity touching himself personally or," etc.—Sciat. Present subjective, from the standpoint of the speaker.—Se misisse. "That he had sent." The reflexive se is used, as if Hiero himself, and not his ambassadors, were speaking.

14-25. Ducentum, like modium in line 17, is the genitive plural.— Adjutre sese. "That they bring." Sese, here the ambassadors, speaking of the action being one in which they are agents. Hence we have the plural subvecturos in line 19.—Accipere . . . adverterisse. Here the tenses are changed from the present to past time, and describe from the standpoint of the narrator.—Milito. "Footsoldiers."—Auxilia. "Light-armed auxiliaries."—Mille. Here again a substantive with a partitive genitive.—Pugnaces missiles telo. "Who are accustomed to fight with missiles."

28-32. Et hostes. "The enemy as well." Hiero recommends an invasion of Africa, not merely such predatory attacks as those described in chapter xxxi.—Minus laxamenti. These words imply that Hannibal was receiving some reinforcements from Carthage.—Uno tenore. "Uninterruptedly."
35-43. Gratia rei accepta. "Accepting the duty of gratitude for the offer." The good-will displayed by the offer thus made bound them habere et referre gratiam quite as much as if they had accepted what Hiero's ambassadors offered.—Templum. The statue was placed in the cella of the temple.—Volentem propitianque. "Kind and propitious."—Firmam ac stabilem... "Unshaken by events, and (what is more) unchanging in herself." The number of the ships has been dropped from the MSS.; some editors supply the omission with centum viginti, as in chap. xxxi., line 2.—Quae. That is, quae naves.—E're publica. "If he deemed it to the interest of the state."

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

2-12. Dum venirent. The subjunctive is used because design is involved. "They delayed long enough for the allies to come up."—Milites tum. The soldiers up to this time had only taken officially the military oath sacramentum; but had been accustomed, when enrolled in their centuries, to take among themselves a further oath. This latter oath was now made a public one, administered by the tribunes.—Ad decuriam aut centuriam. "To be mustered into their decuries or centuries." The former word does not occur elsewhere; the latter not in this sense, but in that of "the rank of a centurion." Hence Weissenborn proposes to omit ad, or write ad decuriam, etc.—Ergo. "On account of," "through." An archaism preserved in laws and solemn acts.—Sumendi. "Taking from where it is kept;" petendi, "bringing it from where it had fallen."

19-32. Perfecturum. "Would finish it."—Verior quam gratior. See Madvig, § 307.—Quis dux. "Any leader."—Jam nunc. "Could already, while still in the garb of peace," that is, while still in Rome.—Qua, sc. die. The ablative of the time when.—Quae consilia, etc. "Plans which circumstances rather determined for men, than men for circumstances."—Dent. The present tense, as expressing a general fact true for all time, while quae gesta essent are the particular actions of the consuls. So in line 30, sit is universally true, fuisse true in the instance mentioned.—Ad id locorum. "Up to this time." For the genitive, see Madvig, § 285 b.—Id. "This, namely, that he would prefer."—Id perseveraret. The common construction with this verb is either in with the ablative, or an infinitive; but almost all intransitive verbs can take an accusative of the neuter pronoun denoting the object in reference to which the action of the verb is done.
CHAPTER XXXIX.

1–13. Id quod malum. Refers to the following clause, with which id is in apposition.—Duo boni . . . mali. “If you both were good . . . if you both were bad.”—Indicent. “Even if I did not speak.”—Fides vestra. “Conscientiously.”—Claudet. Future from claudo, claudere, a by-form of claudio. “If the state shall limp on the other side.” Nescio an. “I am inclined to think.”—Cum illo. “With the latter;” cum hoc, “with the former.”

18–25. Consul denum. “Not before he was consul.”—Furere. This word denotes “to suffer from violent paroxysms,” while insanit, in line 21, is “to be in a chronic state of madness.”—Ad exercitum. “With the army.”—Priusquam videat. Not simply “before he sees,” but “although he has not yet seen.”—Si hic pugnaverit. “Should succeed in fighting at once.”

27–29. Adversus unum. “In the presence of one,” i. e., Paulus, as distinguished from the Senate and people.—Exceperimus. Potential subjunctive.—Una ratio bellii gerendi. “The only plan for carrying on the war.” Ratio here is simply “plan;” lower down ratio is “the reasons for adopting the plan.” The words as they stand are not very clear; and perhaps eadem is an interpolation.

37–48. Tempus diesque. “Circumstances and the lapse of time.”—Terra . . . mari. “By land nor by sea.” Ablative of place.—In diem rapto. “On what is plundered for each day.”—Quem Iberum trajecit. “Which he led across the Ebro.”—Dubitas. The rhetorical question denotes a negative opinion on the part of the speaker; ergo denotes necessary consequence, and draws the conclusion of the argument. “There can, therefore, be no doubt.”—Quis senesceat. “Seeing that he grows weaker,” etc.—Manibus . . . ! An aposiopesis. —Ne adversus te. etc. “But not even in your presence (who will not misjudge me) will I boast.” The position of the word ego is emphatic.

56–66. Falsa. “Unmerited.”—Laborare. “Is eclipsed.” Cf. Virgil, Georgics, ii., 478, “lunaeque labores.”—Malo metuat. Volo, nolo, and malo take the subjunctive without ut only in short unambiguous expressions; otherwise, the construction is the accusative and infinitive. —Nec ego moneo. Fabius here alludes to the last sentence but one in the remarks of Aemilius.—Tua potestatis. etc. “Be master of yourself and all that concerns you.”—Occasioni. “Favorable opportunity.”
NOTES.

CHAPTER XL.

2-12. Magis fatentis. "Rather confessing that they were true than allowing that they were easy of execution."—Virium, auctoritatis. Gen. after quid. "What power, what influence . . ."—Se . . . effugisse. This gives his reason for preferring death at the hands of the enemy.—Caderet. "Should happen." Equivalent to accideret.—Ab hoc. "Immediately after."—Turba. The ablative of cause with conspectior. "Through its disorderly crowd."—Dignitates. "Men of rank."—Madvig reads dignitas.

16-27. In veteribus, sc. castris. Near Larinum.—Consulum. The partitive genitive in place of an apposition marks the class to which a person belongs.—Adatam exauiscatum. "Pleading the excuse of age."—Superabat. "Was remaining."—Quidquam reliquis erat. The adjectival used substantively and put as a partitive genitive gives greater prominence to the idea of a certain measure or kind. "No residue existed."—Urbes munitas. The consuls gave the same orders that Fabius gave when he assumed command (see chap. xi.), namely, that the country people should destroy their crops and houses, and retire into the fortified towns.—Parata fuerit. The apodosis of a conditionaI sentence dependent on ut; without ut it would be parata fuit.

CHAPTER XLI.

1-7. Consulis. "The one consul," namely, Varro.—Ac procursu. The conjunction ac adds a further definition of tumultuario; procursu and jussu are ablative of cause after orto, which is the attribute to praesto.—Ex preparato. "After due preparation." This adverbial use of the neuter ablative of an adjective or participle with ex is not uncommon in Livy; compare ex tuto, ex aequo, etc.—Ad mile. "About a thousand." Ad having no effect on the case, the predicate cæsi is in the nominative.—Non plus. "No more than;" quam, as usual after plus, being omitted.

10-18. Alternis. "By turns," or, "on alternate days."—Varrone, etc. "While Varro was," etc.—Puti . . . credere. Historic infinitives.—Inescatam. "Had had a bait thrown it."—Duas partes, etc. "That there were in the army two thirds of raw soldiers," sc. that two thirds of the army consisted of raw soldiers.

20-28. Ferentes secum educit. As educit does not occur in the MSS., some editors read ferente . . . milite.—Fortuna. See the next chapter, lines 18-20.—Læva. "On the left hand."—Medium agmen. If his reading is retained, the words are in apposition to impedimenta.
Madvig reads medium, agreeing with convallum, "through the valley between them," and omits agmen. — Occupatum. "Occupied with plundering the camp, left, as it were, deserted by the flight of its proprietors." — Ut fides fieret, etc. "That a belief might be produced that he had wished, by a pretended semblance of a camp, to keep the consuls in their places until he himself should get a long start by his flight." For dum with the subjunctive, see chap. xxxviii., line 2. — In locis. "In the places they occupied."

CHAPTER XLII.

— Prætoria. Each consul had his praetorium in his own quarter of the camp. — Nuntiantium. Supply militum. — Ut relinquuerint. The perfect, from the point of view of the speaker. — Quoque. "And in order that," for et ut eo. — Jubervent. "The consuls should order."

11–19. Providendum, etc. "That foresight and caution must be used." — Præfectum. This officer was the first of the decurions in a tarma. — Mittit. "Paulus sends." Yet as he had commanded the day before, Varro had the imperium on this day. — Cum cura. See Madvig, § 257, Obs. 2. — Insidias profecto esse. "That without doubt there is an ambush." — Cara. "All their valuables."

20–26. Varro signum dat. Because he has the imperium; how, then, does Paulus come to take the auspices? The auspicium always went with the imperium. — Pulii quoque ... non. The negative and the predicate here form one conception, "were unfavorable;" otherwise we should have ne pulii quidem. — Auspicio. "While he was taking the auspices." Others consider it an instrumental ablative, or a dative. It was considered an unfavorable sign if the chickens refused to come out of the coop, and eat the pulse thrown them by the pullarius, or if they flew away or cried; if they ate greedily the sign was favorable. — Porta. Ablative of way, regarded as manner or means, and therefore used without a preposition. "Carrying out by the gate."

28–38. Claudius. P. Claudius Pulcher was defeated by Adherbal at Drepana in Sicily, and lost ninety-three ships out of his fleet of one hundred and twenty-three. When the chickens, on his taking the auspices before the battle, refused to eat, he ordered them to be thrown overboard, saying, "If they will not eat, let them drink." — Religionem incussit. "Caused some religious scruples." — Imminetem. "Suspended over the Romans," i.e., by Fate. — Forte. "By a dispensation of Providence." — Imperiæ potentes. "Gave them power to rule,” “made them masters of their authority.”—Cum, etc. “Although the attempts to court popularity on the part of one of the consuls had, by wrong indulgence, weakened among the soldiers his own authority first (then that of his colleague).”

CHAPTER XLIIL

2-4. Ad ultimum evectos. “Hurried on to extremities,” i.e., “to the extreme measure of marching out from their camp.”—Nequidquam, detecta fraude. The stratagem was discovered, and therefore his absence from camp was to no purpose.—Plures. “Many days.”

9-17. Exposcentium, like muniantium, chap. xlii., line 5. Supply militum.—Querentiumque. “Complaining of the high price of grain.” Queror, properly an intransitive verb, assumes the meaning and construction of a transitive. (Madvig, § 223, c.)—De transitione. This is a repetition of the account in chapter xl., in fin.; and the following report of Hannibal’s intended flight, a repetition from chap. xxxii., line 10.—Maturiora. The harvest in Apulia begins in the middle of May. According to Livy, Hannibal is still before Gereonium; Polybius states that he had left there before the appearance of the new consuls, and seized the large magazines which the Romans had established at Cannæ, thus compelling them to risk a battle.

22-34. Ultra castra. “Beyond the camp;” trans montes, “across the mountains.”—Majoris partis sententia. Ablative of cause.—Voluturno. The east-south-east wind: the sirocco.—Cum aciem dirigent . . . pugnaturi. A frequent construction. “When they formed their line of battle, seeing that they could form it so as to fight with their backs to the wind,” etc.—Pugnaturi. This use of the future participle to denote purpose is contrary to the use of the earlier writers, Caesar, Cicero, etc., who denote by it only relations of time.

CHAPTER XLIV.

3-7. Bina. The distributive numerals are used instead of the cardinals, with plural substantives which denote a compound object (pluralia tantum).—Utriusque. “Both the Roman camps.”—Ex sua cu-jusque opportunitate. “According as each found an opportunity.”

9-25. Trans Aufidum. On the left bank, the larger camp being on the right.—Spem nactus. “Cherishing a hope that the consuls would offer battle in a place formed by nature for cavalry engagements.”—Hic. Varro.—Usu. “By prescription.” According to the Twelve Tables, undisturbed possession and uninterrupted enjoyment for two years gave a good title.—Ille. Æmilius Paulus.—Se exsortem, etc. "That he, innocent of all blame, would be sharer," etc.—Lingua. Supply esset or vigeret from vigerent.—Videret. "Let him (Varro) see that those," etc.

CHAPTER XLV.

"Hannibal's camp, according to the statement in chapter xliii., was in the neighborhood of Cannæ, and probably, therefore, on the right bank of the Aufidus, or Aufidius. In this position he offers battle, which Paulus declines. The Romans, for some undiscovered reason, cross the river to the left bank; Hannibal follows them, and takes up his position to the south of them. We can thus explain how the fugitives from the battle took refuge in Canusium and Venusia; while, if the battle had taken place on the right bank of the Auffidus, the Carthaginians would have cut the Romans off from the above-named towns." (Weissenborn.)

2–15. Ad multum diei. "Till late in the day."—Ex minoribus castris, etc. "The watering-parties of the Romans from the small camp."—In stationem, etc. "They charged up to the post in front of the rampart."—Tumultuario auxilio. "By a body of irregular auxiliaries;" auxilio for the more usual auxiliis.—Ea modo, etc. "So that this cause alone kept the Romans from crossing," etc.—Fuerit, not esset, because it is to be connected strictly with tenuerit.

16–19. Sors ejus diei imperii. "Whose turn to command it was that day." Imperii is the genitive dependent on sors; ejus diei being dependent on sors imperii.—Signum. "The signal for battle," a scarlet flag on the prætorium.—Quia magis, etc. "Because he was in a position to disapprove of the plan, rather than to refuse assistance in executing it."

23–30. In dextro cornu. Opposite Cannæ the river makes such bends that the Romans could stand facing south-east, with their wing on the river.—Pedites. Qualified by Romanos preceding equites.—Intra. Equivalent to quos intra erant. See bk. i., chap. lviii., line 2, "Tuta circa videbantur."—Acies facta. "Were made the first line." When the predicate is a participle combined with esse, or with esse understood, it takes the gender of the substantive nearest it.—Cornua tenuerunt. "Commanded the wings."—Media pugna tuenda. "The conduct of the battle in the centre."
CHAPTER XLVI.

3-18. Gallos Hispanosque. These were Hannibal's heavy cavalry, surpassing in number the heavy Roman cavalry opposed to them.—Peditibus. The instrumental ablative.—Afrum utraque, etc. "So that both flanks consisted of Africans."—Crederes. The imperfect subjunctive as the potential of the past, with the ideal second person.—Scuta. The scutum covered the whole body, but was narrow.—Punctim. "Pointwise;" œsim, "edgewise."—Prætextis purpureis. "Bordered with purple." The Roman soldiers had scarlet and black plumes a foot and a half high.

22-27. Hasdrubal. The commander of the baggage train and commissariat parties. Hannibal with Mago took command of the centre, because here the decisive manoeuvres were to be executed, and because the arrangement of his forces was such as to require at that point a general of consummate skill, ready for any emergency.—Locatis. Supply ius. It is a dative, like utraque parti, dependent on obliquus erat.—Volturnus. The sirocco blows most violently in May and June.—Adversus. "Blowing straight against the Romans."

CHAPTER XLVII.

1-9. Quia nihil circa, etc. "Because, with no space around left for wheeling, on the one side the river, on the other the line of infantry shut them in, as they pushed straight onwards."—Nitentes. Supply viros. Madvig puts a full stop after claudebant, and begins a fresh sentence with In directum.—Confertis turba: "Wedged together by the mass."

14-24. Sub aequitis finem. "On the conclusion of the cavalry combat."—Parumpur. So Polybius, Ìni ßpaxi. Madvig reads par, dum.—Æqua. Madvig reads obliqua. The emphasis is on densa, which here means confertis ordinibus.—Cuneum. Not exactly. The centre of the Gauls and Spaniards formed a crescent outwards.—Insistere. Historic infinitive. "The Romans pressed on."—Per praecipus, etc. "Through the headlong column of terror-stricken fugitives."—Subsidia. Not the reserves, but the strong bodies placed on the flanks of the media acies, and therefore farther back than the prominent part of the crescent.

24-33. Qui cuneus, etc. "And when the repulse of this crescent had at first made the front even, and then caused a hollow in the centre," etc.—Afri circa. "The Africans around had already formed wings," i. e., they had wheeled right and left so as to flank the sinus.
—Romanis. The Romans had advanced densa acie, with hastati principes and triarii all close together; and seem, as the line of Gauls gave way, to have in their eagerness extended themselves into a wedge. —Cornua. The extremities of the wings. —Defuncti. "Having fruitlessly finished one engagement." —Et . . . integrum. Integrum is added to show that this new engagement was not affected by the former struggle: it was a fresh and independent fight. —Recentibus. "Fresh in spirits." —Vegetis. "Fresh in body."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

4–13. Quingenti, etc. This stratagem is not mentioned by Polybios.—Numideæ. In bk. xxv., chap. xi., the Numidians are described as unarmed except with javelins. —In medium aciem. The centre, where the infantry was stationed. —Et dum, etc. Livy conceives the pretended desertion of the Numidians to have taken place at the beginning of the battle. —Scutis. The shields of the Roman infantry, not their own parmae. —Aversam, etc. "The rear of the Roman line."

16–18. Pertinax in mala jam spe. "Maintained with the obstinacy of despair." The words in mala spe express the condition of pertinax. —Ea parte. "On that wing." Hasdrubal, after routing the right wing of the Romans, had passed over to the Carthaginian right wing, where Maharbal was in command. Being victorious here, too, he sends in pursuit the Numidians who had been diverting the attention of the enemy, and falls with his Spanish and Gallic troopers on the rear of the Roman infantry, already suffering from the flank attack of the African infantry. Praeest is used here absolutely. "Held the command."

CHAPTER XLIX.

1–10. Parte altera. The two wings being utterly defeated, the centre was the only part now left. Paulus at first commanded the right. —Equitibus Romanis. His mounted body-guard. Compare bk. ii., chap. xx., line 14, "Delecta manus presidii causa." —Deficiabant. "Began to fail." —Quam mallem, etc. Ironical. "How I should prefer he handed them over in chains." Plutarch gives Hannibal's words: "I should prefer this to having them handed over in chains."

11–15. Quale. The verb is omitted. "Such as one might expect when the victory of the enemy was no longer doubtful." —Dubia victoria. Ablative absolute. —Cum victi. "Seeing that the conquered," etc. —Paucos superantes. "A few survivors."
18–22. Prætervehus. "Riding past." The passive prætervehus is usually employed in this sense; but as there is no present participle passive, the present participle active is used to supply its place. —Queen uum. "Whom alone the gods ought to look on with favor, as guiltless," etc. See Respicio, II. 2., Andrews's Dictionary.—Tollere ac protegere. "Support and shield you." —Ne feceris. "Do not make;" cf. ne transferis Iberum, bk. xxi., chap. xlv., line 17. (Madvig, § 386.)—Sine hoc. "Without such an occurrence."

25–33. Macte. This word is by some regarded as an adverb, by others as a vocative of an old adjective from the same stem as magnum. "Increase in virtue = Heaven speed thee in thy high career." (Gildersleeve, Lat. Gram., § 324.)—Cave absuras, for cave ne absuras. (Madvig, § 375, Ob. 1.)—Advenit. Present indicative, describing the action as certain and near at hand.—Et vixerisset adhuc. "That I both have lived up to this time," etc.—E consulatu. "When my consulship is expired." In late imperial Latin we find e console, ex questore, and the like; from which we derive our practice of prefixing ex in ex-consul, ex-president, etc.—Alieno crimine. "By a charge against another."—Exigentes. Read agentes; the ex is apparently a repetition of the last letters of hac.

41–50. Venetiæ. Venusia, a Latin colony in Apulia.—Tanta pars. "An equal number." Gronovius reads œqua.—Consulares, prætorii, ædilicii are in apposition to tribuni.—Milites in legionibus. "Private soldiers in the ranks of the legions." The battle was fought on the second of Quintilis, or August, according to the calendar, which was then six weeks or more ahead of the true time.

CHAPTER L.

1–7. Alliensi cladii. The defeat on the banks of the Allia led to the capture of the city by the Gauls.—Ilis ... strage. Ablatives of reference. "In respect of."—Ad Alliam ... ad Cannas. "At the Allia ... at Cannæ."—Alterius morientis ... fuit. "Belonged to the other consul, who lay dying." A rather affected expression for "shared the fate of the other," etc.

9–15. Binis. For this use of the distributive numeral, see note on chapter xlv., line 3.—In majoribus. On the right bank of the Aufidus.—Dum premeret. As dum, meaning "in the time that," takes the present indicative even when qualifying past actions, and as this indicative is generally retained even in clauses dependent on subjunctives or infinitives, it is better to take premeret in this oratio obliqua as representing premat in the oratio recta, in which dum is used with the subjunctive when a design is expressed. (While, i.e., that something may be done in the mean time.)—Ex leuitia qualifies epulis; "the revelry arising from their delight" at the victory.—Aspernari. The historic infinitive.—Cur... venire. The rhetorical question in the indicative in oratio recta is put in the infinitive in oratio obliqua.

22–30. Exquiri pretia. "Your ransoms ascertained by enemies who ask whether you are a Roman citizen."—Latinus socius. Here Latinus may be an adjective qualifying socius, or there may be an asyndeton as in patres conscripti. In either case the expression denotes all who were not citizens of Rome. Livy has sometimes Romani sociique, at other times socii Latini nominis, or socii ex Latino nomine, or socii ac nomen Latinum.—Tua. "Of you a Roman citizen;" alteri, "to the other, the Latin ally."—Non tu. The singular is used as more emphatic than the plural; and the verb is to be supplied from navultis in line 21.—Antequam opprimit. The subjunctive is more common in a case like this, where the occurrence denoted is something to be prevented.—Via fit. Compare chap. v., line 8.

34–39. Hae ubi | dicta de|dit, strin|git gladi|um cune|oque. An hexameter line.—Quod patebat. They marched up the left bank of the Aufidus till they were opposite to the other camp, and thus had their sword-arms next to the plain. —Quod ingenium. This is the reading of Gronovius and Drakenborch, and requires an object of databat to be supplied. Others read quem referring to impetus; Weissenborn has quos referring to animos. "Which either the character of each man or the position in which he chanced to be." Observe the chiasmus, ingenium corresponding to imperium, and fors to consilium.

CHAPTER LI.

3–8. Bello. The word bellum is purposely used to mark the thought that the war was ended as well as the battle gained.—Dici quod reliquam esset. These words are, like noctis inequentis, dependent on quietem. "The repose of the remainder of the day and the ensuing night." Weissenborn prefers to take dici quod reliquam esset and noctis quietem as dependent on numeret, the latter expression being used instead of noctem inequentem; "the remainder of the day for enjoyment and rejoicing, the ensuing night for repose."—Epulaberas. "Will banquet." Cælius Antipater in plainer language writes, Curabo tibi cena sit cocta; Cato, Tibi cena parata erit.

10–13. Hannibali. Hannibal was decidedly averse to siege operations, as he was destitute of the necessary machines. His plan seems to have been to raise all Italy against Rome before attacking the city itself, which he knew was strongly fortified, and would be sturdily defended.—Temporis opus esse. Zumpt considers this reading doubtful; but the genitive of the thing needed is found also in bk. xxiii., chap. xxi., “Quanti argenti opus fuit.”

18–32. Fadam. To be connected with hostibus. “Horrible even to enemies.”—Stricta. The pain roused them from their stupor.—Quos sibi, etc. “Who, it was clear, had made,” etc.—Superjecta humo. “With soil cast over them.”—Esqirasset, namely, the Roman.

CHAPTER LII.

2–9. Ducit. Used absolutely. “Marches.”—Brachio. “A line of earthworks.”—Ab omnibus. “By them (the Romans), who were all worn out by toil, watching, wounds.”—Maturior spe. “Sooner than he expected.”—Pacti, etc. “Having covenanted that the ransom should be, for Roman polls, three hundred nummi, etc.; with the condition that they delivered up their arms and horses.”—Trecenis nummis. Ablative of price, dependent on pacti.—Quadrigati. So called because they bore the impress of a quadriga. They were worth about one sixth of a dollar.—Singulis vestimentis. “With one suit of clothes apiece.”

14–25. Ad quatuor milia, etc. “About four thousand foot-soldiers.”—Quibus satis, etc. Supply is before quibus.—Ad vescendum facto. “Manufactured for eating,” i. e., silver table-ware.—Octo milia. Polybius makes the Punic loss only 5700 men.—Consulem. See chap. vii., line 14, where Hannibal seeks to pay due honor to the corpse of Flaminius.

27, 28. Busa. An Oscan name.—Tectis acceptos. The ablative without a preposition, the local designation being regarded as manner or instrument.—Viatico. Travelling-money, to carry them home.

CHAPTER LIII.

2. De legione. De is used because the tribune is regarded as part of the legion.

8–12. Summa imperii. “The chief command.”—Inter paucos. “With a few others.”—Summa rerum. “The condition of the state.”—Nequidquam perditam spem. “That they in vain cherished any hope, for hope was already lost.”—Conploratam. Equivalent to the more usual conclamatam; “that the state was past remedy; and that all was over with it.”—Quorum principem. Supply esse. In oratio obliqua, relative clauses are put in the infinitive with the accusative, when the relative is a mere form connecting two sentences, equivalent to a demonstrative with a co-ordinating conjunction.

15–21. Præterquam for præterquam quod. “Besides that it was,” etc. — Torpides defixisset. “Struck stupid.” — Negat consili esses. “Says it is not a matter for deliberation,” or “for a council of war.” — Consilium is opposed to the private meeting held inter paucos.— Fatalis. This Scipio was the future conqueror of Carthage, and the son of the Scipio who was wounded at the Ticinus.— Nulla verius, etc. “No camp was more truly the camp of the enemy than where such things were thought of.”

23–28. Concilium. “A regular and formal meeting.” — Adlatum erat. “The report had been brought.”—Ex mei animi sententia. A formula used in solemn asseverations, with the omission of juro, and ita me dixi ament. “On my word and honor I swear, so may the gods help me, I shall not desert.”—Si scies fallœ. “If I break my oath, wittingly.” — Adficias. The second person of the subjunctive with a definite subject is rare. Weissenborn reads adficiat, and optimus maximus.—Cerneant. The imperfect, as jurant, the historical present, is regarded as a past tense.

CHAPTER LIV.

1–11. Canusii. The locative. “At Canusium.” — Sparsi fuga. These were fugitives from the field of battle.—Togas. The toga, so often used by Cicero as meaning the garb of peace, was worn in the field by the officers and the cavalry.—Singulós . . . quinós vicenos . . . denos. Observe the distributive numerals. The pay of the cavalry was three times that of the infantry; but here the former received clothes as well as twenty-five nummi.—Populus Venusius. “The state of Venusia.” It was a Latin colony.

18–18. Et jam, “and now,” i. e., when other fugitives had come in.—Nuntium mittunt. “Sent a messenger to inform him.”—Defensuri. “ Likely to defend themselves.”

23–38. Occidione occisum. “Utterly destroyed.” — Salva urbe. “During her whole existence.” — Succumbam. Weissenborn remarks that Livy rather likes to dwell on such scenes, but does not do so here, as he had already painted a similar one in chapter vii.—Edissertando. A rare and archaic word; not used elsewhere by Livy.—Nec ulla. “There was not any camp,” etc.—Comparés. “You may compare." Ideal second person subjunctive. The sentence is a conditional one, si being omitted in the protasis; the apodosis is nulla ex parte, etc.—Carthaginiensium. Genitive after cladem—Nulla ex parte comparanda. The use of the gerundive signifying possibility with a negative particle or phrase is not found in model prose.

CHAPTER LV.

6–9. Quod... restaret. Subjunctive, because it expresses the views of the pretors, not of the narrator.—Venturum. Supply esse. The infinitive in place of quae and the subjunctive is common in Livy after dubitare meaning "to doubt."—Nondum palam factum. The ablative of the passive participle has, very rarely in Cicero, but very often in Livy, a sentence for its subject; here we must supply as its subject qui vivi, qui mortui essent. This usage passes into a purely adverbial one.

10–24. Censuit. From this word to the end of the chapter is in oratio obliqua—Ex fuga. "After the flight."—Et si quid, etc. "And if the gods in pity had left any of the Roman people."—Hoc exploranda. "The preceding."—Illud. "The following."—Publico. Ablative of separation. "From public places."—Rerum omnium, etc. A precaution necessary to prevent the spread of exaggerated rumors. Exspectent. Note the change of subject. Before and after this sentence the subject is patres. Quisque, as involving a notion of plurality, is used with a plural verb by all writers except Cicero.

CHAPTER LVI.

1, 2. In sententiam pedibus issent. "Had all voted for this resolution." The members of the Senate favorable to a proposition went to one side of the House; those unfavorable, to the other.—Summota foro. "Had been cleared out from the forum." Summovere is the word used of the lictors, etc., clearing the way.

8–12. Ad decem milia. According to the statements in chapter liv., there were ten thousand men at Canusium, and four thousand five hundred at Venusia; and therefore decem here ought to be quindecim, as Heusinger reads.—Sedere. In bk. xviii., chap. i., we are told that after the capture of the Roman camp Hannibal moved with all speed into Samnium.—Nundinantem. "Holding an open market." A contemptuous expression in allusion to the mercantile character of the Carthaginians. We may compare Ennius's line, Non casponantes bellum sed belligerantes.
14–20. Sacrum Ceres. As the battle took place, according to the unreformed calendar, ante diem quartum Nonas Sextiles, August the second, this cannot be the well-known feast of Ceres celebrated on the nineteenth of April (Ovid, Fasti, iv., 619), but one mentioned by Cicero (Legg. 2, 9, 21). — Expers fuerat. "Not a single matron had escaped the necessity of putting on mourning." The usual time of mourning in the case of parents or children was ten months.

27, 28. Provinciamque aedam. "Other portions of the province." The Roman province of Sicily then was the western portion of the island. — Classe. As Oviticus had already (chap. xxxvii., line 41) a fleet of one hundred and forty-five vessels, classis must here mean "another fleet."

CHAPTER LVII.

4–6. Scribendumque consuli. "A letter must be written to the consul." — Primo quoque tempore. "At the very earliest opportunity." — Per commodum. "Consistently with the welfare."

7–13. Territi. Supply sunt. — Ad portam Collinam. In the Campus Sceleratus, on the right of the road. According to Plutarch this spot was inside the city. — Quos nunc. "One of those whom they now call," etc. Quos refers to scriba, not to pontificis. The term pontifex minor was of late introduction. When the real pontiffs began to neglect their official duties, and to leave the principal business to be done by their secretaries, it became customary to designate these latter by the words pontifices minores; they formed a collegium; their number is uncertain, but Cicero mentions three.

20–25. Fabius Pictor. The historian mentioned in chapter vii. — Suppliciis. Archaic for supplicationibus. — Fatalibus libris. These fatales libri seem to be different from the libri mentioned in line 18. The libri consulted by the decemvirs, in obedience to which Fabius went to Delphi, were the Sibylline books; in these, human sacrifices, especially of Greeks, are less likely to have been prescribed than in some Etruscan ritual. For the bloody human sacrifices of the Etruscans, compare bk. v., chap. xiv., and bk. vii., chap. xv. — Sub terra. Qualify locum. "Into a subterranean place." — Jam ante. In the Gallic war, ten years before. The rite was kept up as late as Pliny's time. (Plin., xxviii., 2, 3, § 12.)

27–34. Quos habebat scriptos. "Whom he had under his command, enrolled for the fleet." — Legione classicis. "The legion attached to the fleet;" not, as in Tacitus, "a legion of marines." — M. Junius Pera. The last dictator rei gerendae causa. — Ab annis, i. e., "over seventeen years of age."
37-41. Mittunt. "They send officers to receive," etc.—Ex formula. According to the list of the contingents furnished by the allied states. These contingents were raised and mustered by the allied states, and handed over to Roman generals.—Valentiae militare. To serve in the army was the duty of the Roman citizens, who had only to answer to their names when the lists were read. The slaves who now volunteered are called volones. The loss of men since the battle of the Ticinus has been estimated as 120,000 killed or taken prisoners.

CHAPTER LVIII.

10-18. Patres. "His forefathers."—Cedatur. Impersonal.—Felicitati et virtuti. "His good-fortune and courage."—Quingenos. Compare chap. iii., line 7.—Quo pepigerant. As pepigi (from pango) supplies the perfect of paciscor, it takes the construction of the latter verb, the ablative of price.—Quacunque. For another example of this use of quicumque as an indefinite pronoun without a relative signification, see bk. i., chap. iii., line 12, "quacunque matre genitus." In classical prose it is always joined with a verb, except in such phrases as quacunque ratione. See Zumpt, § 706.

21-24. Carthalo. There was another Carthaginian of high rank who bore this name, and commanded the cavalry. He is mentioned above, in chap. xv., line 30. Here the words nobilis Carthaginiensis are added to distinguish the ambassador from the general.—Minime Romani ingenii. For Cicero's opinion on this trick, see De Officiis, bk. iii., chap. xxxii., "Fraus astringit, non dissolvit perjurium."

CHAPTER LIX.

1, 2. Senatus datus. "An audience of the Senate was granted." Cf. bk. xxi., chap. xii., line 28.—Patres conscripti. For the sake of emphasis the vocative is placed first, instead of occupying its more usual position after a few introductory words.

5-16. Nisi nobis, etc. "Unless we have undue confidence in the strength of our case." Causa is distinguished from condicio. Bk. xxv., chap. xl.: "Dispar ut causa eorum ita condicio erat."—Negligendi. Equivalent to quia minus negligenti sunt.—Romanum militem. Collective. "Some Roman soldiers."—Tunc demum. "Then, and not till then."
19-27. Patres vestros. "Your predecessors." The Senate was already becoming a close corporation, and a seat in it was almost hereditary in some families.—Asperrimos illos. See Zumpt, § 744, for this use of illos. "So severe in respect to terms of peace."—At-qui. This introduces the minor proposition, "Those battles were not so bloody as that at Cannae." The conclusion, "Therefore we ought to be ransomed," is not expressed in terms.—Nec supersumus. "Nor do any of us survive except those for whose slaughter."—De nostris. "Of us, the prisoners." In opposition to illi quidem in line 30.—Ne in acie quidem refugerunt. A pregnant construction, equivalent to Qui ne in acie quidem fuerunt et inde fegerunt.—Præsidium. This fact is not mentioned in chapter I.

30-33. Vellum extulisse. This use of the infinitive perfect, instead of the infinitive present, to express the result of an action, after velle, melius esse, and the like, is not common in model prose.—Qui plerique. "Most of whom."—Prætulerint, gloriant sint. The perfect subjunctive here is equivalent to a hypothetical future.

39-53. Nec majore pretio. "At no higher price," that is, "just as cheaply."—Nam si. The number of heads and the price given can be compared, but not the persons, "for if I were to compare the persons," etc.—Nullo merito. "Without our having deserved it."—Vos. This word is bracketed as spurious by Weissenborn, who considers it to have arisen from the hos- in the following word hospitum.—Si videatis. An ideal conditional sentence. "If you were to see... the sight would move."—Intueri. The doors of the temple in which the Senate assembled remained open.—Vestibulo. See note on bk. ii., chap. xlviii., line 42.—Ita suspensi. "Are in such suspense."

55-64. Mitis. "If Hannibal, instead of being cruel and avaricious, were to be as liberal as Pyrrhus, and set us free unransomed."—Indigni ut redimeremus. The more usual construction after dignus or indignus is the relative qui.—Redeam. A rhetorical question in the subjunctive, implying a negative opinion on the part of the speaker. Observe the change from the plural to the singular, as in chap. 1., line 25.—Suum quisque. Each man may think as he likes; for my part, I consider death a less evil than the disgrace of being repulsed by you.—Ne a vobis... abeamus. A clause added to explain what he means by famæ periculum.—Neque enim. "For, of course, men will not believe."—Pretio. Dative case. "Spared the expense." "Begrudged the price."
CHAPTER LX.

3–7. Tendebant. Namely, the kindred of the prisoners who formed the turba.—Sibi. "To them," i. e., the suppliants.—Necessitas. "The pressure of necessity," as they feared to lose their protectors. —Sub mutis arbitris. "When all spectators had been made to withdraw," from the doors or elsewhere. Weissenborn, however, considers arbitri to mean the delegates from the captives.—Consuli. The manner in which the Senate was consulted was that the senators were separately asked to state their opinions: they could preface their votes by speeches.

8–13. De publico. "From the public treasury."—Prædibusque ac prædiis. "By sureties and their property." A common legal term. The law required the sureties to be citizens holding their property in full quiritarian ownership. Pres is a surety for one who owes money to the state, and his goods are styled prædia, which Gaius, ii., 61, defines as res obligatae populo. Hence prædibus caver e (Dig., x., 3, § 6) or prædibus prædictis cue (Cic. in Verr., ii. (1), 54, § 142) is "to give security."—T. Manlius Torquatus. He had been twice consul, in B.C. 235 and B.C. 224, and censor in B.C. 231. His first consulship is memorable from the fact that the temple of Janus was closed in that year for the first time since Numa's reign. In the year after the battle of Cannae he commanded with success in Sardinia against the Carthaginians and the revolted natives whom he had reduced in his first consulship. In B.C. 210 he refused the consulship, and died B.C. 202. The sternness and brutal severity of the family was proverbial. L. Manlius, dictator in B.C. 363, obtained the name Imperiosus from his tyranny and cruelty; and his son, T. Manlius, gave rise to the expression Manliana imperia, by the execution of his son for engaging, contrary to orders, in single combat with a Latin, before the great battle (B.C. 340) near Mt. Vesuvius which established the supremacy of Rome.—Priscæ severitatis. The descriptive genitive is generally subjoined to an indefinite appellative noun; and the omission here of some word like vir is quite exceptional. See Madvig, § 287, Obs. 3; Zumpt, § 426.—Interrogatus sententiam. "Having been asked for his opinion."

17–38. Quid enim aliud. For the ellipse of some part of fucere in phrases like the present, equivalent to "merely," see Zumpt, § 771, and Madvig, § 479, d, Obs. 5.—Prefere. Supply se. The clause is dependent on æquum censuerint.—Cujusque. "Of each of the combatants."—P. Sempronius. See the account in chap. 1, line 20. Et ipsis—that is, as well as the Romans.—Possent. A general statement true for all time, as the words per confirmatos compared with ple risque regressis show.—Monere adhortari. An asyndeton as in bk.
xxi., chap. x., line 8, "monuisse prædixisse."—Pervenire posse. Infinitive after word of saying implied in adhortari.

39–44. P. Decius. The story is told in bk. vii., chap. xxxiv. He volunteered to seize a hill in front, and divert the attack of the enemy till the army could escape. Cato tells the story, but calls the tribune Q. Caecidius.—Duceret. The potential of the past.—Vos. "You, the captives." Manlius speaks here as if they were before him.

54–62. Deiniuti capite. The capitis deiniutio maxima, which is further described by the following words, abalienati jure civium, involved loss of citizenship and freedom.—Non audistis. "You did not listen to."—Quam ego ignaviam. The conduct which he stigmatizes as cowardice merely is rather treason.—Conati sunt. Here nearly equivalent to the imperfect of endeavor. "They were for attempting."—Strictis gladiis. Compare chap. l., line 34.—Inertes. Accusative case.

67–75. Sexcenti. The party from the smaller camp.—Qui auderent. "To dare."—Duarum legiunum. A little over eight thousand men. —Dixerint. Supply se.—Nisi quis. "Unless one can believe them to have been loyal who," etc.—Aut non invidere. The idea is, they showed themselves devoid of all soldier-like loyalty when they opposed their comrades; they will for the future exhibit the same want of loyalty from envy and shame.

80–91. Ad erumpendum. From these words down to victi sunt Manlius is evidently giving some supposed reply of a defender of the prisoners and their conduct; Weissenborn, therefore, after Wex, inserts in his text before ad the words At enim, the usual formula with which a speaker introduces the supposed arguments of an opponent. —Vallum armis. The latter word is a conjecture of Gronovius for the manuscript reading arma. If we retain arma, then obsessi is for obsessi sunt, and we must supply tutata sunt with arma.—Se ipsi. See Zumpt, § 696.—Orto sole. This is the rebutter to the supposed reply. —Vobis. Ethical dative.—Decuerat. Compare chap. xxii., line 62.—Et vos redimam. A rhetorical question implying a negative opinion on the part of the speaker.—Compare the speech here assigned to Manlius with Horace, iii., ode 5, 12. The similarity is too great to be accidental, and Livy's display of rhetoric, like Horace's ode, may have been intended to influence opinion about the recovery of the soldiers of Crassus and Antony, who had been so long the prisoners of the Parthians. If this supposition is well founded, the date of this book cannot be later than B.C. 20, when the prisoners were restored.
CHAPTER LXI.

1-15. Postquam dixit. “After Manlius had spoken.”—Jam inde antiquitus. Compare bk. i., chap. ii., line 11, “Jam inde ab initio.”—Qua. “By paying which.”—Armandos. “And furnishing them with arms.” The citizens supplied their own weapons.—Non redimi. Compare bk. ii., chap. v., line 1, “reddi conservant;” but in this chapter, line 27, we have also “censisse redimendos.”—Fletibus, questibus. An asyndeton. Compare bk. xxxi., chap. xxviii., line 5, “naustarum militem.”—Prosecti sunt. Supply a subject, “crowds,” “the people.”—Quod fallaci reditu exsolvisset. If fallaci had not been introduced, the subjunctive would be the ordinary subjunctive of oratio obliqua; as the sentence stands we may compare it with bk. vi., chap. ii., “Quod . . . crederent;” and Cic., Off., i., 18, “Rediit paullo post quod se oblitum nescio quid diceret.” See Madvig, § 357, a, Obs. 2.

20-37. Decem primos. “Ten of high rank;” after the analogy of the decem primi in the senates of the colonies and municipalities. Cic., De Off., iii., 18, calls them nobiissimi.—Ita admittos ne. “Admitted on condition that an audience of the Senate should not be granted.”—Cognato. Probably the L. Scribonius mentioned in bk. xxiii., chap. xxi.—Relatum. This is the first instance of a relatio by a tribunal of the people.—Novos . . . veteres. “The later . . . the earlier.”—Ex itinere. “After having begun their journey.”—Paucis sententiis. “By a majority of few votes.” By a small majority.—Notis. This is the technical word for a condemnation pronounced by the censor. Compare bk. xxxix., chap. xlii., “Ut censores motis e senatu adscriberent notas.” The ignominia is the result of the nota. Cicero writes omnibus ignominii notatos, an expression less forcible than that here employed by Livy.—Publico. “Public places.”—Discrepare. Used impersonally. Compare bk. xxxviii., chap. lvi., “Inter scriptores rerum discrepat.”—Quid veri sit. Livy, in bk. xxiv., chap. xviii., adopts the latter version, which, according to Cicero (De Off., iii., 18), was given by Acilius, a contemporary of Cato the Censor, who wrote a history of the Punic wars in Greek.

40-55. Est quod fides. The MSS. are here defective, and these words are supplied by conjecture. Drakenborch has “est quod qui.”—Atellani, Calatini. The defection of Capua, strangely enough, is not mentioned here, but deferred till the next book, although it was the revolt of Capua which drew with it its dependent or allied towns Atella and Calatia.—Pentros. Their chief town was Bovianum.—Brutii omnes. Except the towns of Petelia and Consentia.—Uxentini. On the east of the gulf of Tarentum.—Galli. In bk. xxi., chap. lv., line 15, we are told that at the time of the battle on the Trebia all the Gauls except the Cenomani had revolted.—Roman adventum.
The verbal substantive here takes the construction of the verb. So domum reditio, Romam reditus, etc.—Omnibus ordinibus. This includes, of course, the Senate, who had ordered the battle.—Ductor. "General."—Supplicii. Hanno, who surrendered Messane B.C. 264, Hanno, who was defeated off the Ægates B.C. 241, and Hasdrubal, who was defeated by Metellus B.C. 250, were put to death by crucifixion on their return to Carthage.

B B 2
GEOGRAPHICAL INDEX.

Aborigines. A name given to the first inhabitants of Latium. (Gr. Ἀβοριγίες.)

Alcydes Insulae. Three small islands off the west coast of Sicily, near Lilybœum. Near them the consul Catalus Lutatius defeated the Carthaginian fleet, 241 B.C., and ended the First Punic War.

Aequi. A people of northeastern Latium.

Aequicoli. A tribe of the Aequi, more to the north in the Sabine territory.

Africa. In an extended sense, Africa; in a narrower sense, Carthage and her proper territory.

Alba Longa. The legendary mother city of Rome, in Latium, southeast of Rome.

Albula. The old name of the Tiber.

Algidae. A range of hills in Latium; part of the same group as the Alban mount.

Allia. A small river, eleven miles north of Rome, flowing through a plain near Crustumerium. Here the Gauls defeated the Romans, B.C. 388.

Allife. On the river Vulturnus, in Samnium.

Allobroges (Allobroges). A Gallic tribe between the Rhone and the Isère, in Gallia Narbonensis.

Amittenum. A very ancient Sabine town, the birthplace of the historian Sallust.

Anio (genitive, Antens). This well-known tributary of the Tiber, rising in the Apennines, forms the division between southern Samnium and Latium. It joins the Tiber about three miles from Rome. It is celebrated for its beautiful scenery and the cataract at Tibur (Tivoli).

Antennae. A town of the Sabines, at the junction of the Anio.

Antium. A Latin coast town, south of Rome.

Apola. A town of Latium.

Apulia. A country of southeastern Italy, between the Apennines and the Adriatic, bounded on the north by the Frentani, on the south by Lucania and Calabria, on the west by Samnium, and on the east by the sea.

Arbocata. The chief town of the Vaccæi, a tribe in Hispania Tarraconensis.

Ardea. The capital of the Rutuli, six leagues south of Rome.

Argiletum. A part of Rome between the Circus Maximus and Mount Aventine. It is derived from argilla, "clay," hence is equivalent to the Potter's Field, and the Ceramicus in Athens.

Aricia. A town in Latium, at the foot of the Alban Mount, on the Appian way.

Ariminum. A coast town of Umbria, where the Flaminian road from Rome ended and the Æmilian way to Placentia began.

Arpi. An Apulian town, called in earlier times Argyripa, and supposed to have been founded by Diomedes of Argos.

Arretium. A city of Etruria.

Atanaugrum. The capital of the Ilergetes, near Ilerda.

Atella. A town of the Oscini, in Campania, near Aversa.

Aupidus. A rapid river in Apulia.

Aurunci. This is another form of the name Ausones, given (perhaps by the Greeks) to the inhabitants of middle and southern Italy.
Avsedani. A nation of northeastern Spain.
Aventinus. The highest of the seven hills of Rome; it extends from the Palatine to the Caelian Hill. It was first inclosed by King Ancus.

Balearic or Balearic. (1.) In the plural, feminine gender, the Balearic Isles, off the east coast of Spain, now Majorca and Minorca. In the latter was founded by Hannibal’s brother the town called after him Portus Magonis, now Port Mahon. (2.) In the plural, masculine gender, the inhabitants of these Isles, famed for their skill in slinging.

Barrusiti. A Spanish tribe near Tlerda.

Benedictum. A town of the Hirpini, in Samnium, originally (from its unhealthiness) called Maleventum. It became a Roman colony B.C. 268.

Beii. A tribe of Cisalpine Gaul, between the Po and the Apennines.

Boionium. The chief town of the Pentri, in Samnium.

Brundisium. A town and harbor in Calabria, through which passed the chief traffic to and from Greece.

Bruttii. The inhabitants of Bruttium, in the south end of Italy.
